The germ-killing balsamic vapor mixes with the breath, descends through the throat, down the bronchial tubes, and finally reaches the deepest air cells in the lungs. All parts are soothed with rich, pure, medicinal essences, whereas with a syrup the affected parts could not be reached, and harm would result through benumbing the stomach with drugs.

"I have been a chronic sufferer from Catarrh in the nose and throat for over eight years. I think I have spent four hundred dollars trying to get relief. I have spent but six dollars on Catarrhozone, and have been completely cured, and, in fact, have been well for some time. Catarrhozone is the only medicine I have been able to find that would not only give temporary relief, but will always cure permanently.

Yours sincerely,

(Signed) WILLIAM RAGAN,
Brockville, Ont."

For absolute, permanent cure use Catarrhozone. Two months' outfit costs $1.00; smaller size, 50c., at all dealers, or the Catarrhozone Company, Buffalo, N. Y., and Kingston, Canada.

MILK YOU CANNOT SPILL

The people of Siberia often buy their milk frozen, and for convenience it is allowed to freeze about a stick, which forms a handle to carry it by.

The milkman leaves one chunk or two, as the case may be, at the homes of his customers. The children of Irkutsk, instead of crying for a drink of milk, cry for a bite of milk. The people in winter-time do not say, "Be careful not to spill the milk," but "Be careful not to break the milk." Broken milk is better than spilled milk, though, because there is an opportunity to save the pieces.

A quart of frozen milk on a stick is a very formidable weapon in the hand of an angry man or boy, as it is possible to knock a person down with it. Irkutsk people hang their milk on hooks instead of putting it in pans, though, of course, when warm spring weather comes, pans and pails are used, as the milk begins to melt.—Answers.

THE HEAD OF THE HOUSE

There is a man who fancies he is the head of his house. This particular [illegible] small children and it pleases him to discourse a great deal on the training of children. A few days ago he had friends visiting him. His two little sons began to play about noisily. It is one of his theories that children should obey implicitly. He wanted his friends to see how he carried it out in the training of his own children.

"Johnny," he said, sternly, "stop that noise instantly."

Johnny looked up in surprise, then grinned a little.

"Oh, Freddy," he said to his brother, as they went on with the noise, "just hear papa trying to talk like mamma."

Caught a Big Salmon

The first catch on the Lake at Summerland, B.C., was an eight and a half pound salmon, which all the fishermen agreed was a fine indication of a good fishing season.

Once an Orphan

The newly-elected Governor of Hull Workhouse was brought up as an orphan boy in the same institution.

THE CHEERFUL VIEW

Solemn Man:—"Do you hear that clock ticking? Do you know what it is ever bringing nearer?"

Cheerful Man:—"Yes; pay-day."

FATE'S LITTLE JESTS

He was a happy-go-lucky man, and, according to his friends, seldom allowed his debts to weight heavily on his conscience.

Yet one day he seemed serious and thoughtful, and talked like it.

"You know," he said, ponderously, "there are times in my life when I feel that Fate is indeed ironical."

"Do you refer to any particular occasion?" asked the longest-suffering creditor, who was still living in hope.

"Yes—one of them came last week," explained the man who made money fly. "I was down at the seaside, and hadn't a cent in cash. But I had a cheque for $50, which the bank wouldn't cash till I proved my identity. And the only person in the place who knew me well enough for that was a man to whom I owed $75."

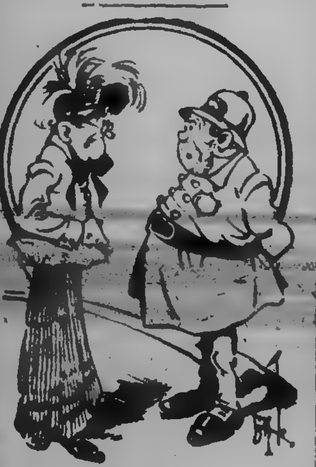
GRIT AND BACKBONE

The Rev. Charles H. Spurgeon's keen wit was always based on sterling common-sense. One day he remarked to one of his sons:—

"Can you tell me the reason why the lions didn't eat Daniel?"

"No, sir. Why was it?"

"Because the most of it was backbone, and the rest was grit."



HE KNEW

Lady:—"Did you notice the number on the automobile that just passed?"

Officer:—"I did. There was one man on the front seat and two on the back seat."

THE ASPIRING CHAUFFEUR

Chug, chug! Plonk, plonk! Choo, choo!

The motor-car dashed along the road at a tremendous speed, missed a woman by a split hair's-breadth, bumped over her less fortunate dog, and came to an abrupt halt.

"Dear me!" said the chauffeur, alighting.

The woman said more than "Dear me!" In fact, what she didn't say isn't worth printing.

"Can I—er—replace your dog?" suggested the chauffeur, getting in a word edgewise at about 8.46.

For a brief moment the woman regarded his be-goggled features. Then she retorted freesingly:

"You flatter yourself!"

A COMMON COMPLAINT

"What's the matter with you?" asked the Army doctor.

The recruit, who had been on the sick list ever since he had enlisted, shook his head sorrowfully.

"I dunno," he replied.

"You look well enough," commented the doctor. "How's the appetite?"

"I'd match an elephant at meals," answered the recruit. "It ain't that kind of illness, sir."

"Then I'm hanged if I know what kind it is!" exclaimed the Army medico. "How does it affect you?"

"Well, I eats well, and I drinks well, and I sleeps well," replied Thomas Atkins, rubbing his nose thoughtfully; "but directly I hear the word 'work,' I come all of a tremble!"

QUITE IMPOSSIBLE

"You claim to be a great clairvoyant?" said the sad-faced man, as he entered the thought-readers' rooms. "They say you can tell the past, present, and future. Nothing is hidden from you."

"It is true," answered the medium. "For two dollars I will tell you—"

"I'll give you ten dollars if you can tell me one secret of the past," interrupted the sad-eyed one quickly, and put the money promptly on the counter. "What was it that my wife told me to bring home for supper to night?"

And the thought-reader shook her head sadly, and handed back the money, but not very cheerfully, as the advertisement promised.

NOT CAUGHT NAPPING

He came from the country, but he was not green—not by any means. Had a confidence-man tried his tricks on him, there would have been serious trouble.

Nor was he taking any risks at the hotel. London might be a smart place, but they wouldn't catch him napping.

In the early hours of the morning the plaintive voice of the "boots" sounded outside his door.

"What is it?" asked William, prepared to do battle with his wits.

"Please, sir," came the answer, "you haven't put your boots outside, sir."

"No, you bet I haven't!" responded the wily William. "They're under my pillow, and there they're going to stay. I know a bit too much for the likes of you! Good-bye."

MEN AND WOMEN, ODD CONTRAST

A Writer Who Dilates on "The Curious Contrast of Men and the Modesty of Women"

If there is one sin from which the average man considers himself free, it is the sin of vanity. Vanity, he firmly believes, is the prerogative of women. Women are vain, dear creatures, he will tell his wife or lover while he fondly pinches her cheek, says Answers.

The wife or lover is generally too wise to correct him, but there never was a woman yet who did not wonder at the marvellous vanity of men.

As a matter of fact, there is scarcely any difference between men and children in this respect. A child with a new pair of shoes will not rest content until everybody in the house has gone into raptures over both shoes and wearer, separately and together. And a man's method of attracting notice to his splendor are—to women—hardly less simple.

For Those She Loves

Women, on the contrary, are singularly free from vanity. You laugh and point to my lady's mirrors, and her habit of looking in them at every possible moment? My dear young man, you do not understand. A woman will take infinite pains to dress herself to please somebody she loves—although he seldom notices it—or to annoy somebody she hates. If she pleases the loved one she is in the seventh heaven, as she certainly is if she annoys the other woman. But she never admires herself in the way that a young man admires his invisible moustache.

Men, too, are free from a terrifying danger which hangs over a woman from the age of fourteen to the age of ninety or so—the criticism of other women. How terrifying this may be men can seldom understand.

A man may wear a battered straw hat for ever and ever, and go about in shabby trousers on Sundays, and his friends will not think it worth while to notice; whereas a woman dare not have a button out of place without all the ladies in the district noticing it.

Hence the agony of mind that a woman suffers if she thinks her back hair is coming down is not at all due to vanity. And hence the mirrors which thoughtful shopkeepers provide so abundantly.

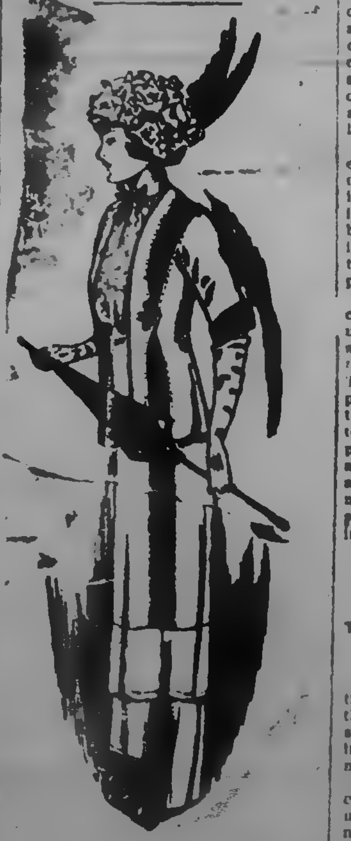
The Lady-Killing Youth

Even when you come to pretty girls, who might very well be excused for having their heads turned, there is no approach to the vanity of the lady-killing youth. A pretty girl takes her prettiness as a gift from the fairies, to be tended as the gardener tends a beautiful plant. It is her duty, a necessity to her self-respect, to look nice.

Contrast her with the average handsome man. Here you have vanity so [illegible]. To his lady friends the handsome boy invariably adopts a sorry-my-dear-you-love-me-but-I-can't-help-it-makes a sensible girl [illegible] you-know tone of voice, which at first makes a sensible girl want to slap him, then amuses her, and then makes her yawn.

But he never changes. He is the same year after year; and though he considers himself such a superior being, he is always as anxious to attract the attention of washerwomen as that of duchesses.

So, mothers, pray that your babies will lose their beauty when they become men. A woman will carry her beauty as it should be carried, neither scorning it nor worshipping it. The handsome man loses his head early in life, and never finds it again.



SERGE AND SILK COAT SUIT

A few wise designers have ventured to prophesy a vogue for green and blue in the wake of the flood of red which has rushed upon us this season, and some lovely models have been made up in these combined shades. Take for example this suit. The design is exceedingly chic and the material is a diagonal serge in the new king's blue. Inset pieces in skirt and coat are green taffeta. The idea of inset pieces of taffeta is new and effective, and may be copied in self-tone silk with equally good results.

Sanford Lindsay, of Norwood was yesterday assessed $2 for being drunk William Armstrong also paid $2, for the same offence.

During the past fiscal year, the Province of Ontario granted the public schools of the city $802.50, and $122.50 to the Separate schools.

The Post Office clock has once more resumed business! It ran all day yesterday without stopping one minute for a rest.

FOUGHT WITH WILD DOGS

Nurse Who Ministered to Sick and Wounded in Two Continents

Soldiers have lost a valuable friend in Mrs. Janet Helen King (Sister Helen), who has just died in England.

On two continents Sister Janet had tenderly cared for sick and wounded soldiers. When only eighteen she entered the Protestant Deaconesses' Institution to be trained as a nurse for the sick and wounded in war, and was one of a party of nine sent out to assist in nursing the troops engaged in the war between Russia and Turkey.

Snow lay deep on the ground, the party lost its way, and the night was passed in the open carts, bitter cold and the howling of wolves effectively preventing sleep. Arriving at Vardin they found their services sorely needed, and for months the Sisters worked night and day.

To Sister Janet's care were allotted some two hundred patients who lay in huts scattered here and there amongst the hills. Daily as she trudged through the snow from hut to hut on her mission of mercy she was exposed to attacks from wild dogs which infested Bulgaria. More than once these brutes dragged her to the ground, but her stick and dagger protected her until her cries brought assistance. At the close of the war she received for her services the Imperial Order of the Red Cross of Russia.

She went out, too, to the Zulu War, and at Utrecht 3,200 sick and wounded passed through her hands. There she was personally thanked by Sir Garnet Wolseley. She was awarded the medal for the war, and received the Decoration of the Royal Red Cross from the Queen for "the special devotion and competency displayed in nursing duties with Her Majesty's troops."

FOR VALOR

Various Methods by Which Nations Reward Great Bravery

As is well known, Britain decorates her soldiers with the Victoria Cross for conspicuous acts of bravery on the field of battle.

But most other countries have similar rewards for valor.

France confers her distinctive badges in the fairly familiar form of the Legion of Honor.

Germany is proud of her Iron Cross; while Austria confers her Ancient Order of Maria Theresa on her heroes. Russia distributes her Cross of St. Vladimir sparingly to her gallant soldiers.

Denmark has one of the most illustrious orders of chivalry, the Order of the Elephant, which ranks as high as our own Order of the Garter.

Sweden has her Noble Order of the Seraph, founded in 1220. This order is limited to twenty-three natives and eight foreigners.

Spain is justly proud of her Order of the Golden Fleece, which has ever [illegible] has always been most sparingly bestowed.

Italy decorates her most heroic warriors with her military Medal of Merit.

Portugal has the Tower and Sword, a very old order.

Sardinia has a medal for distinguished conduct on the field of battle, and a special military decoration besides for deeds of outstanding courage.

REFRIGERATOR WITHOUT ICE

How to Make a "Cooler" for Summer Use

A cooler can be made out of any box that has for its sides slats instead of solid boards. A peach crate makes a very satisfactory one. The box once chosen, all that is needed in the way of construction is to add as many shelves inside as desired, and a door on hinges. Then cover the door, sides and back with burlap or some similar material.

On the top place a pan, preferably enamel, and from this pan hang wicks made of strips of flannel four or five inches in width. These wicks should have one end resting on the inside bottom of the pan, and the other hanging over the edge of the crate and touching the burlap. Then fill the pan with water.

The cooler should be placed in a cool place, where the wind can blow upon it. The wicks absorb the water and distribute it through the mesh of the burlap by capillary attraction. The wind causes the moisture to evaporate, and the evaporation reduces the temperature inside the refrigerator. A writer in The Youth's Companion, in describing such a cooler, asserts that it will keep butter hard and firm on the warmest days in summer. If this be true, as it probably is, surely the idea is one well worth trying.

HOW GLASS-MAKING BEGAN

The Phoenicians and Egyptians the Most Renowned Glass Makers

Glass-making dates from the earliest times, and originated, no doubt, with the Egyptians, as the oldest-known specimens found are those discovered in the tombs of Egypt, and the earliest mention dates back to 3,300 B.C.

Second to the Egyptians, the ancient people most renowned for the manufacture of glass were the Phoenicians.

The legend of that people concerning the discovery of the art is consistently retold. Some Phoenician traders, returning to their home in a ship laden with soda, were compelled to land on a sandy tract on the Syrian coast.

They built a fire on the sand to prepare their supper, and placed their cooking pots on a lump of soda. The sand and the soda were both melted by the heat of the fire, and, flowing together, formed a substance which, although they knew it not, the sailors recognized as valuable. Such, says tradition, is the origin of one of our most useful commodities.

More Immigrants for Peterborough.

Immigration Officer Howson has had to dispose of still another lot of English immigrants. They were part of a lot of five hundred who went mostly to parts in British Columbia, and Western Canada generally. This last batch came over on the steamship Empress of Britain. The SS. Royal Edward sails to-day from Liverpool with a large number of emigrants, many of whom will stop at Peterborough.

RUGBY IN RHODESIA

The Game Enthusiastically Played Under Serious Difficulties.

The history of Rhodesia may be said [illegible] to have begun in October, [illegible] British South African [illegible]d their first charter from the [illegible] Government. Yet it is remarkable how soon the sporting instinct, existent in every British community, manifested itself in practical form, for the Rugby Union Board was founded in 1895, only six years after the occupation of the country. The early pioneers must have been real Rugby enthusiastics, too, for the climatic conditions are not those usually associated with the game, while the mere sight of a Rhodesian football ground is often enough for the new arrival from home. Imagine a brown, dusty expanse of ground, unrelieved by a singe blade of grass, the similarity of which to a London pavement is but thinly disguised by a layer of gravelly sand. During the course of a game the players are frequently hidden in a dense cloud of dust, which is gently wafted into the eyes of the spectators on a windy day. The unfortunate half-back, operating behind the scrim, is often unable to see the ball coming out of the back row of the forwards; and as it is his habit to keep his head bent down close to the ground to get a better sight of the ball, his throat and eyes soon become full of sandy dust. The dust, however, is not without its compensations, for the players' thirst is worth a fortune.

The surface of the ground is so hard that the ball bounces in a most unexpected and astonishing fashion even when heeled out of the scrum. To the player accustomed to the green grass of the old country the ball seems like an elusive eel. "Never let the ball bounce" is a well-known axiom in Rugby football; in Rhodesia it is a sine qua non. After effecting an ordinary tackle, the player usually leaves the major part of his cuticle on the field, receiving in return a generous supply of gritty sand; and, as the soil is full of poison, great care has to be taken even with a scratch which one would ignore at home. Then a winter's afternoon out here is usually associated with brilliant sunshine and a cloudless sky. This makes it doubly difficult to watch the flight of the ball.

In spite of these climatic and local disadvantages, Rhodesian Rugby, tho still in its infancy, has flourished to a remarkable degree. The players themselves seem to have been benefited rather than handicapped by the hard grounds, as they suit themselves to the conditions and play a hard, robust game to show their indifference to such minor drawbacks.

A BRAINY PITCHER

Eddie Plank Knows Something of Hurling the Horsehide

"Eddie Plank pitched the greatest game in the recent world's series between the Giants and Athletics that this game of baseball has ever known." This declaration coming from Clark Griffith, the Washington manager, can be given a deal of value, for Griffith bears a reputation of having been one of the brainiest pitchers in the country and knows something of the art of hurling the horsehide. Griff goes on to explain that he means that Plank pitched the most finished game, taking in all the technicalities and the like of the pitching box, and it is certainly a flattering compliment to pay to the Athletics' veteran left-hander.

"Plank really worked to perfection," continued Griffith. "He had terrific speed and his curves broke to a nicety. His side arm delivery was very baffling and save for an error of the outfield the veteran would have scored a shut out. I have seen games in which pitchers struck out more men and did more sensational pitching stunts, but for some wonderful pitching, which took advantage of the opposition at every turn of the road, Plank carried off the honors."

"Plank had the Giants bewildered at all times. They did not seem to know where the ball was coming and their efforts with the stick were woefully weak. I have seen the Giants in action, too, and know that when a pitcher gets them in that condition he was doing some little twirling."

SNOW SNAKES WILL WRIGGLE.

F. O. Loft, a well-known Onondaga has secured some snow snakes from the Indian reservation in Brant county, and will present one to the Provincial Museum. The snow snake is a peculiarly constructed wooden implement, which is thrown somewhat after the manner of a javelin. It is thrust along the snow, and an expert manipulator can send it three hundred feet and more. It resembles a snake in action. The Cayugas and Onondagas have great sport with the snakes, and are particularly expert in use.

The Crows Have Arrived.

Yesterday a gentleman in the vicinity of the Barnardo Home, was surprised to hear the almost forgotten caw, caw, caw, of crows. He counted seven crows to the east of the Margaret Cox Home and four to the west. While these sharp eyed dusky plumed birds are not particularly beloved, their appearance, in such numbers, is an indication that spring is coming.

CLERGYMAN'S HOME BURNT THRO' SPITE

Fort Worth, Texas, March 6.—The mystery of the alleged war against the Rev. J. Frank Norris stirred the State of Texas Saturday when his home was partly burned in an apparently incendiary fire, which imprisoned himself, his wife, and his two children on an upper floor, in the early morning hours They were rescued with difficulty.

Norris, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Fort Worth, has taken an active share in the crusade which drove race track gambling out of Texas a few years ago. Since then Sunday observance violations have been his particular targets.

REFUSED LEAD OF SIR WILFRID

Ottawa, March 6.—The Liberal opposition to the Manitoba boundaries bill, which is expected to come up in the House this afternoon for a second reading, is petering out. Sir Wilfrid Laurier himself was keenly anxious to fight the measure to the last ditch, as he has always blocked giving Manitoba fair play. He was in favor of moving a six months' hoist, on the ground that the other Provinces would have to be appealed to first before new financial terms will be granted. He hoped by doing this to keep his own followers together and to gain the support of the Nationalists without committing himself to the principle of Separate Schools.

Ontario Liberals Against Schools.

However, Sir Wilfrid found when a Liberal caucus was called, that it was impossible to unite his party on any one policy. The majority, or at least a large section, admitted that the arrangement was perfectly fair. The boundaries are the same as Sir Wilfrid himself drew up in 1908, while the Ontario Liberals admit that the arrangement with Ontario is very satisfactory. The French Liberals wanted to move an amendment for a Separate School clause, but the Ontario Liberals strongly objected. The Liberal party indeed found itself so hopelessly divided that it will probably not move an amendment at all to the bill, but will devote itself to general criticism of the financial terms. To help out Mr. Rowell, a protest will be put up in regard to the arrangement with Ontario, although Ontario Liberals admit it will be simply a perfunctory objection.

Nationalist Amendment.

The French Liberals will wait to see what the Nationalist bolters, who will not number more than ten at the outside, will do before taking action. If the Nationalists move an amendment for separate schools then a number of them will support it. One thing it is expected will result from the present agitation and that is a complete severance between Bourassa and Monk and probably the break-up of the Nationalist party.

To Form a Local Branch.

Lady relatives and friends of the officers, non-coms, and men of the various local troops, will meet, at 3.30 p.m. on next Friday in the Armouries, to consider the advisability of the formation of a military chapter of the Daughters of the Empire. A member of the Council of Toronto will be in the city to give an address.

GRADE CATTLE FOR FARMERS

Better Keep Hands Off the "Pure Breds," which is a Specialized Business

Does the breeding and feeding of a pure-bred dairy herd pay? This each man must consider according to his location, the capital that he has to invest and his general knowledge and understanding of the business.

The pure-bred business is a specialized business. It requires a watchful care, thorough knowledge of the heredity of the cattle in your herd, constant study in breeding, a better understanding of the wants of the community in which you are located and plenty of money to invest in new blood at any time the demands of the herd call for it.

Records must be kept, and a daily record of each item be entered; in fact, I might say you must ever be ready with pencil and paper to mark down dates of service, birth, etc. All this must be kept right, so that if called upon you can swear to your record. Even an application for registry papers amounts to an oath.

You must keep posted on the activities of your breeders' association. You must always be ready with a pen, ink, and paper, and always cheerfully reply to all inquiring letters and postal cards received, and at times this alone will prove quite burdensome to the man on the farm.

Your sires must always be selected with the greatest care and judgment, and even then breeding requirements may force you to invest in a better one than you now own, although you may be compelled to dispose of your present high-priced sire for much less than he cost you. This alone would strongly test the nerve of many a successful farmer. Then again it is an undoubted fact that all pure-bred animals are more susceptible to disease than the more hardy grades that originated from the same breed; this renders them a more hazardous investment than grades.

All of us, by a little self-searching, can tell whether or not we are strict truth-tellers or whether we are individually given to misrepresentation or evasion of the cold, straight facts. All I can say to you if you are of this class is "to keep your hands off" of the business of breeding pure bred cattle. If you make one mistake and go wrong, your occupation and business is ruined and you have a herd of cattle on your hands that no breeder with a reputation would dare to buy, even though he was satisfied that they were good individuals and worth the money you were asking for them. The discriminating buyer will study the breeder's pedigree fully as closely as he will that of the animal.

With grades, on the other hand, a man can start on a very little capital to lay the foundation for a successful business, and with the occasional purchase of a well-bred sire, he will be able by careful feeding and judicious selection to build up a good working herd of cows. By raising all of the best heifers that come from good cows and feeding them so that they will be large enough to come to profit in the dairy by the time they are twenty-six to thirty months of age, he may expand the business as time goes on. If he will watch all the details of the business and use good judgment in selecting his first breeding bull to correct the deformities and deficiencies that may exist in the cows, and not be constantly trying new combinations, he will have in a few generations as good cows for all practical purposes as the pure-breds from which the grades were derived.—W. M. K., in Grain Growers' Guide.

FEEDING GRAIN TO FOWLS

Better Give It to Them In Straw If Available

Whenever grain in the straw is available use it for fowl feeding. It is the best system of feeding of any I ever tried. It delights the fowls and keeps them in grand trim. It is a real boon to fowls in confinement, and those at liberty never tire of it. The nature of all fowls is to scratch and search for food, however small the particles. They seem to enjoy this more than having it shoved down their throats in handfuls. Gobbling all their food up in a few minutes to be succeeded by hours of idleness is not in harmony with their natural habits. This is apt to induce mischief. What else is it but idleness that encourages feather-eating, which is such an objectionable habit? Over-fatness is also a result when eggs are few. The busy hen is always the thrifty one, and all are kept industrious when corn can be picked from the straw. Give them a full furnished wisp in the morning and they will work at it all day. They will turn and re-turn it, and strive for the last pick. It is delightful to witness, and fills the egg-basket. No food is more healthy for fowls than oats, barley and wheat. When in well-harvested straw it is prime, and the fowls know it. They leave bucketfuls of food to go straw-scratching. Giving vacant straw to amuse them is a delusion they quickly detect; then they cease work, whereas, if they eat every particle of grain out of the straw every morning they will be at it all day as brisk as ever. Never throw it down in the wet or muck. Put it on a clean surface under cover. The vacant straw can be removed before it accumulates too much. It will pay all to buy a quantity of grain in the straw and store it for daily use.

It is poor economy to keep old hens or old roosters. Hens are at their best at three years old, and when kept longer are apt to give poor returns. Roosters should never be kept longer than two or three years.

Now that the Ontario Power Co. has their material on the ground at Lindsay for the transmission here between this city and Omemee, it is of interest to note that the company has advertised for tenders for construction of a Lindsay sub-station. This is to be located at the old Victoria Railway Junction in Lindsay. The line is completed to a point a short distance the other side of Omemee and will be completed to Lindsay in April.

HUNTING WILD BEASTS WITH A CAMERA

Adventures In Taking Cinematograph Pictures in the Jungle.

The business of hunting wild beasts with a camera is attended by as much excitement and rather more danger than hunting them with the usual weapons. Two Englishmen who make a business of getting cinematograph pictures of the denizens of the jungle have had much success and enough thrilling experiences to give them something to talk about for the balance of their days.

They are Cherry Kearton and his brother Richard. Cherry Kearton is reported to be the only man who has photographed lions while they were being shot, speared or lassoed. To a writer for the Evening Standard he gave this account of one of his hunting trips:—

"One of my most memorable trips was in quest of a tiger. I obtained an introduction to the Sultan of Johore and asked him if he would shoot a tiger at 15 yards while I took the photograph. He refused, saying I should certainly be killed. I was willing to risk my camera and myself, but he would not take part.

"I went along to Ceylon and explained my mission to the Maharajah of Mysore, who made out a traveling pass to facilitate my journey, and provided me with an elephant for the jungle. As time was pressing, I covered the first 60 miles with relays of horses, and the next day I was in a dense jungle. I sat 21 days on the elephant's back before I could get my tiger.

"There were marks of him to be seen, but the difficulty was to locate him. In the meantime I was hunting another very dangerous animal, the bison. The bison gave me eight days' hard work on the elephant's back. This statement may seem strange, but it was very awkward to push through the jungle, and at times I was swept off the elephant by overhanging branches. In a tropical climate this is very trying, and fatiguing, too.

"At the end of the eighth day I got my bison at from 15 to 20 yards. The trackers never went more than four yards without looking for a tree as a means of escape. They could tell by examining the blades of grass how long it had been since the animal had passed that way.

"While I was after the bison I got about 50 elephants around me. The game ranger who accompanied me was scared less they should charge the tame elephant, as they had done on previous occasions with fatal results.

"I was very disappointed at not being able to get the tiger, and I determined to prolong my stay in the hope that success would at last reward my efforts. I had been in the jungle 21 days without seeing the beast, when I reluctantly decided to commence my return journey. A quarter of a mile from the village I saw traces of a bullock having been dragged in the direction of a tunnel formed out of heavy plant and leaf growth.

"Jumping off my elephant, I found marks of the tiger as he had retreated backward, probably pulling the bullock by the nose. I crawled up the tunnel on my hands and knees with my revolver ready. It was very dark, and I had not gone far when I came upon part of the bullock's carcass freshly gnawed. Deeming it unsafe to penetrate further, I returned to the game ranger, who decided, as the beast was becoming a man-eater, that it should be destroyed.

"He obtained 300 men to act as drivers. I cut away the opening of the tunnel and waited developments behind a leafy screen. The tiger came toward me bellowing and grunting, and when he got opposite the screen he gave one of those fearful coughs which only the man who has been close to such a beast can appreciate. The tiger was 11 feet long, and was the biggest tiger the game ranger had ever seen. He told me he would not go through the same experience again for a thousand pounds, adding, 'I have done with this work.'

"The natives could not understand why I did not shoot the tiger. They expected to see bullets come out of the camera.

"It was decided to proceed to kill the beast and 15 men were selected to jump from behind the bushes and spear it. When the signal was given only three [illegible], and one of these was [illegible] by the tiger. I was up a tree about eight yards away, and I kept my eyes fixed on the beast.

"At last I shouted, and with another terrifying grunt he trotted off into the jungle. I covered the last 60 miles of my journey and took boat to England."

RACING IN GERMANY

It Has Appealed to the French in Late Years.

German racing has of late appealed to French owners, says a European correspondent, for the market in that country has been widely opened to French produce. The Prussian State Budget has just been voted, and contains a provision that every two years a first-class sire should be bought for the service of the State and private owners possessing a thorough bred stud. The price to be given for such a suitable sire is fixed at $75,000 and each year half of that amount will be handed over to the Government buyers. A further grant of $20,000 has been made for securing a good thoroughbred sire for the half-bred stud while another $15,000 has been placed at the disposal of the Royal Grafitz Stud for the purchase of a couple of brood mares. It is understood that this grant will be continuous, so that the different strains of racing blood may be continually renewed.

Now that the Ontario Government has established a prison farm, on which to keep the convicts "healthy and wise" if not wealthy, it is of some interest to note that the old State of Louisiana has followed suit. As may be seen in the appended clipping from a New Orlean's paper, that State goes even further in that move. The authorities have a similar farm but sell land and rent out provisions to work it. The extract says: "The most notable action taken by the Legislature to-day was the adoption by the lower house of the Hemphill resolution providing that after the State convict farms have been fully developed they shall be sold in small tracts, as a measure of encouraging immigration, and wild lands purchased on which the State's convicts will be placed at work."

TRINIDAD'S BUTTER TRADE

France Has a Large Percentage of the Trade

Trinidad imported $165,000 worth of butter last year, of which trade Canada furnishes less than 2.5 per cent., while France furnishes over [illegible] per cent. of the total trade. This is explained by the fact that years ago a French butter manufacturer took the trouble to find out the class of butter most suited for general trade in the tropics, and, what was most essential, the best package to put it in. Some time ago an attempt to compete was made from Canada, but it failed, solely for want of compliance with the conditions experienced had taught the French exporters. The firkins were made of inferior wood. They were insufficiently hooped, four iron hoops, against about [illegible] wood and iron, in the French [illegible] the butter melted and [illegible] a trade that should go to the [illegible], and that it would do if [illegible] manufacturers make it [illegible] to fall in with local requirements. It should not be omitted, however, that one or two brands of tinned Canadian butter are in very favorable demand, and are appreciated as being pure and good.

ALL GONE

The cashier of a certain firm had absconded, and the head clerk was decided upon as being the proper person to acquaint the head of the firm of the fact on his arrival.

There had been a dog-fight in the street, and a small crowd was just dispersing when the chief's carriage dashed up.

"What's that crowd after, Jorkins?" demanded the head of the firm.

The chief clerk thought he had got a chance of breaking the news, and he seized it.

"The vacancy, sir," he replied.

"Vacancy! What vacancy?"

"Cashier, sir."

"But we want no cashier, Jorkins."

"Beg pardon, sir; but we have a vacancy for one."

"Jorkins, are you mad?"

"No, sir. That is, sir, I don't know, sir. Fact is, sir, all the cash is gone, and—and—"

"Well?"

"The cashier's gone with it, sir."

Took Them for Siamese Twins.

There are two brothers, who live in this city, about 35 years of age, who are twins. They are as like to each other as two peas from the same pod. Yesterday afternoon they came together down George street. Their dress was in keeping with the similarity of their build and facial characteristics. A little girl living in Brock street, as she passed the two brothers, said, "Mother are those the Siamese twins?" This is an absolute fact!

Sleigh Upset and Horse Ran Away.

Yesterday morning as a lady and gentleman were driving up George street, at the corner of Smith street, the cutter runners caught in the street car tracks and the vehicle was overturned, throwing the occupants bodily on to the street. The horse dashed away for over a mile out the Mudlake road, scattering the robes, breaking the harness as well as damaging the cutter. The occupants of the cutter were not injured, although they suffered a rather severe shaking up.

"She," at the Princess.

The Princess Theatre certainly seems to be satisfying its thousands of patrons, if large attendance and good pictures are any proof. For Friday and Saturday Rider Haggart's great romance entitled "She" is show by two complete reels. Every one has read that work of mystery and adventure in the wilds of Africa. This great work has its foundation on or near the supposed ruins of King Solomon's mines. This is a splendid opportunity to view African scenery and also to witness, enacted in life, the wonderful story of "She."

Partisan Politicians Portrayed.

Yesterday a well known local business man was passing the George street grocery, managed by Mr. Fred Walker. On the display bench outside, was a fifteen pound salmon trout. That fish had an eye as big as a 25 cent piece, and like the eyes in an oil painting, its glazed dead look seemed to follow one viewing it. The local business man's attention was caught by that fishy eye. He remarked to a Times reporter walking with him, "the eye of that fish reminds one of the stony glare to be seen in the eyes of a local "partisan" politician."

Former Local Centenarian Dies.

A former resident of Fowler's Corners, Mr. John Stinson, who had many friends in the then town of Peterborough, and whose first home in Canada after emigrating from Ireland, was between the present city and Bridgenorth passed away recently in North Verulam. He had exceeded the three-score and ten limit by thirty years. In 1878 Mr. Stinson moved to Verulam having purchased what is now known as Brandeston and the adjoining property. Four sons and three daughters survive him. He was a life-long member of the Presbyterian church.

Principal Gordon Delayed.

Principal Gordon, of Queen's University, Kingston, who addressed the local Alumni Association here last Friday night, and who was booked to deliver an address on Saturday afternoon in Kingston, left for home that morning. It seems he had a very unpleasant experience on his home trip. The engine broke down some distance this side of Millbrook. The conductor had to walk to the village to get another engine. This caused a delay of two hours, the consequence being that Doctor Gordon did not reach the Limestone City until eight o'clock that night.

HEALTH AND BEAUTY ANSWERS

BY MRS. MAE MARTYN

Maiden: Your thin, straggly hair can be made to come in thick and fluffy, if you avoid alkali shampoos. The most beneficial thing for cleansing scalp and hair is plain canthrox, a teaspoonful of which dissolved in a cup of hot water is enough for a delightful shampoo. You will find canthrox removes every atom of dust and dandruff, and after rinsing, the hair will dry quickly and is easily managed. Use canthrox occasionally and your hair will regain its original tint and loveliness.

Puritan: You are right. Kardene is a remedy of grandmother's days, and is considered the best thing known as a blood-cleanser and body-builder. This old-fashioned tonic is made by dissolving a half cupful sugar in one-half pint alcohol, to which is added one ounce kardene and enough hot water to make a full quart. The dose is a tablespoonful before meals. A treatment with this tonic will quickly rid the system of impurities, restore your health and appetite and build you up.

Dot: You cannot change the color of your eyes, but you can make them bright and sparkling by using a simple eye-tonic, made by dissolving an ounce of crystos in a pint of cold water. Two or three drops of this should be put in each eye daily. The crystos eye-tonic is splendid for sore, aching or tired eyes and granulated lids, and its use frequently does away with the necessity of wearing glasses.

Mrs. Ben: (1) It is gratifying to know that the kardene tonic has done so much for you. (2) Stop using powder and try this simple lotion for the skin and I am sure you will be delighted: In a half-pint hot water dissolve four ounces spurmax, then add two teaspoonfuls glycerine. When this is cool apply sparingly to the face, neck and arms, rubbing lightly until dry. This spurmax lotion is splendid for freckles, and rough, oily skins, and using it removes all impurities. You will find the spurmax lotion lends a charm and softness to the complexion and is superior to powder, while it is invisible when on.

Lenore: Don't worry. You can quickly regain your normal weight and symmetrical figure without fasting or indulging in violent exercises, if you will get from your druggist four ounces parnotis and dissolve it in a pint-and-a-half hot water. When it cools take a tablespoonful before each meal. Continue this treatment till your weight is where you want it and you will find that the flesh is firm and the skin will not be wrinkled.

T. D.: A starved condition of the hair-roots causes the hair to grow dull, "stringy" and brittle, and unless a good tonic is employed, you cannot hope to have a fine head of hair. Make up and use this tonic and your hair will again take on its soft fluffiness and natural tint. Mix together one-half pint each alcohol and water, and to this add one ounce quinzoin. Massaging the scalp frequently with this tonic soon restores the healthy condition, and when this is done you will not be troubled with dandruff or excess oil. Constant using makes the hair grow in rich and abundant.

May: Your mother is right. Powders and cosmetics very often cause blackheads and other skin eruptions, and cause the skin to grow coarse and lifeless. A thoroughly dependable cream-jelly for correcting complexion faults can be made at little cost by stirring two teaspoonfuls glycerine into a half-pint cold water, then adding one ounce almozoin. Let remain until thoroughly dissolved, then apply freely to the face, neck and arms after removing the dust and grime. Massage this in well, and the skin will be soft and velvety. The daily use of this almozoin cream-jelly frees the skin of all impurities and lends a charming tint and youthfulness to the complexion.

Grace: You need have no fear about hairs returning after using the delatone paste. Any druggist can supply powdered delatone, and to remove hairs from face, or neck, make a paste with a little delatone and water. Apply this to offending hairs and in two or three minutes scrape off and wash the skin. This removes every trace of hair and leaves the skin white and firm. You will have to pay a dollar an ounce for the delatone, and it is worth it.

APSLEY.

So the City of Peterborough has woke up from its "Rip Van Winkle" sleep, and thinks it advisable to try and get the trade from the surrounding country by building a railroad. Well, it's not too late yet. Other cities have done that, years ago and are now reaping the benefits by greatly increased trade. It's fine back here to get one's mail tri-weekly and sometimes semi-weekly, and travellers enjoy sitting in an open stage from 9 a.m. until 9 or 9.30 p.m., especially in a cold driving snow storm.

Mr. Jas. McIlvena returned home after a week visiting friends in Peterborough and Warsaw, and enjoyed his trip.

Monday morning, the 4th, the thermometer registered 25 below. No sign of robins yet up here.

On account of the bad roads Ernie did not arrive in Apsley on time this trip, not getting in until noon the following day.

J. G. Hardill of Kinnear & Co., Mr. J. G. Hardill of Kinnear & Co., Mr. Sherewood for Hopwood & Co., paid their regular visit last week. They report heavy drifts from Buckhorn to the Burleigh road.

Miss Emma Tucker was visiting friends in Apsley last week on her return from Lakefield.

Miss Ella Brown was visiting at Miss Emma Tucker's home, Anstruther.

Mrs. J. R. Airriess and daughters are moving to Peterborough this week. They will be missed by many friends here and the best wishes of the community go with them for their prosperity and happiness.

Mr. and Mrs. Simon Windsor, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Lean, and John and Joseph Lean left Monday morning for Lakefield to attend the funeral of their brother Walter Lean, who died at Pt. Hope after a short illness of typhoid fever. The family has the deepest sympathy of the whole community in their loss. The funeral we understand, will be at Lakefield, under the auspices of The Chosen Friends, of which order the deceased was a member.

The roads are improving, with the aid of shovels and snow ploughs, and the village is more lively than it was a week ago, and as this is March we are living in hopes of some fine and warmer weather soon.

Lumbering operations are drawing to a close. Some of the camps have finished drawing and others will be about through in a week or so.

Some parties up here would like to know through the columns of the g.f.j. the French name for Apsley and the pronunciation of same, so we could get used to it in the event of a change in name being made.

Mr. and Mrs. Jas. McIlvena were the guests of Mrs. A Windsor, Sunday.

On account of the impassable state of the roads and the non-arrival of the Peterboro' brethren Wednesday night the meeting of the Wise Men was adjourned until more favorable weather, and besides the goat had escaped from Alex's. watchful care and was last seen going down the Jack's Lake road. A party is going out on snowshoes to hunt him up.

Alex. and Stan. were out for a joy ride the other day and on turning a corner turned the cutter also. No damage done, excepting Alex. ploughed up about a ton of snow, getting most of it inside his overcoat, before he got the horse under control.

Miss Constance Airriess had a very pleasant surprise the other evening when her schoolmates met and presented her with a handsome glass biscuit jar and the following address:

Miss Constance Airriess, Apsley:

Dear Constance, It is with regret that we learn that you are about to leave us in the near future. We will miss you in our school, but we feel that our loss is your gain. As a slight token of our regard for you we ask you to accept this little present, with our best wishes for success in your new home, and peace and joy in the great beyond.

VARICOSE VEINS CURED

Confined to His Home for Weeks.

"Heavy work, severe straining and evil habits in youth brought on Varicose Veins. When I worked hard the aching would become severe and I was often laid up for a week at a time. My family physician told me an operation was my only hope—but I dreaded it. I tried several specialists, but soon found out all they wanted was my money. I commenced to look upon all doctors as little better than rogues. One day my boss asked me why I was off work so much and I told him my condition. He advised me to consult Drs. Kennedy & Kennedy, as he had taken treatment from them himself and knew they were square and skillful. I wrote them and got THE NEW METHOD TREATMENT. My progress was somewhat slow and during the first month's treatment I was somewhat discouraged. However, I continued treatment for three months longer and I was rewarded with a complete cure. I could only earn $12 a week in a machine shop before treatment, now I am earning $21 and never loose a day. I wish all sufferers knew of your valuable treatment.

FORESTERS CONCERT FILLS GRAND OPERA

The Principles of Independent Order Foresters Was Fully Demonstrated and a Grand Bill of Entertainment Enjoyed

Last night the Grand Opera House was simply packed, jammed to its full capacity with one of the most intelligent audiences that the city has ever seen. The event was a concert given under the auspices of Court Chemong, No. 530, of the Independent Order of Foresters. Messrs. W. J. Wilson, Perth, Deputy Supreme Chief Ranger and R. Nimmo, Toronto, Deputy Supreme Chief Ranger, were in the city and did good work, not only in arranging for last night's entertainment, but in promoting the interests of the Foresters in general.

About eight o'clock, Mr. Turner, proprietor of the Opera House, had to turn the lights on in the "Gods," —that is in the top gallery. The rest of this large hall was crammed full.

Mayor Bradburn occupied the chair and introduced the program in a few well chosen words, descriptive of the splendid work the Foresters had done and are going to do. The program was of the highest class. It included such artists as Miss Maud Bigwood, soprano soloist, who received a hearty encore; Miss Lillian Dillon, pianist for the evening and a most pleasing contralto singer. Miss Dillon received a generous round of applause. The program also included Mr. Harvey Lloyd, comedian, whose clever songs and monologues brought tears of laughter from the audience. Mr. Geo. A. Mitchell, Superintendent of Field Work for the Order, gave a splendid address, descriptive of the good the I.O.F. does. The title of his address was "Benevolence," and the title was well chosen. The whole idea, or rather the main factor of the Orderjs being is "Benevolence." The speaker told of the Orphans' Home, maintained by the I.O.F. at Oakville. Here sixty children are sustained. The I.O.F. provides for the maintenance of six hundred and thirty-six children under its jurisdiction. Orphans not in the Home receive a grant from the Order, amounting to $5 a month until they are sixteen years of age. If a child's mother is alive, but the father dead, and the mother does not want her child sent to the home, the child is taken care of just the same. This is the kind of work and good the Independent Order of Foresters does. The speaker told of the sanitarium at Rainbow Lake, New York State, where one hundred and one members of the Order, who suffer from tuberculosis or other disease are cared for.

Mr. Geo. A. Mitchell of the Temple Building, Toronto took great interest in and assisted towards making last night's concert the great success it proved. The Foresters of Peterborough will look back to last night (to use an Hibernanism) as a Red Letter Day.

BOURASSA ET AL ARE NOW OUT IN THEIR WAR PAINT

Giant Demonstration Against Manitoba Boundaries Bill Being Promoted by Nationalists Leaders Says Montreal Report

Montreal, Mar. 7.—That a giant public demonstration against the Manitoba boundaries bill is in progress of organization by the Nationalists is reported to-day. While no definite details are given, reports emanating from Quebec are to the effect that the Bourassa-Lavergne camp show signs of activity in connection with the Keewatin school situation. Little of a definite nature has yet been stated by the Nationalist leaders as to the course they mean to pursue, but it is understood one feature of their program will be the holding of a big public demonstration against the Manitoba boundary bill and the position adopted by the French-Canadian portfolio holders at Ottawa.

QUIBBLING, SAYS LAVERGNE.

Armand Lavergne, when asked as to his opinion of the attitude of Messrs. Monk, Pelletier and Nantel, the reformed Nationalists in the Borden Cabinet, declared that they were quibbling in their arguments as to the 1875 Separate School legislation not having any effect in Keewatin. "It is easy to find a law when you want to keep a portfolio," he said.

BOURASSA DEEP IN LAW BOOKS

Mr. Bourassa is saying nothing. Callers at the Legislative building find him in the Opposition leader's office, surrounded on three sides by a three foot wall of volumes of the revised statutes of Canada. The familiar clay pipe is going full blast, and the little chief is in the chase after every piece of legislation that ever did or could affect the Western school question.

"I have nothing to say yet," he said, "Perhaps to-morrow." This is the extent of his communicativeness. But rumors are as busy as the Nationalist leaders. One story has it that Mr. Lavergne is going to challenge Mr. L'Esperance to resign and make a fight again in Montmagny on the Keewatin issue.

Another is that a general campaign will be inaugurated for the organization of deputations and representations to the French Canadian Ministers, telling them that they must adopt a firm stand on behalf of Separate Schools or get out at the next elections.

MONTREAL WAITERS GO ON SUDDEN STRIKE

Montreal, Mar. 7. An unpleasant surprise was sprung on Mr. Weldon, manager of the Windsor Hotel, the day before yesterday, when about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, as the guests were beginning to pour in to take afternoon tea, the fifty-eight waiters turned in their badges and went on strike. Bell boys, bar tenders and other help were pressed into service, and a hurry up call was sent out in the hope of borrowing a few waiters.

At a late hour the strike had not been broken and both sides had engaged counsel. Meanwhile visitors had to get their meals the best way they could and the service has been somewhat slow, to say the least.

RED RIVER ROUTE TO HUDSON BAY SURE

Grand Forks, N.D., Mar. 7.—At a convention of the mayors of cities and towns in the Red River Valley held here yesterday, the Hudson Bay Navigation Association was successfully floated. The object of the association is to secure recognition of the importance of the Red River as a possible waterway out of the very heart of the Northwest to the sea by way of Hudson Bay. At a big navigation congress which will probably be held in Winnipeg next June, the problem of improving the Red River between Winnipeg and Grand Forks will be taken up. At a banquet to-night Mayor Waugh of Winnipeg addressed a large attendance on the subject of Red River Navigation.

DUKE'S ACTION IS CRITICIZED

Protest From the Social and Moral Reform Committee of Ottawa Presbytery

Ottawa, Mar. 7. The Social and Moral Reform Committee of the Ottawa Presbytery is out with a strong criticism in its annual report, directed at His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught, which is worded as follows: "Sabbath observances have received a blow in our city in the Dominion through the head of our Dominion giving by his presence sanction to sports at Rockcliffe Park on the Lord's Day. He may not be a puritan; yet there is a large and important part of the nation over which he presides who believe in a day free from the common rut of life and as he would not willingly harm the religious susceptibilities of the Hindoos, he might at least care for the conscience of feeble fellow Christians."

PEARY PLEASED THAT SCOTT SUCCEEDED

Washington, Mar. 7.—Rear Admiral Robert E. Peary, the Arctic explorer and discoverer of the North Pole who has followed with considerable interest the movements of the several expeditions now in the Antarctic, today said he was very glad to hear that Capt. Scott, of the British expedition, was the first man to succeed in reaching the South Pole. Admiral Peary said he might say more when he had heard the details of Capt. Scott's successful exploration.

AFTER WINTERING YEAR IN TERROR BAY CAPT. SCOTT WON BY INTREPID "DASH"

Whole World Stirred at Story From New Zealand From a Rival's Lips---Started in November, 1910, With Sixty Men and Motor Sledge

Wellington, N.Z., Mar. 7.—Capt. Roald Amundsen, the Norwegian explorer, states that Capt. Scott, the British explorer, reached the South Pole.

The cable despatches from New Zealand announcing that Capt. Scott had found the South Pole comes as a startling climax to the race which five explorers of different nationalities have been making to reach this last extremity of the undiscovered portion of the globe.

Capt. Robt. Falcon Scott started on his expedition from Port Chalmers, New Zealand, on November 29, 1910. He was well equipped for this dash for the farthest south, having made a previous expedition under the direction of the Royal Geographical Society. At that time he attained a record of 82 degrees 30 minutes which remained the record up to the time of Lieut. Shackleton's notable exploit. Shackleton pushed further south and in 1907 reached 88 degrees 23 minutes or about 100 miles from the South Pole. This remained the record and inspired the hardy navigators of many nations to attempt the culminating feat of reaching the Pole itself.

Capt. Scott took the route by way of Australia and New Zealand. He sailed [illegible] great stretch of water reaching toward the South Pole. His chief competitor [illegible] Capt. Roald Amundsen, who is commissioned [illegible] King of Norway [illegible] Norwegian Government.

Amundsen chose the route by way of South America, as against Scott and three others who went by the Australian route. Amundsen left Buenos Ayres on board the steamer Fram toward the close of 1910. He passed through the Straits of Magellan and then steered for Ross Sea, the same sheet of water which Scott had gained by way of New Zealand and Australia route.

Capt. Scott planned to follow the same land trail that Shackleton had taken. This is along a mountain range, thought to be an extension of the Andes range running southward through South America.

DREADED LOCALITY.

At the furthermost point of Ross Sea, Capt. Scott debarked his party from his ship, the Terra Nova. Immediately at the point of debarkation stands out this great volcano, Mount Erebus, from which rises constantly a great column of steam. It is one of the dreaded localities of the Antarctic, to which navigators have given the name Terror Bay, for here was crushed in the ice Nordenskiold's ship, the Antarctic. Back of this bay the steam wrapped volcano stands out like a sentinel against the ice covered mountain range stretching southward.

DASH STARTED IN NOVEMBER LAST.

Capt. Scott made his first winter quarters on the slope of the mountains and there remained until November, 1911, it was then that his dash began. His plan was to cover the remaining distance by the end of December and then immediately about face and make the dash back again. Besides his equipment of food he had placed reliance on a score of ponies, with 29 dogs and one motor sledge. It was designed to use this sledge in making rapid progress over the comparatively level stretches of the foothills. Due allowance was made for the death of ponies and dogs, the steady depletion of stores and the loss of vitality of the party making up the expedition.

AMUNDSEN'S SIBERIAN DOGS.

Capt. Amundsen had no ponies and no motor sledge as his experience led him to place all his reliance on Siberian dogs. He had with him a pack of 110 of these animals. They were trained not only to the labor of drawing the sledges with supplies, but were available as food by a steady ratio of reduction as progress to the Pole and back was made. Capt. Amundsen's men also counted on the use of skis, the Norwegians being capable of rapid travel over snow and ice by this device. Going with the wind Amundsen counted that greater progress could be made on Skis than Scott could make in his motor sledge. Thus these two parties have taken the lead in this notable contest.

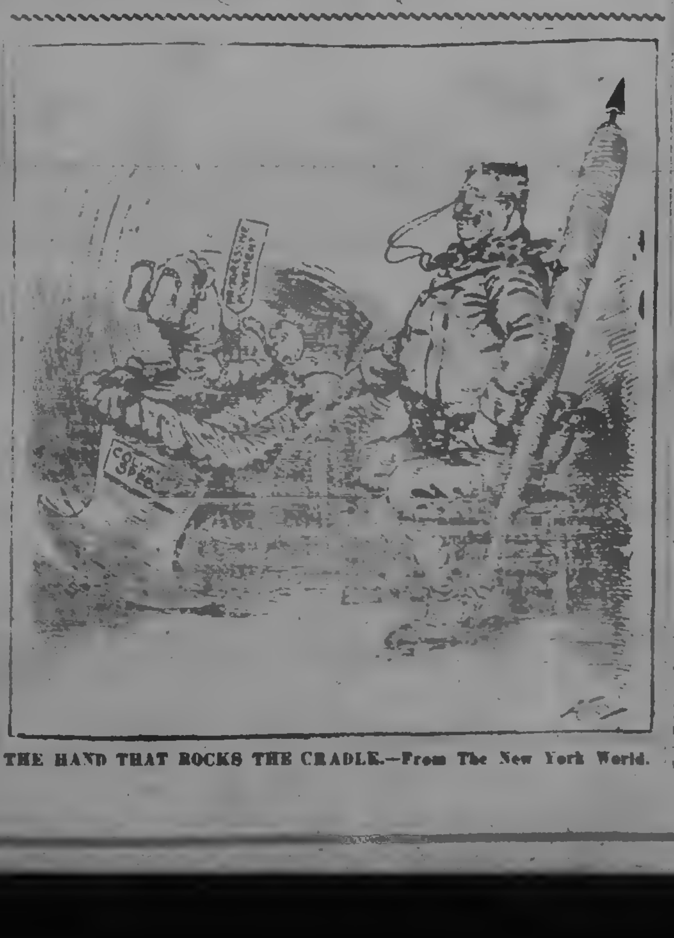
WOMAN GETS MORE THAN ASKED FOR

St. Louis, Mar. 7.—The United States circuit court of appeals has sustained a decision by a lower court awarding $40,000 to Miss Ellen R. Day of Menominee, Mich., for breach of promise and loss of service.

Miss Day alleged that James S. Sanborn of Tukwana, S.D., broke a promise to marry her, and for that she asked $25,000. She alleged also that [illegible] for [illegible] following she was [illegible] wife. For this service she asked $15,000. The jury gave her the full amount.

CANADA-CALIFORNIA OIL PROPOSITION

Now that fortunes are daily being made in oil and oil lands, there are naturally many wild cat schemes to sell stock in oil wells. However, a reference to the big advertisement of the Dominion Oil Co., in this issue will convince the reader that here is a proposition well worth consideration, and one that will appeal to the man or woman who seeks a safe and paying investment. The directors' names are sufficient guarantee that the proposition is genuine. Among the directors is the name of Mr. T. E. Bradburn, Ex-M.P.P., of this city. This alone is a sufficient recommendation. The Dominion Oil Co. has 240 acres of patented and proven oil-bearing lands. Their property is close to that of the Canadian Coalinga Co. which is now paying $8,250.00 a day from their flow of 7500 barrels of oil per diem. The latter Company had to bore down for 3,000 feet. The Dominion Co. has now drilled down 2180 feet. Mr. G. W. Warner, who has charge of the development work of the Dominion Oil Co., an expert in oil, assures the directorate, that by sinking their drills some 100 to [illegible] feet further, the Company will strike the same flow that has raised the stock of the Canadian Coalinga Co. to $25 a share. The Dominion Oil Co., chartered under the laws of Arizona, is offering a limited number of shares of their stock, for a short time, for development purposes, at 50 cents a share. Here is an opportunity that is not often presented, and well worth serious consideration. For full particulars, see the adv. in this issue, or write Messrs. J. A. Morden & Co., Suite 239, Confederation Life Chambers, Toronto.



THE HAND THAT ROCKS THE CRADLE.—From The New York World.

PUBLIC OPINION

The Times does not hold itself responsible for opinions of its correspondents.

IVY DOES NOT HURT WALLS.

Editor Morning Times.

Sir, I have recently changed my place of residence to a brick house I bought. Two sides of the house are covered with vines, ivy I think it is. Of course I am not sure yet whether it is ivy or Virginia Creeper. This will show when spring comes. What I want to know is whether Ivy hurts a brick wall, and makes the house damp.

—Householder.

Reply.—The impression that ivy is harmful to walls of stone or brick has been removed by the testimony of a large number of German architects, builders, foresters and master gardeners, who agree that ivy has no tendency to make the walls damp. They maintain that the tendrils of the plant absorb any existing moisture, and that the thick leaves protect the walls. Ed. Times.

THE "FOG HORN" REPLIES.

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—In the Examiner "An Old Conservative Voter and Orangeman" gives me a good calling down for writing to your paper. Now I know the value of his remarks and I am convinced so do the people of this city, and I am quite content to stand by the judgement of all fair-minded people in Peterborough. I never write, and I never will write, anything I cannot prove. Abuse like that, I am getting accustomed to [illegible] muse, but it certainly fails to convince. It amuses me, and I cannot help [illegible] hard, or [illegible] would never get so [illegible]. "Old Conservative" after [illegible] years of voting Conservative (so he says), is going to throw up the party because Mr. Burnham has not handed him out an appointment. What other construction can you put on his letter, and he is angry because the party lets younger men work and speak for it, he says. Well, that is where he condemns himself. If he had been a true out and out Conservative, the party would have stood by him and been only too glad to avail themselves of his services. The party really have sized him and others like him pretty accurately, and he takes his medicine badly. Besides what party beside the Liberal party would employ a man who writes in such a childish, indecent and cowardly way as he does, and then does not put his name to the trash he writes.

The city has been discussing passing a "Garbage by-law" no wonder when such dirt finds its way into the press, but in my opinion, if the city were to use all their vehicles and men in clearing out the political dirt and garbage to be found in the Liberal organ here, they would find the rest of the city clean enough. If "Old Conservative" is no better Orangeman than he is a Conservative, I sincerely hope there are not many like him in the Orange lodges here. He is evidently a "Mr. Facing both ways" and I advise him in the future to play the man and not the monkey. Be either a steadfast Liberal, or a convinced Conservative and know why he is one, and not be so easily turned from his political faith.

We have no use for "Stratton Conservatives" and no party respects such a one. Keep on trying to be a man "Old Conservative." It will be hard at first as old habits stick, but persevere and in a few years you will succeed. Honestly earn an appointment that is the way to get one.

Thanking "Old Conservative" and the Examiner for another free advertisement, and you Mr. Editor for your space.

Percival G. S. Webb.

HOW TO KEEP CITY IN HEALTH.

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—I see by recent issues of the press of Ontario that Hon. W. J. Hanna proposes to introduce legislation in the Toronto Parliament regarding health matters. Possibly this subject should be spelt with a capital "H" as the Health of any community

ONTARIO WILL NOT STAND DANGER OF BEING FRENCH

Editor of Orange Sentinel Takes Strong Ground That Bi-Lingual Schools Are Not a Purely Educational Question, But a National Issue Between French and English for Possession of the Province

Toronto, March 7. Controller H. C. Hocken, editor of The Orange Sentinel, in discussing the Merchant report said that Dr. Merchant had dealt with the question from a purely educational standpoint, but to his mind the more important phase of the question was how it would effect the future of this Province.

"It is a question of public policy with which the Government has to deal, as well as an educational regulation," said Mr. Hocken. "We are confronted with an avowed determination on the part of the French race to make Ontario as French as Quebec, and a Government that does not look at the question from this standpoint will be unable to see the most serious side of its responsibility.

"Dr. Merchant seems to think it is necessary to teach two languages in Public Schools, and if we are proceeding along that line, I have no fault to find with his conclusions, but both the leader of the Government and the leader of the Opposition have declared that every child should get a thorough English education.

HAVE NO LINGUAL RIGHTS.

"I have no hesitation in saying that that would be an absolute impossibility if the Education Department acts per the report of Dr. Merchant.

"In clause 7 of the report, Dr. Merchant [illegible] French up to and inclusive of the third form. Now, [illegible] per cent. of the French Canadian children leave school from the third form or before that. Therefore, if the teaching of French is [illegible] till that point they must leave the school without a knowledge of English.

"The French race have no lingual rights either by Provincial, Federal or Imperial legislation beyond those enjoyed by the Russians, Italians or other nationalities.

"They are at liberty to come into this Province to make their homes, but they should not be allowed to bring their language, and, by getting special concessions, use it as an instrument to drive the English-speaking settlers out of the Province."

GET POSSESSION OF PROVINCE

"It is this side of the question that to my mind is the more important. While the bi-lingual school is intended as a purely educational agency we have it from the lips of Mr. Bourassa and other French Nationalists that they have been using it and intend to use it as a part of the movement to make Ontario as French as the Province of Quebec.

"With the statement of responsible leaders of the French race now clear and as definite as we can have them, that the main purpose of the movement to extend the use of the language is to get possession of the Province, it seems to me that every man who is animated by a spirit of British patriotism should limit the French to the exercise of their strictly legal rights, and that means the absolute prohibition of the use of the French language in the Public and Separate schools of the Province.

DOES NOT AGREE.

"I do not agree with Dr. Merchant that the best results are obtained when the medium of instruction is in the beginning the mother tongue, unless it is assured that the child is to learn two languages.

"If the endeavour and aim of our educational system is to give the children of this Province a thorough English education, that work must be begun the day the child goes into school, for the vast majority of them leave school from the third and fourth book and I would like to ask any sensible educationist what possible hope there is of giving a child either an English or French education that is of the slightest value when the child leaves school at twelve or thirteen years of age.

FRENCH MUST BE ABOLISHED.

"That is the condition of things and that is the condition that would continue to exist, and notwithstanding the theoretical conclusions of Dr. Merchant, I maintain that if the policy of the Government and of the Opposition is to assure the children of Ontario a thorough grounding in English they must abolish the use of French.

"But, after all, this is not a purely educational question. It is a national issue between the French and the English for the possession of the Province of Ontario and whether the Government looks at it that way or not I am satisfied that the people of Ontario will, and they will not rest so long as there is a danger of Ontario becoming French."

MR. MAGEAU AGREES.

Mr. Zotiphe Mageau, one of the two French-Canadian members in the Ontario Legislature, stated this morning that the Merchant report was in agreement with his own views of the bi-lingual school question in so far as he had had an opportunity to peruse it.

"I noticed that Dr. Merchant approved of the system while he saw many errors in the operation of it," said Mr. Mageau. "That is what I and others have contended all along. Our chief difficulty is in the supply of teachers. Our facilities for getting instructors are most hampered." Mr. Mageau represents Sturgeon Falls.

Nationalist Gives Motion for Preservation of Rights of Minority on Newly Annexed Territory

Ottawa, mar. 7.—The school question is likely to be again before the House this afternoon when the boundaries bill is reached, as Mondue, Yamaska, one of the Nationalists who voted for the measure, has given notice of the following amendment. He will move:

"That the following clause be inserted in bill 115 as clause 8, immediately following the clause 7.

"Nothing in this Act shall in any way prejudice or affect the rights that may actually be enjoyed by the population of that part of the Northwest Territories now added to Manitoba."

Hugh Guthrie has also given notice of an amendment which will prevent the financial terms being made retroactive.

OIL OIL OIL

Oil is King--King of Fuel for all purposes

Without it the automobile could not exist. Just as soon as a supply can be depended on, ships on every ocean, sea, lake, and river, will be propelled by it. The British Admirality are building warships to be propelled by it. The great railway transportation companies are altering their locomotives to be driven by it. The cooking stoves and heating plants in every district where it can be secured are being made to use it—in fact the whole civilized world is crying out for it.

And we have it—have the piece of the earth's crust where it is bursting out and spilling over in such quantities that we are able to collect it from the surface of the pools, put it in bottles, and have it analyzed, and here is what the analytical chemist has to say of it:

FOLDING BRASS BED

Spring Pivotted to Headboard and Lifts Up Against It

A folding brass bed has now been added by a New York man to the list of folding beds. The headboard is double [illegible], so that it stands very firmly, and the footboard is [illegible] likewise. The spring is hinged to the headboard and rests on a cross [illegible] the footboard, to which it is also connected by pivotal bars reaching from the centre. When the bed is to be folded all that is necessary is to raise the footboard. This pushes the spring up against the headboard and the footboard turns over and hangs down from the top, leaving the whole piece of furniture flat against the wall and extending out only a few inches. This bed, of course, cannot be made to represent a bookcase or a piano, as wooden folding beds are designed, but if desired a curtain can be attached to the footboard and draped over it to conceal its presence.

CORONATION FASHIONS

Colors Have Never Been More Vivid or Sparkling

Never has a year been so much open to criticism from the fashion point of view as the present one. The opening season witnessed the arrival of the notorious harem skirt, which as quickly passed out of fashion as it came in. Later on a broad staring black and white striped material was put on the market to be worn with a very short black coat over it. Early in the year the battle of the roses and sweet pea was hotly waged, resulting in a victory for neither and the ultimate triumph of the carnation owing to the Queen's selection of that flower. The tight skirt of last year has been out-rivalled by an even narrower garment which will make progress of women almost an impossibility. Although we are said to have passed the days when extremes in fashions that met with ridicule from the sterner sex were a common occurrence, it is to be feared that we are still swayed by every breeze that blows from the fashion centres abroad. Colors have never been more vivid or sparkling; it is no uncommon thing to see a scarlet hat with its crown covered with flowers of royal blue, and in the front an ostrich feather of red, white and blue appears as an indication of what will be worn [illegible]. All these things go to show the great change that has come over the fashion world in England, and if it continues we will have equalled Paris if not outshone it very much in this blending of artistic colors and designs.—Weekly Telegraph.

USES OF CEMENT ON THE FARM

Farmers Generally Are Adopting It, For Things [illegible] More Durable. Easily [illegible] and Proof Against Vermin

Cement [illegible] the farm for a great variety of [illegible].

Cement [illegible] favor because of [illegible] appearance and [illegible] durability. Hitching posts and [illegible] are made of the same material. And on some farms cement blocks are used for constructing the fence in front of the house. Because of being easily cleaned and not rotting, rusting or admitting vermin, cement tanks for water and grain find favor. Cisterns and wells, and the tops and covers of these are constructed of cement, and it is used also for making watering troughs, feeding troughs, and for slop tanks, in which to heat slop for cattle and prevent it from freezing.

Protection Against Rats

Cement box stalls are warmer in winter and cooler in summer than wooden stalls, and chicken houses built of cement afford much needed protection against rats, weasels and other vermin, and are easily kept clean. Root cellars and feeding floors of cement also are not approved of by rats, those energetic pests that find it easy to live on the farm in summer, but will find it hard in winter if cement construction becomes general. Hog pens are built of cement and so are corn cribs.

Sidewalks, steps for porch and cellar and rain leaders and gutters are made of the same material, and other things made of it are dams, retaining walls, barn drains and land drains, cesspools, windmill foundations, dipping tanks, flower boxes and frames for hotbeds and coldbeds.

Cement is much used in connection with the dairy. Milk houses, ice boxes, and many other things are made of that material, the advantages of which are quite apparent in a place where cleanliness is so necessary. Cement is put to many and strange uses, one of the strangest being as filling for a tree cavity. Filling such a cavity prevents decay and gives a better appearance to the tree.

SALT FOR MANGOLDS

Best Results Obtained From Use of 10 Per Cent. Per Acre

The [illegible] application of salt in addition to [illegible] fertilizers is useful for the [illegible] is generally acknowledged, but what is the most suitable quantity to apply is a question upon which there is considerable difference of opinion.

To obtain definite information on this point the Harper-Adams Agricultural College has been conducting experiments for three years with quantities per acre of 2½ cwt., 5 cwt., 10 cwt. and 15 cwt. respectively.

The salt was applied in the middle of April and thoroughly worked into the soil by cultivating, harrowing and rolling three times before rowing up, the ridges being again split before sowing.

Special care has to be taken to ensure the salt being completely mixed with the soil, otherwise the seed is liable to be damaged.

The dressings were made across all the manurial and variety trial plots, and the weights are the average of the different plots. The result was the following:—The application of—

2½ cwt. produced an average increase, about 4 tons roots;

5 cwt. produced an average increase, about 5½ tons roots;

10 cwt. produced an average increase, about 8½ tons roots;

15 cwt. produced an average increase, about 4 tons roots.

The big application of 15 cwt. was tried for the first time last year, just to see what the effect would be.

The experiment seems to demonstrate that the quantity of salt that can be used with the best result is 10 cwt. per acre.

HORSES IN WINTER

Can be Kept on Straw as Well as on Hay

Professor J. H. Shepperd, of the North Dakota Agricultural College, answering a question recently about wintering horses on straw, says:

The North Dakota station did a considerable amount of work in horse feeding a number of years ago and made extensive trials with oat straw, as compared with hay, for roughage. In the trial it was found that some horses did about as well on it as they did on hay. While others were very much harder to carry, chiefly because their appetites for roughage were too light to cause them to eat enough of it. Aside from those dainty animals there was little trouble in keeping them up on oat straw as roughage.

The oat straw used was that of a normal season, which was coarser and more woody than that which had been obtained this year. The trial consisted of a period of sixty days' feeding with oats as the grain ration against a similar period with oats and hay, and sixty days' feeding with a mixture of half and half bran and shorts by weight with hay compared with sixty days' feeding bran and shorts with oat straw.

During the first thirty days winter conditions were present and the horses were used only about enough for good [illegible] thirty days they were worked at harrowing, discing and seeding and had nearly all of that work the last half of the month. The horses receiving oats and hay as a ration required nine and one-third pounds of oats with hay to carry them, while those on oats and straw consumed eleven and one half pounds of oats per day. During the thirty days that they had light work, the horses on hay gained 176 pounds and the three on straw 169 pounds. During the thirty days when they had heavy work one half of the time, those on hay lost 340 pounds and those on straw 315 pounds.

The similar lots of horses fed on bran and shorts, half and half by weight, [illegible] during the winter conditions, [illegible] pounds when fed hay, and 83 pounds when fed straw. When they were on the straw ration with heavy work for one-half of the month they lost 225 pounds and on the hay ration 255 pounds.

These results indicate that horses can be carried almost as successfully on straw as roughage as they can on hay, provided enough additional grain is given them to supply them with sufficient nourishment. The additional grain required is about one-fifth. If the feeder has facilities for chaffing the straw and will moisten it and mix the grain with it during the season when the animals are required to do [illegible] work, a smaller amount of grain will carry them.

SUCKERS ON CORN

In the past suckers on corn were regarded as very undesirable, and oftentimes the small boy had to go through the cornfield and pull them off. Recent experiments show that suckering of the corn plant is merely a response to the surroundings. When the stand is thin there will always be plenty of suckers. The corn plants simply try to remedy the thin stand by suckering.

In an experiment several years ago where there were four plants in a hill eight suckers developed to each one hundred plants, where there were three in a hill twenty-five suckers developed, where there were two in a hill seventy-six suckers, and where there was only one plant in the hill, 198 suckers developed to each one hundred plants. It was noticed that a large number of the suckers produced ears.

Another cause for suckering is the richness of the land. [illegible] has been found to produce nearly twice the number of suckers as old, worn-out land. To some extent the tendency to suckers is no doubt inherited, but the main causes of suckering are the thinness of the ground and the weather conditions.

Experiments conducted for two years indicated that it pays to leave the suckers on. The average yield for two years of corn with the suckers left on was eighty-one bushels, while for corn with suckers pulled off it was sixty-four bushels.

RABIES, HYDROPHOBIA

A History of the Disease and How to Treat It

During the past year many cases of rables have been reported in Canada, which have caused much loss of live stock, and, in several localities, people have been bitten.

This is one of the oldest diseases known. In the fourth century B. C. it was described by Aristotle, who wrote: "Dogs suffer from a madness which puts them in a state of fury, and all the animals that they bite in this condition become also attacked by rabies."

The season of the year makes [illegible] little difference, as the disease is as prevalent in winter as it is in summer. This is contrary to the belief of many people, who think that July and August, "dog days," are the time that dogs are subject to it.

Cause

Rabies is caused in nearly all cases by the bite of a rabid animal. It is possible to contract the disease through the saliva, the tears from the eyes, or the milk of a rabid animal. The rabid dog is a source of danger a few days before the symptoms of the disease appear, but in no case before he was bitten by a rabid animal, or otherwise innoculated. Hot weather, lack of water or ill treatment will never of themselves produce rabies.

The dog is the principal source by which rabies is spread over the country.

Symptoms

The symptoms seldom develop in less than fourteen days after the animal was bitten—most commonly three to six weeks—but they may not show for six months to a year. Not all animals bitten develop the disease. It depends somewhat upon the part of the body which was bitten. In man there is less danger if bitten through the clothing than upon the bare parts of the body. It is not uncommon for the symptoms to develop in less than two weeks when bitten upon the head. The symptoms show in one of two forms—furious or dumb.

Furious Rabies

With the furious form the dog is at first noticed to seek the company of his master more than usual, or he will hunt dark, secluded places. Sometimes he will make sudden starts towards objects. These conditions last for a day or two. Later he becomes restless, and will often travel twenty to thirty miles in a day. While he is on this trip he is very likely to bite cattle, hogs, and dogs often passing horse and man, unless they interfere with his course. He will seldom return home unless he is killed. During this period he is irritable, seldom eating or drinking, not because he does not want food or water, nor because he is afraid of water, for he is not, but from the fact that his throat is paralyzed and he cannot swallow. Often he will force sticks and [illegible] hunger and thirst. This [illegible] irritation lasts for two [illegible] followed by a [illegible] which has [illegible] place [illegible] throat [illegible] the voice. [illegible] This is followed by paralysis and death, the entire [illegible] from four to [illegible]

Dumb Rabies

The dog seeks his master's [illegible] or may hide in dark places [illegible] able to eat [illegible] [illegible] and [illegible] condition [illegible] paralysis [illegible] death [illegible] days after first symptoms appear.

Symptoms

[illegible] does and may run at a loam, [illegible] apt to attack. [illegible] no apparent [illegible] liability to a [illegible] ment [illegible] well marked, but [illegible] biting. These symptoms are [illegible] by paralysis and death.

The horse is often [illegible] cattle, biting anything [illegible] and shows [illegible] of the symptoms shown by [illegible]

Diagnosis

This is [illegible] from [illegible] examination of the brain, [illegible] small round or oval bodies [illegible] 000 to 1-1,000 of an inch in diameter. They have never been found [illegible] the animal has been inoculated with rabies virus. There are also [illegible] in the nervous ganglia in the [illegible] stage of rabies, but this method of diagnosis is more uncertain and [illegible] little use in the early stages of the disease. Sticks and stones are found in the stomach of a [illegible]

Treatment

This consists of a [illegible] treatment of Pasteur, which [illegible] taken before the symptoms [illegible] developed in order to be [illegible] should be taken within a few [illegible] after having been bitten by a rabid animal. The treatment may [illegible] to valuable domestic animals.

2. Do not spit.

9. Work but do not worry.

A balanced ration is just as essential for poultry as it is for other stock. A few crumbs from the [illegible] or an occasional feed of corn [illegible] never produce profitable fowls [illegible] pays to feed a balanced ration.

The difference between this city and Kingston, is that in the latter city they have fourteen policemen, including the chief, whilst in Peterborough with about the same population there are only eight.

An exchange says that the mussels in the rivers of the South West are threatened with extinction. The muscles of some Peterborough young men will become extinct if they do not get up and hustle a little harder.

LEVEL COLT'S FEET

Properly Done, It Cures Wrong Tendencies and Prevents Resultant Injuries

The feet of foals frequently need leveling to prevent an abnormal development of the legs as a result of unequal wear of the hoofs. Many foals stand badly at first, and if they are slow in gaining a correct position of the legs the hoofs may become worn in such a way as to prevent a proper standing position or a straight form of action.

Leveling the feet acts both as prevention and cure. It prevents a breakage, or other cause of rapid wearing away of any part of the hoof from throwing the weight on the wrong part of the joints. Even if the foal is born with a natural tendency to stand wrong as with the feet too wide apart or too close together or pigeon-toed, such a tendency may be gradually corrected in a large part by keeping the feet level. A colt that stands pigeon-toed, for example, wears off the outside wall of the hoof faster than the inside, and the more that condition develops the worse the tendency to stand wrong becomes. By rasping off the inner wall to correspond with or even slightly to exceed the wear of the other side, the foot will be thrown more nearly into line as it strikes the ground. While the leg bones and joints are growing they are susceptible to the persistent pressure from one angle or another and grow toward a correct position or away from it according to the condition of the feet.

A level foot induces the colt to assume a correct position of the leg. As an example of the marked effect of the pressure on the joints from shortening one wall or the other of the hoof, work horses with lameness and symptoms of spavin have frequently been made to go sound simply by taking half an inch off the inner wall of the hoof, thus throwing the concussion on to the outside of the hock joint. If colt's hoofs are kept fairly short at the toes, with the inner and outer walls of equal length, the foot will develop as nearly a correct shape as it can be induced to take and the limbs as well will be safe guarded against deformity.

FIGHTING WEEDS

Plough as Early as Possible After the Crop is Removed

Summer fallowing is not necessary for the eradication of noxious weeds such as mustard, Canada thistle, curled dock and so forth. By plowing as early as possible after the crop is removed and cultivating frequently until the ground freezes, it is quite possible to free land from the weeds mentioned. The farm of one of our neighbors was badly infested with mustard, says J. R. Westlake, of Carleton County, Ontario. The former occupant, who had merely rented the farm, had failed to keep this pest in control, and it had practically driven him off the farm. When the present owner—an Englishman by the way—took the farm we were all very interested in knowing how he would make out in the struggle for existence with the weeds.

His first grain crop could not be seen for mustard. This crop was not allowed to ripen, but was cut when green, and with careful curing made very fair winter feed. The land was plowed immediately, and, in the course of a week or so, was green again with a fine growth of mustard, thistles and many other weeds. When these were well started he disced the land thoroughly and let stand for a couple of weeks. The next growth of weeds was plowed under. He followed this up with alternate discing and plowing as long as the weeds continued to grow. By following this method combined with a rotation which contained a large amount of corn and roots, he has his farm practically clear of weeds.

Nor was the freeing of the farm from weeds the only benefit derived from this system of cultivation. The land was put in splendid shape for next year's crop. The large amount of cultivation and aeration made available a large supply of plant food. The large amount of vegetable matter in the form of weeds turned under, greatly increased the supply of humus in the soil with all its attendant benefits. Farmers who are carrying on what seems like a hopeless struggle with weeds, would do well to follow the example of our English neighbor and do more fall cultivation combined with a large acreage of hoed crops.

THE MANURE HEAP

Never Allow Yourself to be Tempted to Dispose of It

So far as manure is concerned you should make it your business to keep your small holding self-supporting so far as possible. In these days of mechanical traction dung is becoming increasingly scarce, and though artificials are more used than ever, there will always be a demand for the invaluable farmyard refuse, which contains the nutritious properties for soil in such well-balanced quantities.

Still, though manure is such an important commodity, there is no need for it to intrude, and your stack may well be made up at some convenient point well away from the house. Here waste from the stable, pigsty, cow houses and yards may be stored, and it should be packed closely so that it may "heat" and decompose.

Later on in the winter—preferably in frosty weather—the stuff may be carted on to the land and used, economically yet judiciously; the more rotten it is the better. Never be tempted to dispose of manure. It will probably be against the conditions of your tenancy, but whether or not, it is bad farming to let a load go.

A local man yesterday read that an old couple lived for years in a destitute condition, in a cave near Pembroke. He remarked to a Times reporter "Well, they did not have to run a furnace and pay Peterborough prices for coal, so they had no kick!"

A Peterborough professional man yesterday remarked to the Times, "J. P. Morgan may be able to raise ten millions on his cheque, but the man who keeps a large family in Peterborough now, on $9.00 a week is a smarter financier."

SORE SHOLDERS, YOUNG HORSES

Loose Collars are Usually the Cause—Gradually Should be Gradually Toughened to Work

The care of the shoulders of young horses is one of the most important factors to keep in mind during the first few weeks of the spring work.

A horse can not do satisfactory work with shoulders that pain him every time he takes a step. The horse may be looked upon as a machine that is expected to do so much work, and if some of the mechanism is out of order, then the amount of work is lessened. But, also the animal must be looked upon as a creature with feeling and ambition, taking pride in its work, that is a willing, obedient, and, therefore, valuable servant, and should be properly cared for.

The first thing of importance to consider in the draft horse is the collar. Most injured shoulders are the result of poorly-fitting collars, and the fault usually lies in a collar being too large. It is a good idea to have a harness maker fit the collars to your horses. He may be able to remove padding, and in other ways make the collar over so that it will fit nicely. Heavy collar pads are to be avoided if possible. They are hot and cause the shoulder to sweat; this keeps the pad and shoulder wet, and the skin becomes soft and blisters easily.

Dirty collars are probably as responsible for sore shoulders as ill-fitting ones. In the spring the horse's hair is long and holds large quantities of dirt and scales from the skin. He is soft from lack of work and sweats profusely. This forms a gummy dirt that adheres to the collar and makes, when dry, a hard, tough surface. The ordinary farm hand feels that his duty is done if he scrapes the dirt from the collar with the back of his jack knife. This method, however, is not an especially good one for the leather of the collar, and a smooth surface is not left. A damp sponge used in the evening as soon as the collar is taken off will, in one or two minutes, remove the dirt. This may be followed by an oiled rag. If this is done, the collar, in the morning should be soft and smooth.

Careless driving, jerking a horse out of the furrow and into it again, allowing him to work with his head around on one side, all tend to produce sore shoulders.

Of course the first precaution to take is not to ask the colt to do a full day's work until he learns something about his job and ceases to fret. The shoulders will then gradually become toughened. It is a good idea to sponge the shoulders with cold water—just plain cold water. Alum water has been used to good advantage; also weak solutions of tannic acid. Alcohol tends to toughen the skin.

The injuries to the top of the neck [illegible] fistulas. [illegible] A blister near the point of the shoulder is likely to become a callous and form what is known as a "cold abscess." Ill-fitting collars and [illegible] equally responsible [illegible] known as sweeny.

If an accident occurs and in spite of careful attention a horse's shoulder becomes injured, do not wait until a fistula has developed, or an abscess has formed, or the animal is "sweenied," but seek the advice of a veterinary while there is still a chance to check the progress of the injury. This is not the proper place to teach the [illegible] of such conditions after [illegible] has been done; it takes [illegible] work to do that, but it is a good opportunity to impress upon the minds of horse owners that such [illegible] things may be entirely avoided.

LIME AND ITS USES

Helps Land to Digest Manure and Other Matter

Expressed simply and as a simile, the application of lime to land assists it to digest manure and other animal matter; it prevents the soil from becoming sour and callous; it causes it [illegible] its full proportion [illegible] and it assists root action.

[illegible] these days of artificial [illegible] lime is not so highly necessary [illegible] application will work [illegible] with most soils, particularly [illegible] have been neglected; [illegible] older breaking up old [illegible] the purpose of close [illegible] find an application al[illegible]

[illegible] it is better to [illegible] dressings frequently rather [illegible] dressing occasionally; [illegible] should buy from a re[illegible] or you may obtain [illegible] material a quantity not [illegible] heated in the kiln. For [illegible] soils a ton and a half of lime to the acre should be ample, but heavy soils need more liberal treatment.

SORT OF SOW TO BREED FROM

In considering the efficiency of brood sows Henry Wallace gives the following advice. Go over those that have had pigs the present year and ask them the following questions. How many pigs did you have this year? Were they all good ones, or did you have two or three choice pigs and were the rest inferior? How did you take care of those pigs? Are you a good suckler? Are you good-natured? Are you a good mother, or are you one of the nervous, fidgety kind always worrying and fretting for fear somebody will hurt you and your precious piglets? If the brood sow on being interrogated, cannot give satisfactory answers to these questions, it is not worth while to scold her or give her a moral lecture. Just turn her into the fattening pens, for there is where she belongs.

How many hens do you have in your flock that do not pay their board? This may be the reason you do not find poultry profitable. Eliminate the unprofitable hens.

As an indication that the Georgian Bay and Seaboard Railway is nearing completion, it might be noted that some twenty-five Italian navies, who had been working on that road, have left Lindsay for Brockville.

Talking of hard luck, what do you think of Mercury, in March, low enough as to sink as low as 15 below zero? This is what local thermometers registered on Tuesday night.

Health for Every Woman No More Headaches

FROM WEAKNESS AND DESPAIR THOUSANDS HAVE BEEN RESTORED TO ROBUST HEALTH BY DR. HAMILTON'S PILLS.

That sick women are made well by Dr. Hamilton's Pills is proved in the following letter:

"For years I was thin and delicate I lost color and was easily tired; a yellow pallor, pimples and blotches on my face were not only mortifying to my feelings, but because I thought my skin would never look nice again I grew despondent. Then my appetite failed. I grew very weak. Various remedies, pills, tonics and tablets I tried without permanent benefit. A visit to my sister put into my hands a box of Dr. Hamilton's Pills. She placed reliance upon them, and now that they have made me a well woman I would not be without them whatever they might cost. I found Dr. Hamilton's Pills by their mild yet searching action very suitable to the delicate character of a woman's nature. They never once griped me, yet they established regularity. My appetite grew—my blood red and pure heavy rings under my eyes disappeared, and to-day my skin is as clear and unwrinkled as when I was a girl. Dr. Hamilton's Pills did it all."

The above straightforward letter from Mrs. J. Y. Todd, wife of a well-known citizen in Rogersville, is proof sufficient that Dr. Hamilton's Pills are a wonderful woman's medicine. Use no other pill but Dr. Hamilton's 25c. per box. All dealers or the Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Ontario.

"SUFFRAGETTE" CONSPIRATORS

The arrest of the "Suffragette" leaders for conspiracy looks like a serious step toward the suppression of the nuisance. It is to be hoped that the authorities have taken sufficient pains to collect evidence of conspiracy. The cable correspondents appear to be in doubt on this point; but it would [illegible] worth while putting a spy [illegible] officers to secure such proof. If the evidence is [illegible] it certainly ought to be a simple matter to convict people who openly boast that they intend to destroy property, upset business and terrorize society.

The wisdom of such a step is obvious. To arrest only the tools of the conspiracy, especially in a case where the "tools" are largely recruited from the ranks of "passionate pilgrims" who hold nothing so dear as a martyr's crown, is to make little headway in checking the spread of the lunacy. The sources will always be flowing, and new "martyrs" will be found. But if the people chiefly responsible for this remarkable outbreak among the most conservative women in Christendom, can be removed from their sphere of mischief, it is quite possible that the tides of delirium may fall.

In any case, the Government seems at last determined to stamp out the flames, even if new legislation is required. When London must close its art galleries, when London shops must shutter their windows, when the property of innocent people is liable to be destroyed at any moment, even stolid John Bull is likely to take severe measures. He has a naturally chivalrous indisposition to be "hard on women," and he has also a hereditary respect for those of aristocratic lineage, but his respect for property and his love of order are almost as large, and the Asquith Government probably realize that his mandate, in this case at all events, is "Govern or go."

Editorial Notes

Why the present discrepancy in postage charges on postage parcels? Why discriminate against Canadian parcels sent to Canadian points? The rate charged by the post office authorities for parcels mailed in Canada to be delivered in Canada is 16c a pound. Parcels mailed in Canada to be delivered in Canada actually cost more than those to be delivered outside of Canada. This is like a Peterborough expressman charging 75 cents for taking a box to Lakefield that he would ask $1.00 for delivering to, say, some point on Hunter or Water Street, Peterborough.

A London, Eng., dispatch says "the authorities of the Church of England are considerably worried over the recent activities of Mormon missionaries, especially in the northern part of the country. Twenty-six agents of the Mormon church, lately arrived from Salt Lake City have established headquarters at Sunderland and have started out on an elaborate house to house campaign." The average Canadian who has come home late from the "lodge" and been caught creeping upstairs with shoes in hand at 3 a.m., thinks one wife is enough by the time his better half has unloaded her opinion of him.

The Ontario Government seems determined to protect the people of this Province. Any such transaction, as our citizens know of, as handing over the streets of a municipality to a street car company, by the Council, without consulting the people at large will be impossible. The government is considering a bill whereby the Council of a municipality shall not grant to any individual, firm or company the right to use or occupy any of the highways of the municipality or to construct any street railway or public utility, unless or until a by-law setting forth the terms and conditions upon which and the period for which such right is to be granted, has been assented to by the municipal electors.

"La Ville de Monsieur Pierre." How would that strike you for a new name for Peterborough? A local citizen, a few days ago, in conversation with a Times' representative, displayed the very evident fact that he, the i.e., is of esthetic disposition, a kind of Oscar Wilde, Bunthorne, "sit under a lily" make up. He said, as near as our reporter can remember, "Peterborough is rawther progressive in its manufacturing industries. However, it is crude, very crude in mattahs of culchaw and literary advancement. Why the very name of our city is harsh sounding. It sounds crude and common place!" Now this citizen is fond of slinging the eight or ten French words he knows when talking. He told our reporter that the City Aldermen did not have the "savoor fairy" (savoir faire) in dealing with public buildings or the reception of distinguished guests in Peterborough. Now, if Peterborough must have the culchaw this gentleman sighs for, and it is the "correct thing" to sprinkle French words round, and the name "Peterborough" is harsh, why not get Mr. Burnham to have the P.M.G. change "Peterborough" to "Le ville de Monsieur de Pierre?" That would give our flourishing young city all the French we could carry, would be a step towards culchaw, and would get Mr. Burnham a lot of votes in the first ward. It would, at the same time give good jaw exercise to the younger generation and develop their neck muscles whilst getting their tongues round the pronounciation.

CULL THE HERDS

Get Rid of the Stock that is Not Paying Its Way

Too many men hold the opinion that most everything on their farms is just about right. Their teams keep a little fatter on less feed, yet do more work; their cows give just as much milk [illegible] and of higher [illegible] their sheep always [illegible] and their [illegible] the largest and sweetest litters [illegible] settle [illegible]. But in truth there [illegible] farm [illegible] and the [illegible] large a proportion [illegible] live stock. The sensible thing to do [illegible] is to divest the problem of all sentiment, and in a business manner discard every animal that is not handsomely paying its way.

In most every man's group of calves are to be found some stunted ones that for one reason or another give promise of a slowly-gained, dwarfed maturity. They will never pay. As beef animals they will eat their heads off; the females will never make desirable breeders or milkers. The thing to do is to hasten them off the place.

Likewise, in almost every herd of milch cows, there are cows that have not paid for the pasture they have used and the labor expended on them. They have deadheaded their way for a number of years, being kept, perhaps, because their dams or their granddams were what were then thought to be good cows. If records have been kept by use of the scales and Babcock tester, the owners have at hand a very ready source of reliable information upon which they can convict these poachers with perfect safety. As soon as these culls—these non-producers are located, fatten them up, and let the butcher have them.

And there are horses which have amply proven that they can neither do a draft horse's work day in and day out, nor a road horse's work at any time. Some of these have been kept for many a day. They are not good enough. They eat almost as much as the right kind of a horse, but never give satisfaction in harness. They are poor advertisements of your business acumen. If they are brood mares, they are still less desirable. Let the greedy man or the other city fellow have them; they can come nearer making good use of such horses than can farmers. Let them go, and, in place of three scrubs, get a pair of good (if possible, pure-bred) draft mares or other mares of the type preferred, study to use them rightly, and know by your own experience what you now believe is good practice.

Similarly can scrub brood sows and breeding sheep be located in every breeder's possession. Get rid of them; it seems costly to do so, but in reality it is an actual saving. One will be money ahead every time he discovers and discards an unprofitable animal. And that money can be put into profitable ones.—Farmer's Advocate.

COLD STORAGE EGGS

Likely to Supplant Limeing and Other Preserving Processes

According to Dr. Bordas, of the French council of public hygiene, the cold storage of eggs is rapidly increasing in France, and will soon supplant limeing and the other processes now employed for preservin geggs. Dr. Bordas insists on maintaining a rigorous distinction between fresh eggs and cold storage eggs, although the latter are very superior to limed eggs. Five, six, or even seven months of cold storage do not appreciably alter the appearance or odor of eggs, while lime water, acting for a much shorter period, makes the albumen slightly yellow and gives the egg the characteristic odor of lime. An egg which has been kept three or four months in cold storage is still in perfect condition to be eaten, soft-boiled, from the shell, but a limed egg of the same age is unfit for this use. After the fourth month of cold storage the air space of the egg becomes enlarged by evaporation, but the egg is still perfectly fit for pastrymaking and all culinary uses.

FLOWER POTS

The value of flower pots depends on the uses to which put, their hardness, and ease with which emptied, an dwhen not in use stored. Then it is so easy to obtain them in so many diverse sizes from three inches across the tops, to others 18 to 20 inches. As a rule the amateur gordener finds the most useful to be four-inch, five-inch and six-inch broad. It is well in purchasing to obtain pots in several sizes, as all, if not too large, are wanted for various descriptions of plants. It is well when using new pots to dip them in water for a moment and then let them stand to drain before using, as otherwise being so dry they are too absorbent. In the case of old pots all should be well scrubbed in hot soda water and dried before using. A dirty pot should never be used.

WANT THE STRAPS BARRED.

At the meeting of the Rules Committee of the American Trotting Association a deputation representing a large number of members appeared and argued that the rule barring hopples should not be rescinded at present; that in their opinion it had not been given a fair trail, as it had only applied to two or three year olds and that it should be continued in force at least two years longer. This deputation further showed that pacing races in which hopples had been barred offered by the State fairs of Iowa, Nebraska and South Dakota over half-mile tracks had proved more successful and received more entries and starters than had those in which hopples were hoa barred.

FOOD VALUE OF CHEESE

Fresh Meat Has Little More Than Half Its Nourishment

A comparison of the food value of cheese with that of other highly nitrogenous food [illegible] be of in[illegible] of meat, excepting dried beef carries such a large percentage of protein as cheese, and as dried beef contains a much greater percentage of water, the other food constituents, apart from the protein, are much less than is found in cheese. Fresh beef as purchased has, weight for weight, little more than half the food value of cheese in either protein or fat, and the same is true of practically all other fresh meats, which have in many cases such a large percentage of water than they are noticeably inferior to cheese in food value. Bacon or pork fat are exceptions, but their food value is mostly in the fat, which can be and is replaced to a great extent by the carbohydrates of vegetables at a much less cost, and sometimes, perhaps, at a benefit to the health of the consumer. Fish and pork each have a notably large percentage of refuse, while eggs have a high percentage of water. To sum the matter up, a pound of cheese has nearly the same food value as two pounds of fresh beef, or any other fresh meat as food; it is worth as much as or more than a pound of ham, and is more digestible, and it is equal to two pounds of eggs or three pounds of fish.

NOVEL PLACE OF WORSHIP

A Bishop Has Consecrated a Chapel on Wheels

A chapel on wheels has just been consecrated by Archbishop Bourne. This novel place of worship is to be sent on tour in charge of two priests, for whom it will also be a residence. It is an ordinary motor-van, the interior of which is fitted with a miniature altar for the celebration of Mass, with prie-dieu kneelers for a dozen worshippers. When not in use for Divine services the benches are stowed away, the altar cleared of its ornaments, and the vehicle becomes a travelling van, with beds for the accommodation of the two priests. The chapel on wheels will start for East Anglia, and the first stopping-place is to be Haverhill, where Father Bernard Vaughan will deliver a series of lectures during a week's sojourn in that town.

BEAUTIFYING THE DOGS

A Veterinary Surgeon Undertakes to Remove Canine Wrinkles

We hear a good deal about massage, lotions and prescriptions, all calculated to transform even the plainest woman into a thing of beauty. Now, as it appears, the canine race is being similarly taken in hand under the auspices of a veterinary surgeon in Paris. At least, in a prospectus the following list of charges is drawn up.

"Alteration of the shape of the muzzle, 60 francs.

"Insertion of wrinkles on the face of a bulldog, 80 francs.

"Change of the size of the tail, 20 francs.

"Removal of superfluous hair, 5 francs per hour.

"Change of the color of the skin, 30 francs."

THE SUPREME JOY

There's joy in the smile of an artless child. There's joy in a maiden's eye. There's joy in the spring when the song birds sing. There's joy in a lover's sigh. But such joys all pale and easily fail to compare with the joyous thrill of the woman who knows that her newest clothes give her rivals a nervous chill.

PLOWING VS. DISCING

How the One Is Made to Assist the Other

Plowing and discing are two of the most essential features of soil cultivation. To dispense with the former would spell ruin for the farmer, while if the latter were abolished at the present day, the loss would be keenly felt in agricultural circles.

In order to keep the land free of weeds and to get the most out of the soil, it is necessary to periodically turn the top earth down and bring fresh soil to the surface. For this reason, the modern plow cutting stripe of land, sa yfrom ten to sixteen inches in width, according to the size of the plow, turns them completely over so that the under soil is exposed to the sun, and the weeds, if there are any, are completely buried.

That plowing should be well done is important, and there is no better proof of this than the comparison of farms that are accustomed to be well plowed with others that are poorly plowed. Plowing matches were organized not for the sport they afforded but that an improvement in the character of the work would result from the contests.

In the fall of the year, after the crop is harvested discing the land intended for fallow the ensuing season is a capital plan, and is regularly carried out by many farmers. The stirring up of the soil starts the weeds growing and forms a mulch which preserves the moisture. Early in the spring, as soon as the ground is dry enough for working, discing is again done to loosen the top soil and thus retain the moisture; placing the land in a good condition for plowing when the fallow season arrives.

As a cultivator for summerfallow, the disc has its merits and is widely used as it is a light machine, kills small weeds and aids in packing the soil.

Occasionally the disc is used in the spring to take the place of the plow. The stubble is sometimes burned off, and the land is disced to render it in shape for the crop. Under favorable conditions good crops have been taken off in the fall, but as a rule, this method is a failure and the farmer who practises this style of farming too frequently soon has his land polluted with weeds.

Only as a pulverizer and a cultivator has discing proved successful. When it is done in place of plowing the result is a failure. The disc will not take the place of the plow for the simple reason that it does not cut all the soil and does not go deep enough.—Grain Growers' Guide.

HEATING THE HOUSE

The Importance of Having Humidity in the Air

As far back as you can remember the use of the heating stove in your father's or grandfather's house, you will be able to recall the fact that a pan or kettle of water was always steaming on the stove. It kept the air in the room moistened or humidized and in effect made the warmth at once satisfying and agreeable.

Then the day of the warm air furnace came, and since then, with the exception of a few instances in which people have appreciated the value of humidity and have kept their furnace water pans supplied with hot water, we have been content with a hot, dry, enervating heat, which is destructive to both comfort and health.

Dry air will absorb moisture from every possible source, and when, by furnace heating, the humidity is almost entirely eliminated, the furniture and other wood fittings, the house plants, and even your own body, are levied upon to supply the deficiency, and, as a result, the furniture warps, the plants wither and die, and you lay yourself open to contract one of those severe colds, or worse, which you wonder how and where you caught. The average furnace water-pan is rather on the small side to supply the necessary moisture, but a new form of pan in the shape of a complete circle has been recently introduced with much success and promises to again give us the health-giving and agreeable humidized heat which our parents appreciated and enjoyed.

KEEP THE PIGS DRY

Guard Against Dampness From the Very Beginning

Pigs are animals that, as a class, are subject to rheumatism and similar troubles, and if you are going to be a successful pig-keeper you must guard against dampness from the very start, especially with the bedding arrangements.

Straw—barley straw in particular—makes capital bedding; and dry bracken, dried grass from the hedges, and similar material may be used. I will assume, of course, that the floor of the sleeping apartment of your sty is of brick, sloped for drainage, and that a warm bed of some kind is provided for the animals. From time to time as it is dirtied this bedding must be changed, and it is a good plan to place it in the forecourt of the sty—if any—till it has become part of the muck, which you will remove for manurial purposes as necessary.

And if dry quarters are necessary with adult sows and pigs, how much more so is this the case with the youngsters! At birth they should have clean, sweet straw provided, not in great quantities, or they may be unwittingly lain upon by their mother, or else smothered, but sufficient for dryness and warmth. Then, during their infancy the quantity may be gradually increased till the usual allowance is arrived at. Needless to say, the straw bedding should be changed almost daily at first, and this is especially the case with a large litter in a somewhat cramped sty.

Watch for the birds' nests before you remove a dead tree. If you can save a nest of young birds spare the tree awhile. Birds destroy thousands of noxious weed seeds every year. They do much good in keeping down insect pests and noxious weeds.

TRINIDAD'S BUTTER TRADE

France Has a Large Percentage of the Trade

Trinidad imported $165,000 worth of butter last year, of which trade Canada furnishes less than 2.5 per cent., while France furnishes over 60 per cent. of the total trade. This is explained by the fact that years ago a French butter manufacturer took the trouble to find out the class of butter most suited for general trade in the tropics, and, what was most essential, the best package to put it in. Some time ago an attempt to compete was made from [illegible] ly for want of compliance with the conditions experienced had [illegible] the French exporters. The [illegible] were made of inferior wood. [illegible] were in [illegible] Loops, and [illegible] iron. In th[illegible] butter n[illegible] trade that [illegible] and that it [illegible] manufacturers [illegible] fall in with local [illegible] should not be omitted, however [illegible] one or two brands of tinned [illegible] butter are in very favorable demand and are appreciated as being pure and good.

MENDACIOUS WINDOWS

Chancellor Prescott, of Carlisle, is anxious that stained-glass windows should tell the truth, and not represent the pictorial fiction of artists. He granted a faculty for a window which is to be erected in St. Aidan's Church Carlisle, in memory of the late Bishop Ware, of Barrow-in-Furness, subject to an amended design being submitted. He did not think angels usually wore coats-of-arms, and one of them was represented clad in the coat-of-arms of the Dean and Chapter of Carlisle. Oswald, King of Northumbria, who died at the age of thirty-eight, was represented as an aged man, and the artists in stained glass will now have to make him look more youthful.

Slim:—"There are over 3,000,000 pairs of ladies' silk hose manufactured a year."

Slam:—"Well, I don't see where they all go to."

IT ALL DEPENDS

"Could you love me, darling?" he whispered, with a tender, pleading look in his eyes, "if I had only one coat to my back?"

"I could," she replied, softly, as she nestled in his great, strong arms, "if I knew you had sacrificed the others to buy me a new dress."

SLIPPERY ROCKS

A quaintly-worded notice is often more effective than one framed in more official terms. At Aber Falls is a notice regarding the slippery condition of the rocks, making climbing dangerous. The notice concludes as follows:—

"In consequence of the above notice being disregarded, a stretcher is now kept at the cottage below the falls."

A LIBEL ON THE EAST

A famous impresario of Italian opera had arranged to open at Covent Garden about the middle of May; but, after having made his intention public, something caused him to alter his arrangements, and he announced the opening for the beginning of May.

The day his advertisement appeared he met the proprietor of a well-known "gaff" then situated in Whitechapel, who exclaimed:

"You have done a nice thing for me, making your season a fortnight earlier!"

"What difference can it make to you?" cried the West-ender. "Your audience won't patronize my theatre."

"No," replied the "gaffer"; "but they'll be outside it picking pockets!"

LIGHT THAT DOES NOT FAIL

A Volcanic Beacon in San Salvador Republic

The republic of San Salvador is the only goverment on earth that collects lighthouse fees on account of a volcano that it owns, and without the slightest cost of upkeep.

The volcanic beacon is about eight miles inland from the port of Acajutla, and its pillar of cloud by day and its fire sky by night are visible for many miles out to sea. It bursts forth every seven minutes, and is just as accurate as any revolving light that warns mariners of danger in any part of the world.

This volcano has been keeping up this seven-minutes' service of eruptions ever since anyone can remember. It is a favorite amusement of visitors to sit by the hour during the lazy afternoons, and, watch in hand, to time the eruptions till they tire of the occupation and fall asleep. No one has ever caught the volcano napping, however.

Every vessel that puts in at Acajutla has to pay its lighthouse fee. There is no other lighthouse than the volcano, but that is a sufficient excuse for the Government of Salvador to make a charge for its services. The explosions that accompany the eruptions sound like detonations of heavy charges of dynamite, but, fortunately, they are not sufficient to shake the ground perceptibly more than about a mile or two from the summit of the crater.

MOLLY ON THE MAKE

There never was such a baby!

Though father said it, who shouldn't, and mother said it, who shouldn't, and everybody said it but those who should—well, there never was!

"Molly my love," cried daddy, bouncing in upon his seven-year-old, "Uncle George has just arrived, and he's enraptured. He said 'There never was such a baby!' and he offered to buy her for $5 an ounce."

"You're not going to sell her, are you?" asked Molly, with wide-open eyes.

"No, my precious," cried the delighted father, embracing her affectionately over this show of proper sentiment.

"Because," resumed Molly, "she'll be heavier when she's older and'll fetch more!"

HUNTING WILD BEASTS WITH A CAMERA

Adventures in Taking Cinematograph Pictures in the Jungle.

The business of hunting wild beasts with a camera is attended by as much excitement and rather more danger than hunting them with the usual weapons. Two Englishmen who make a business of getting cinematograph pictures of the denizens of the jungle have had much success and enough thrilling experiences to give them something to talk about for the balance of their days.

They are Cherry Kearton and his brother Richard. Cherry Kearton is reported to be the only man who has photographed lions while they were being shot, speared or lassoed. To a writer for the Evening Standard he gave this account of one of his hunting trips:—

"One of my most memorable trips was in quest of a tiger. I obtained an introduction to the Sultan of Johore and asked him if he would shoot a tiger at 15 yards while I took the photograph. He refused, saying I should certainly be killed. I was willing to risk my camera and myself but he would not take part.

"I went along to Ceylon and explained my mission to the Maharaja of Mysore, who made out a traveling pass to facilitate my journey, and provided me with an elephant for the jungle. As time was pressing, I covered the first [illegible] miles with relays of horses, and the next day I was in a dense jungle. I sat 21 days on the elephant's back before I could get my tiger.

"There were marks of him to be seen, but the difficulty was to locate him. In the meantime I was hunting another very dangerous animal, the bison. The bison gave me eight days hard work on the elephant's back. This statement may seem strange, but it was very awkward to push through the jungle, and at times I was swept off the elephant by overhanging branches. In a tropical climate this is very trying, and fatiguing, too.

"At the end of the eighth day I got my bison at from 15 to 20 yards. The trackers never went more than four yards without looking for a tree as a means of escape. They could tell by examining the blades of grass how long it had been since the animal had passed that way.

"While I was after the bison I got about 50 elephants around me. The game ranger who accompanied me was scared less they should charge the tame elephant, as they had done on previous occasions with fatal results.

"I was very disappointed at not being able to get the tiger, and I determined to prolong my stay in the hope that success would at last reward my efforts. I had been in the jungle 20 days without seeing the beast, when I reluctantly decided to commence my return journey. A quarter of a mile from the village I saw traces of a bullock having been dragged in the direction of a tunnel formed out of [illegible] marks of the tiger as he had retreated backward, probably pulling the bullock by the nose. I crawled up the tunnel on my hands and knees with my revolver ready. It was very dark, and I had not gone far when I came upon part of the bullock's carcass freshly gnawed. Deeming it unsafe to penetrate further, I returned to the game ranger, who decided, as the beast was becoming a man-eater, that it should be destroyed.

"He obtained 300 men to act as drivers. I cut away the opening of the tunnel and waited developments behind a leafy screen. The tiger came toward me bellowing and grunting, and when he got opposite the screen he gave one of those fearful coughs which only the man who has been close to such a beast can appreciate. The tiger was 11 feet long, and was the biggest tiger the game ranger had ever seen. He told me he would not go through the same experience again for a thousand pounds, adding, 'I have done with this work.'

"The natives could not understand why I did not shoot the tiger. They expected to see bullets come out of the camera.

"It was decided to proceed to kill the beast and 15 men were selected to jump from behind the bushes and spear it. When the signal was given only three men obeyed, and one of these was clawed by the tiger. I was up a tree about eight yards away, and I kept my eye fixed on the beast.

"At last I shouted, and with another terrifying grunt he trotted off into the jungle. I covered the last 60 miles of my journey and took boat to England."

RACING IN GERMANY

It Has Appealed to the French in Late Years.

German racing has of late appealed to French owners, says a European correspondent, for the market in that country has been widely opened to French produce. The Prussian State Budget has just been voted, and contains a provision that every two years a first-class sire should be bought for the service of the State and private owners possessing a thoroughbred stud. The price to be given for such a suitable sire is fixed at $75,000 and each [illegible] that amount will be handed [illegible] Government buyers. A [illegible] f $20,000 has been made [illegible] good thoroughbred [illegible] bred stud while ano[illegible] been placed at th[illegible] Royal Grafits Stu[illegible] a couple of bro[illegible] understood that t[illegible] ous, so that [illegible] racing blood [illegible] d.

[illegible] obliging young parson was driving home one evening after making his pastoral calls, when he overtook a young woman of his congregation, the maid-of-all-work at a farm which he would pass, so he offered her a place in his carriage. The offer was gladly accepted and they chatted pleasantly all the way to the farm gate.

"Thank you, sir," she said as she got down.

"Don't mention it, my dear girl. Don't mention it," he told her politely.

"No, indeed, I won't," she assured him.

HOME HINTS

When Making Mustard, add a few drops of vinegar if you wish it to keep.

Warm Dish Covers as well as dishes if you want your dinner to be served really hot.

Turnip Peelings should always be well washed, then added to soups to which they impart a delicious flavor.

Spanish Onion Salad.—A cold boiled Spanish onion makes an excellent salad if sliced and dressed with oil and vinegar in the usual manner.

Flies in the Larder are a pest in summer. Begin early in the spring to sponge the windows twice a week with a weak solution of carbolic acid and water. If this is done regularly it will keep away flies.

To Cook Salt Fish Nicely it should be soaked in cold water the night before it is used, with a few spoonfuls of vinegar. Place it in cold water to cover, and gradually bring to the boil. Simmer for a quarter of an hour.

Mahogany Stain is made thus: Into an earthenware jar put one pint of linseed oil, one ounce of alkanet root, and one ounce of rose pink. Let it stand twenty-four hours, stirring occasionally. Rub it well into the wood with a woollen cloth.

Burn all Kitchen Waste as far as possible in the closed stove. When the fire is red draw the fuel towards the front bars, place the refuse at the back of the grate, and if necessary, a little coal over. Open damper, and the rubbish will be quickly destroyed without smell.

Eggs and Cheese.—Cut some small squares of toast, butter them thickly, and put on each a slice of hard boiled egg. Melt in a pan any scraps of cheese you may have, with a little milk. Season with pepper, salt, and made mustard. When smooth and thick, pour over the eggs and serve at once.

When Cooking Salt Meat, first wash it well in cold water, then place in a saucepan, cover with fresh cold water, and bring to the boil. Skim, and simmer gently till the joint is cooked.

Pastry Requires a sharp steady oven, where it can cook quickly. Careful watching is necessary, and a wise cook will test her oven with a piece of paper or thin slice of bread before commencing her work.

MOTHERS' MISTAKES

Don't Handicap Girls by Doing Things For Them

I know a mother, says a writer, who is so managing and capable that she never gives the girls a chance to show what they can do.

If one of them is going to make a blouse, she will say, "My dear, you'll only spoil the stuff; you'd better let me cut it out for you."

And it generally ends in mother making the blouse.

Or one of the girls will offer to help with the housekeeping. "Thank you, dear, but it's less trouble to do it myself; I know where everything is,' says the managing mistress. [illegible] thing is placing her girls at a serious disadvantage.

If they don't experiment and learn how to do things, how are they to know?

When they have homes of their own, and have to do things, it will possibly be a very serious thing for them to be so very incapable, and have to start learning duties they should by rights be proficient in.

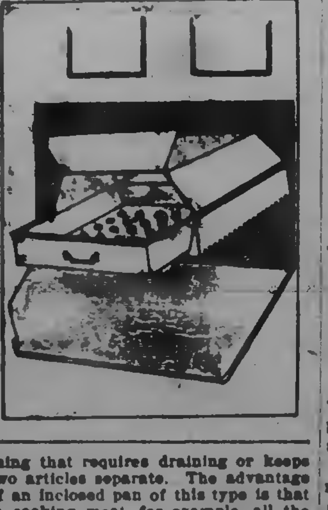
Don't make the mistake of handicapping the girls like that.

Let them have their share in the home duties, and, if they sometimes make mistakes, and even "spoil the stuff," the wise mother will comfort herself with the knowledge that it is all practice towards perfection.

CLOSED ROASTING PAN

Tray Slides In and Out and Cover Keeps the Flavor In

A combination pan that can be used either for roasting meat and potatoes or for baking bread has been invented by a Colorado man. The bottom portion is rectangular, and above it rises a slanting top like a mansard roof. A tray slides back and forth in the casing on slideways that run along the sides. The front end of this tray operates to close the lower half of the opening in the front end of the casing, and a hinged flap closes the upper half. Across the centre of the pan is a flat tray with perforations that allow the draining of liquid from anything that requires draining or keeps two articles separate. The advantage of an inclosed pan of this type is that in cooking meat, for example, all the flavor is kept in the pan instead of evaporating in steam, and the meat is done moister. Articles cooked in it require less attention than in an old-style utensil, too.



TAKING NO CHANCES

"Johnny," said the teacher, "this is the third time I have had to punish you this week. Why are you so naughty?"

"Because," answered the incorrigible youngster, "grandpa says the good die young, and I ain't taking any chances."

A MILLINERY THOUGHT

"They say that when an ostrich is surprised he hides his head in the sand."

"I wish to thunder he'd everlastingly hide his tail there," observed the man who had just settled a heavy millinery bill.

You Can't Cure Catarrh By Swallowing Drugs

COUGH SYRUP, TABLETS AND SPRAYS SICKEN THE STOMACH BUT DON'T REACH THE GERMS OF CATARRH—HENCE THEIR FAILURE TO HELP.

To cure an ailment in the throat or chest, to rout out Catarrh or Asthma, it is essential that the medicine be conveyed direct to the affected parts. This is why no other remedy has achieved such world-wide success as Catarrhozone, which alone can be breathed in one second to every air cell in the breathing organs. The healing vapors of Catarrhozone mix with the breath and descend through the throat, down the bronchial tubes, to the deepest air cells in the lungs—all parts are saturated with the rich piney essences that ease, heal and cure.

Catarrhozone has entirely displaced the old-fashioned remedies, such as cough syrups, sprays, tablets, and sedative powders. It contains none of the opium, chloral and drowsy narcotics so commonly found in liquid cough and catarrhal remedies.

Couldn't Breathe — "Catarrhozone" Cured.

"No one ever contracted a more obstinate attack of nasal catarrh than I suffered a month ago," writes Mr. G. E. Root, a well-known resident of Bridgetown, W.I. "My head ached terrifically, I sneezed about every three minutes, but still my nostrils were entirely closed and I couldn't breathe through them. Ten minutes inhaling Catarrhozone gave me a little relief, so I continued to use Catarrhozone every hour, and before the day was out I had improved. Catarrhozone quickly cured me. I am well ever since."

There is no remedy so certain and safe as Catarrhozone, but being a good remedy it is imitated. Beware of the substitutor. Large Catarrhozone lasts two months, price $1.00; smaller sizes 25c. and 50c. All reliable dealers or the Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N. Y., and Kingston, Canada.

MOSQUITOES THAT BARK

"When I was on the West Coast," said the old sailor, "the mosquitoes used to stand on the stones and bark."

"Great heavens!" ejaculated Pil[illegible]. "You don't mean it!"

"Yes, I do," replied the sailor. "They often get on the stones and bark of the trees!"

ORANGE MARMALADE

Select one orange and one lemon with a thin skin. Cut in slices and then in cubes. To this add six cupfuls of water. Let stand over night. Next morning boil twenty minutes, measure liquid, and to one cupful of mixture add one cupful of sugar. Boil evenly for one-half hour, or until it jells. This will make eight medium sized glasses.

Grape Sherbet

Two pounds Concord grapes, two lemons, one quart water, one pound [illegible] cheesecloth [illegible] washed grapes and mash thoroughly; squeeze out all the juice and add an equal amount of sugar, the lemon juice. Use sugar enough to make it quite sweet, then freeze.

FLESH FLIES

Can Do No Damage If Given No Place to Lay Their Eggs

When the sheep's wool becomes filthy and the skin irritated, an ideal condition is made for the work of the maggot fly. And when the maggots get a start they create a more and more friendly harbor for their kind as they work and increase in numbers under the wool. A sheep infected with maggots is a most pitiful sight, helpless against the parasites eating out its flesh until the sheep dies, its flesh gnawed out in a most cruel manner. For the sake of humanity, if for no other reason, sheep should be saved from much suffering.

These flies can do no damage if not given a suitable place to lay their eggs. Sheep should be watched carefully, especially in warm damp weather, and dirty tag locks or other filth clipped off and a little tar dabbed on if the skin is chafed. These maggots also get in their work under rams' horns. Indeed, a ram with heavy horns lying close to his head will hardly pass through a summer without infection unless the flies are kept away by putting some tar on the ram's head.

An infected sheep can be told by the fact that it refuses to eat, stands with its head down and most often by itself, and stamps its feet or jerks its head exactly as irritation by maggots would lead one to expect. The remedy is simple. Cut away the wool close. Clean out all maggots, using turpentine to wash them out. Smear the place thoroughly with tar. Then watch the sheep to see that the flies do not again start in the same place. Thoroughness in cleaning out the parasites is essential, for one left in will start the damage all over.

GOOD CHICKENS

Something to Keep them Busy—The Ideal Pen

Chickens that are penned up should have their houses cleaned out twice a week at least, and their runs dug up (to loosen the earth) once a week, which enables them to have a little exercise in the way of scratching. Their morning meal should consist of potato peelings and all scraps from the table, boiled down and thickened, after draining well, with barley meal, with a dash of pepper in, and when cooled down, given; their water vessels washed and filled. For mid-day meal, a good size cabbage, hung to allow them to get round it, and high enough for them to peck at, which keeps them busy for some considerable time, and, for a change, a swede hung is very good, too. For their last meal give barley, a little wheat, or darry, and occasionally, small Indian corn. A box kept in the run, with all fine ashes saved from the house on washing days, if sifted well, gives them a bath. A handful of peppercorns thrown in to them about once a month helps to keep them in good condition, and their houses should be limewashed occasionally.

CLEANING MEN'S CLOTHES

The Best Mixture for the Removal of Grease Spots

The cleaning of a dust-laden old coat reduces the average woman to despair, as it is hard work, and the easiest way to clean a coat or pair of pants is to pin them to the clothes-line and beat the dust out with a cane or limber switch. Then lay them out on a table and brush with a stiff brush. A coat, vest or pair of pants that is not much soiled will come out of a good gasoline bath looking like new. First brush and shake the garment until it seems perfectly free of dust, then remove the spots and put the garment in a wash-bowl or a large bucket and pour enough gasoline over the garment to saturate it thoroughly, then cover the bucket to keep the fluid from evaporating and leave it for two hours. The safest way to use the gasoline is in the open air. Clean the garments by pressing and squeezing between the hands, and hang over the line.

There is nothing better for removing grease spots from the cloth than a fluid composed of four parts of alcohol to one part of ammonia. When the garments are soiled enough to be washed, remove the buttons and baste the button-holes together; then put them in a strong pearline suds and let them remain for half an hour; then wash clean through this suds and put them through a lighter suds and rinse through clear water. There is nothing better than this suds for washing garments of any color, and it leaves the cloth soft and clean, and then it is much easier to wash a garment that is much soiled than to try to remove the spots from the fabric, and, after they are washed and pressed, the buttons can be sewed in place and the buttonholes washed over again if necessary.

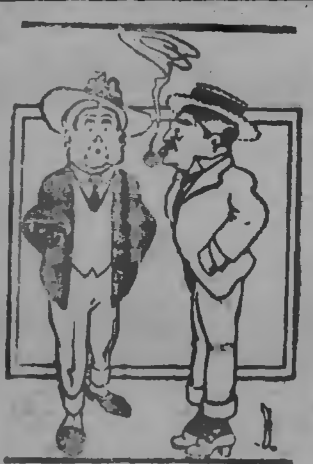
When pants are beginning to get baggy at the knees, turn them wrong side out, lay one leg at a time on the ironing table, lay a wet cloth all over the knee portions and press until the cloth is dry, then turn right side out, fold in the centre and press from top to bottom over the damp cloth.

FISH PONDS ON THE FARM

That relief from the high prices of meats might be found in having fish ponds on farms, is the opinion expressed by an Omaha, Neb., paper. "Years ago," it says, "when times were not so good and when people were not enjoying the degree of prosperity that now seems to prevail throughout the land, there was great interest taken in stocking the small and larger streams with fish from the state and government fisheries. Thousands of farm fish ponds were built all over the country, in all states, and the commercial idea prevailed in the construction and stocking of these ponds. This was when the fish pond on the farm was viewed as an asset in the advertising and sale of the farm."

Partisan Politicians Portrayed.

Yesterday a well known local business man was passing the George street grocery, managed by Mr. Fred Walker. On the display bench outside, was a fifteen pound salmon trout. That fish had an eye as big as a 25 cent piece, and like the eyes in an oil painting, its glazed dead look seemed to follow one viewing it. The local business man's attention was caught by that fishy eye. He remarked to a Times reporter walking with him, "the eye of that fish reminds one of the stony glare to be seen in the eyes of a local "partisan" politician I am



STUNG

"What were the provisions of your uncle's will?"

"I was to have all his cash after the payment of his just debts."

"How generous! What did he leave?"

"Just debts."

RUNNING THE OTHER WAY

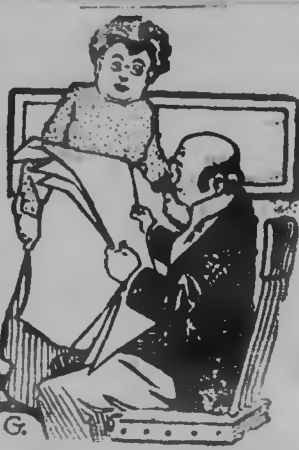
"When I was coming home last night I saw a man skulking along in the shadow," said Miss Skerry. "Oh, how I ran!"

"An' couldn't you catch him?" inquired her little brother, innocently.

ARRANGING PICKLES

Young Wife:—"Arthur, dearest, how do they arrange these pickles in the bottle so nicely?"

Young Husband:—"They pile the pickles up, Petsy, and then blow the bottle around them."



ONE OF THE SYMPTOMS

"I am sure our Teddy is in love."

"Nonsense. He is only a youngster."

"I know, but he has started to wash his face before going out at nights."

LOUISA BECOMES ENGAGED

Beyond all doubt the net was slowly closing round the Draysons, for the result of Louisa communicating with Robert Moston, and Robert communicating with Milburn, was that now all three knew certain highly-suspicious circumstances which brought them, though the Draysons little dreamed it, perilously near the truth.

"No news; nothing more than what I told you last," Louisa reported to her lover. "I've been keeping my eyes and my ears open, but they haven't let anything drop."

Robert put his arm round her waist, a habit which lately had been growing upon him.

HORSE AND HORSE

"Your dog howls every time time I sing. Why don't you stop him?"

"I will. But I didn't know what really happened."

"What do you mean?"

"Why, I thought you were trying to spite us by singing every time our dog howled."

HER INMOST THOUGHTS

Mr. Staylate:—"Do you know, I believe I can read your inmost thoughts."

Miss Keen (stifling a yawn):—"I'm sorry for that, Mr. Staylate, if you are sensitive."

WHEN TO BE AN ANGEL

Mother:—"You have been a very naughty child. And only last night you prayed to be an angel."

Bobby:—"Aw, I dowanna be one till after I'm dead."

THE NICE BOYS

Ethel (coming out on piazza):—"What! only you here? Where have all the nice boys gone?"

Freddie (bitingly):—"They've gone off strolling with all the nice girls."

MAN AND ATTACK

The better the man, the more an attack on him is enjoyed.

MISTAKEN APPLAUSE

Many a man mistakes the echo of his own voice for applause.

Former Local Centenarian Dies.

A former resident of Fowler's Corners, Mr. John Stinson, who had many friends in the then town of Peterborough, and whose first home in Canada after emigrating from Ireland, was between the present city and Bridgenorth, passed away recently in North Verulam. He had exceeded the three score and ten limit by thirty years. In 1878 Mr. Stinson moved to Verulam having purchased what is now known as Brandeston and the adjoining property. Four sons and three daughters survive him. He was a life-long member of the Presbyterian church.

WOMAN'S PLUCK IN A SHOE SHOP

Continues the Business After Her Husband's Death—Finally Meets Success

In a downtown building there is a shoe shop [illegible] different from many others of [illegible] places, in that it is light, [illegible] free from musty odors, says the New York Evening Post. Its chief title to fame, however, is the [illegible] run by a woman, a typical New Englander, tall, spare, with [illegible] about the jaw and [illegible] of humor about the eyes [illegible] made a brave fight of [illegible] business in competition with men who have been a'l their [illegible] places and force her way [illegible] and today she told the story of her struggles.

"Well, I've been here ten years [illegible]" she said, "and I'm alive yet [illegible] they told me I would not [illegible] very long if I took up [illegible] and tried to run it, but I [illegible] at it in just that way, and here I am. I worked with my husband [illegible] while he was sick for a [illegible] of years and I ran the shop [illegible] away winters. He never thought I could make it go, and he was surprised, I tell you, to see how well I had done.

"[illegible] started when he was [illegible] sick. He had been in the business in Nassau Street for twelve years before we came to Fulton, and then he began to have throat trouble. [illegible] that was what I tried to think [illegible], I couldn't believe it was consumption. However, when he came back from Florida, where he'd gone the first winter, and then had to go up to Saranac and Liberty in the [illegible] the same thing over [illegible], why I knew that [illegible] to lose him. Of course, all these things that cost a lot of money [illegible] with specialists, and one [illegible] and another, and by the time he [illegible] there wasn't much of a balance [illegible].

"[illegible] my mind I'd have to [illegible] I might as well keep on the business. I said to myself that [illegible] even if I did not [illegible]. I told the young man who was our foreman that he had [illegible] me, and he agreed [illegible] you believe it, only [illegible] I started in for myself [illegible] my big customers left [illegible] men, would do the [illegible] cheaper. Wasn't [illegible] treat a woman who had [illegible] a husband? I tell you [illegible] would just like to put a [illegible] under their feet and walk on [illegible]. But they can't do that with me.

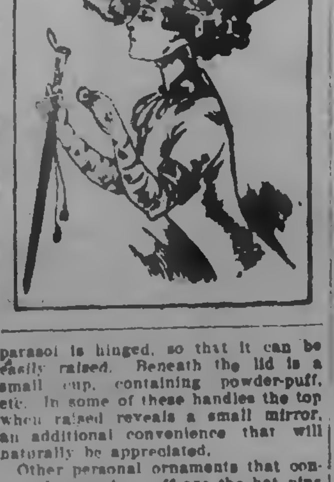
"[illegible]," she went on, "things looked pretty [illegible] after the first year. I knew something about a shoe, you see, [illegible] was married I was earning $15 a week in a shoe factory in Lynn. But this business was such a complicated [illegible] nearly drove me crazy [illegible] you know. But then, as I [illegible] said to my husband: 'If I go crazy they can put me in a sanitarium.' However, I didn't, and every year things looked brighter. Now I've got a good trade and lots of old customers, and some day I guess I'll have as nice a business as you'd want to see. I keep eight men and a foreman, myself, and a boy in this shop, and that's pretty good for a woman, now, isn't it?"

PUFF BOX IN PARASOL

Handle Also Contains Lip Salve or Rouge

Men as a rule delight in criticising the frailties of the weaker sex. They especially find amusement in alluding to the pleasure women take in using powders and lip salves. A peep into a woman's carrying bag will generally reveal a tiny powder puff or some other equally efficient beautifier. When opportunity offers they slyly slip the puff out and use it.

Just imagine how infinitely more convenient to have these little adjuncts stored in the handle of a parasol where they can be quickly reached without being noticed. Parasols and umbrellas with these novel appurtenances are now obtainable, because of the thoughtfulness of an up-to-date inventor. The top of the handle of the parasol is hinged, so that it can be easily raised. Beneath the lid is a small cup, containing powder-puff, etc. In some of these handles the top when raised reveals a small mirror, an additional convenience that will naturally be appreciated.



Other personal ornaments that conceal the powder puff are the hat pins with large heads in which a puff can be accommodated under a hinged top, pendants and watch bracelets. In many of the watch bracelets, which are of course expensive, the puff is concealed beneath the watch in a little cavity just the right size and shape.

"She," at the Princess.

The Princess Theatre certainly seems to be satisfying its thousands of patrons, if large attendance and good pictures are any proof. For Friday and Saturday Rider Haggart's great romance entitled "She" is show by two complete reels. Every one has read that work of mystery and adventure in the wilds of Africa. This great work has its foundation on or near the supposed ruins of King Solomon's mines. This is a splendid opportunity to view African scenery and also to witness enacted in life, the wonderful story of "She."

MONEY AFFAIRS OF YOUR CHILD

[illegible] of Giving Them a [illegible] Allowance and Cultivating Thrift

[illegible] a mother took [illegible] popular picnic park. [illegible] of children; they [illegible] at frequent intervals [illegible] with requests for [illegible] rides, merry-go-round [illegible] and all the things [illegible] essential to their [illegible] occasions. When [illegible] up at night, she [illegible] to find how much [illegible] spent.

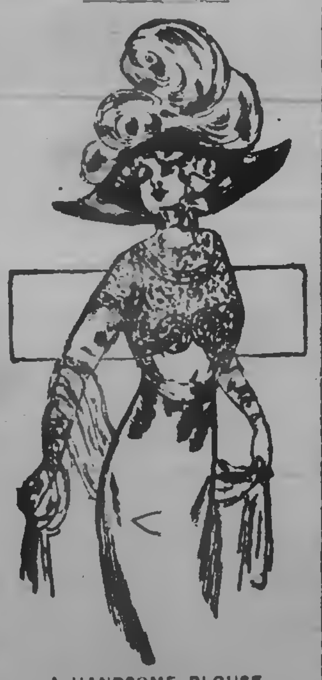
[illegible] were going to the [illegible] gave to each child a [illegible] in his own pocketbook. [illegible] that this money was [illegible] and when it was spent [illegible] have more. They considered [illegible] spending of money carefully [illegible] consulting with their mother. They [illegible] different things, [illegible] decided which they would rather [illegible]. When the money was gone, there was no coaxing or whining.

The mother decided, too, that each child should have a weekly allowance, instead of coming to her with their little wants. The children were five and six years old, and they were given five cents a week each. The first week the money was all spent the first afternoon. They bought some marbles, and the rest went for candy. On Sunday they were sadly distressed because they had no coppers for Sunday school. Mother did not supply any, and they never forgot again. In a very short time they wanted things that cost more than five cents, and so they learned to deny themselves and save for a definite object. After that, at mother's suggestion, they put a nickel in the bank each week—that bank that was to take them through college by and by. Of course they made many mistakes, but the parents argued that it was better to make the mistakes with the coppers than with the dollars after awhile. When the other children first learned that they had money they used to coax them into foolish expenditures, but after a few disappointments in getting things that they had planned, they learned to resist this temptation.

By the suggestion that can always be given in stories, the mother gradually trained them to buy less candy and satisfy their appetites with some harmless indulgence. When the children were a year older, their allowance was increased.

In one of the recent magazines, a writer argued against giving children an allowance, saying that it gave them the feeling that the world owed them a living. In my experience I would draw an inference exactly opposite. The child who is accustomed to go to his parents for [illegible] whenever he asks for them from his parents would be very likely to get this irresponsible feeling, but one who has a definite sum to depend upon, and knows that he must use it wisely, develops a sense of thrift. The child in a well-conducted home always has some little duties, and, while he should regard them as a labor of love and not feel that he is specifically paid for them, yet they make him, to the extent of his ability, a part of the working household, and thus give him a share of its earnings.

One mother wisely phrased it, "This is your salary, because you are [illegible] dear little boy." Zella Margaret [illegible]ters.



A HANDSOME BLOUSE

The semi-made kimona blouse is a boon to the woman who desires handsome effects but cannot afford the finished garments. All-over lace is one of the favorite materials for the separate blouse, as well as chiffon, and an unusually dainty design which brings out the beauty of the lace is shown in the sketch. The bolero effect is very smart and the arrangement of the band trimmings new and effective.

AN ORANGE PLANT

A lovely plant, suitable for window or table decoration, can be raised from the pipe of a sweet orange. The pipe should be taken out when the orange is very ripe, and sown in an ordinary flower-pot, filled with light soil. In a few weeks shoots will appear above the surface and develop into a fine hardy plant, which will remain green both summer and winter.

Sleigh Upset and Horse Ran Away.

Yesterday morning as a lady and gentleman were driving up George street, at the corner of Smith street, the cutter runners caught in the street car tracks and the vehicle was overturned, throwing the occupants bodily on to the street. The horse dashed away for over a mile out the Mudlake road, scattering the robes, breaking the harness as well as damaging the cutter. The occupants of the cutter were not injured, although they suffered a rather severe shaking up.

CLERGYMAN'S HOME BURNT THRO' SPITE

Fort Worth, Texas, March 6.—The mystery of the alleged war against the Rev. J. Frank Norris stirred the State of Texas Saturday when his home was partly burned in an apparently incendiary fire, which imprisoned himself, his wife, and his two children on an upper floor, in the early morning hours. They were rescued with difficulty.

Norris, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Fort Worth, has taken an active share in the crusade which drove race track gambling out of Texas a few years ago. Since then Sunday observance violations have been his particular targets.

WORLD'S SEVEN BIBLES

The Great Sacred Books That Are Known to the World

There are seven great sacred books known to the world. The word "bible" means simply "book," and is here used to denote a great standard moral work which has come to be regarded as sacred. The seven bibles are

The Holy Scriptures, or Holy Bible of the Christians
The Koran, of the Mohammedans.
The Tripitka, of the Buddhists.
The Five Kings, of the Chinese
The Zendavesta, of the Parsees.
The Three Vedas, of the Hindus.
The Eddas, of the Scandinavians.

The Koran is a comparatively modern work, dating from the seventh century. It contains many quotations from the Holy Scriptures, and, in common with most of the Sacred Books of the world, teaches much the same moral lessons as our own Bible, though differently expressed. The Five Kings, the Three Vedas, and the Zendavesta, all date from about the eleventh century before Christ, as nearly as can be ascertained, and so are of great antiquity. With regard to the Five Kings, the word "King" here signifies a warp, or piece of cloth with which a book is bound, and has no reference to monarchs.

"Zendavesta" means "Living Word written in the Zend language." It is the sacred book of the followers of Zoroaster, an ancient philosopher.

BITS FROM THE NEW BOOKS

Knowledge is the source of all goodness; ignorance the source of all evil. —"Britishers in Britain."

As long as the world is what it is, as long as men and girls are what they are, attractive women will receive attentions from men as of right. —"Laidlaw's Wife."

Proverbs have been termed the "hob-nailed truths of the people," and they certainly are merciless in treading on tender points which ordinary language is inclined to avoid.—"At the Back of Things."

The true genius can no more help exercising his special capacity than a bird can resist flying.—"Oh, for an Angel!"

It's always your sentimentalist who cuts the poorest figure in this life and then blames some outside agency.—"The Magic of the Hill."

When we envy a rich man we call him a financier; when we despise a poor one we call him a fool. It is as difficult to admire success heartily as it is to pity failure sincerely.—"A Kingdom of Dreams."

If the poor man fails it is never to hope again.—"The Open Window."

ADVERTISE IN THE TIMES.

THE BEGUM OF BHOPAL

Her Highness of East India Visited London in State

Amongst the many interesting visitors who visited London this year was one of the most powerful of East Indian potentates in the person of her Highness the Begum of Bhopal. Her Highness brought a large retinue, including a native doctor, several cooks and an astrologer. The Princess (who is a reigning Sovereign) wore a beautiful silken robe and long veil over her face. A special train was brought to the pier, and her landing was from a gangway which immediately faced the door of the saloon carriage. One eye-witness of a great Durbar held in India tells of seeing at that wonderful and gorgeous ceremony, her Highness the Begum standing between two huge native Princes, Jeypore and Joudphore, who were magnificently got up with fall skirts (petticoats he called them) of folds innumerable of soft cream color. From the waist up the garments were of richest embroidered velvets and silks, and literally, with their high turbans, massed with superb jewels, the splendid scimitars also glittering with precious stones; but the little woman, who had only a few above her in rank, the Sovereign of an independent province, with a gorgeous retinue, was most simply attired in trousers! The pajama-like garments of dull, shaded stripes, the bodice and short jacket being being also of sombre color, her black hair done quite plainly with a short silken shawl draped over head and shoulders and remarkably few jewels, only a few showing in her hair and round her throat. The Begum's rightful place was apparently between the two great Princes, and it was a most curious sight to see the huge Maharatto draw himself up to his stately height, advance, and bow low and gracefully to his Sovereign's representative; then retiring make way for the Begum, who, small though she was, showed no less dignity in her obeisance; and after her Highness came the second of the huge Princes, all eyes being fixed on such an unusual trio, even in that magnificent and inspiring assemblage.

FOR DOING NOTHING

Some Fat Salaries That Were Easily Earned

Uncle Sam has been "getting a move" on him lately, and, as the result of exercising his lynx eyes, has been successful in saving $180,000 a year of the public money which has hitherto been paid to people in the way of salaries for doing nothing. For decades past there have been some snug little jobs connected with the House of Representatives. Apparently, however, some Paul Pry discovered these sinecures, a committee investigated them, and their report has provided one of the most interesting documents produced by the American Parliament for a long time. One striking example of the "waste of public salary funds," as a chairman of the committee describes it, was the discovery that a thirteen-year-old girl, the daughter of the chief doorkeeper of the Congress, was on the pay-roll as "clerk of the doorkeeper" at a salary of $1,300 per annum, and an extra months' pay each year as a vacation gratuity. And although they made the closest investigations, the committee were quite unable to discover exactly what the functions of this minor official were.

Then there were thirty-eight extra policemen authorized when, during the Spanish-American War, it was reported that there was a plot to dynamite the Capitol, who were still on the pay-roll, costing annually $39,000. Two telegraph operators, drawing $1,400 each, and assigned to a wire long ago discontinued, were also still on the pay-sheet. By abolishing the salaries of employes of the "clerks' document room," which room was itself abolished sixteen years ago, $6,000 per annum has been saved, and an almost equal sum by stopping the pay of employes designated at "attendants in the library," the library having been removed many years ago from the Capitol.

FOR ASSISTANCE OF EMIGRANTS

British Society That Will Advance Part of Necessary Funds—Matrimonial Bureau

New impetus to emigration from Britain to her overseas dominions has been provided by the Empire Emigration Society, an undertaking organized to assist those who wish to emigrate but are unable to do so for lack of funds. Lord Ridley and Lord Stanhurst are actively interested in this society and act as trustees of its funds. Not the ill nourished and poverty stricken but the able bodied with some savings to their credit are the class of emigrant to whom chances are being offered. Soon after it was established, the Empire Emigration Society had over 1,500 people on its books with $10,000 at their disposal, who were anxious to save the balance in order to win through to hoped for prosperity in Canada, Australia or New Zealand.

The intending emigrants have to open an account with the Society with a minimum deposit of four dollars. Each subsequent payment must not be less than one dollar. As soon as the depositor has paid in half the necessary amount his passage is booked and arrangements made to supply him with employment when he arrives at his destination. Every class of worker is dealt with, and steps are taken to help emigrants to follow their own callings overseas. Typical of the variety of applicants in touch with the Society are four cases the secretary selected at random. A nurse, who desires to go to British Columbia has enough money to pay her passage, but is in need of advice as to the best means of going; a stonemason, who means to emigrate as soon as he can raise sufficient funds and who has paid a first instalment of seven dollars; a widow, who is an expert dressmaker, and hopes to have saved enough by the end of June to go out to Canada; a doctor with some capital who wishes to know of a colony where he may practice his profession and at the same time give his two sons a start in farming.

The Duke of Marlborough recently gave a broad hint to the surplus women of England to go to the dominions beyond the seas where men were waiting for wives. Said the Duke: "There are a million more women than men in England, and there are a million more men than there are women in the dominions." So, indirectly, the Empire Emigration Society is playing the part of marriage bureau for Canadian bachelors, and domestic helps all over the country are becoming infected with the travel fever after dreaming [illegible] congenial careers in new lands.

FAMOUS FOLKS

A GROTESQUE OFFERTORY

Mengo Cathedral, in Uganda, which was recently destroyed by lightning, was probably the largest edifice in Central Africa, being capable of containing nearly 5,000 people. It was consecrated about six years ago, and an offertory of grotesquely varied gifts was collected on the occasion. This consisted of 13 cows, four goats, 125 eggs, [illegible] fowls, [illegible] cowrie shells, and a [illegible]. The cows, for lack of room, were not taken inside the Cathedral, but the goats were led up to the altar and presented to the bishop, while the fowls were brought in big bamboo crates.

MELANCHOLY IN FLOWERS

Curious, indeed, the doom assigned to two of the fairest of the spring flowers, for if primroses are forsaken, the violet is a nun. Perhaps this atmosphere of gentle melancholy increases the attention inspired by these favorite flowers, which seem dearer far to humankind than such rivals as the brilliant marsh marigold and the dangerous aconite.—Black and White.

A Blacklister Fined.

At yesterday's police court, James Wallace, one of the Indian Listers, was assessed $10 for having dallied too often with his old enemy. He was given ten days in which to settle. He explained that a stranger invited him to share the contents of a 25 cent flask. These mysterious strangers who carry flasks round to give drinks to other strangers are hard to find except by black-listed men.

THE CLIMBING ROSE

Points to be Observed in the Cultivation of This Flower

There are climbing roses that will bloom continuously from June until the end of October. But it is just the past score years that have witnessed this remarkable development of climbing roses. Before that, the varieties most common were not at all hardy, their flowers were not nearly so large nor so beautiful as those of to-day. But twenty years ago someone introduced the memorial rose, and about the same time the crimson rambler, a hardy, showy, climbing rose, with flowers in clusters, came over from China and aroused great interest among horticulturists. The question arose whether it could not be combined with the memorial, for the crimson rambler, though strong and bearing beautiful flowers, had nevertheless many defects which were absent in the memorial. The grafting was done and successfully. New hybrids were produced, which combined hardiness, abundance of bloom, rapid growth and grace of form, with great resistance to disease and insects. It was the beginning of a new era in climbing roses. The new roses spread everywhere, and rose-growers were enthusiastic over the results of the experiment. Other combinations were attempted with success and we have the results to-day in the multiplicity of lovely climbing rose vines that make beautiful so many gardens.

There are three groups of the climbing roses, the multiflora, which bloom early in June only, the prairie roses, heavy in flower and with great green foliage, and, most important of all, the memorial groups, which flowers all summer and often until the frost has come. Nearly everyone knows one variety of the memorial group, the Dorothy Perkins. It is much like the crimson rambler, save that its flowers are pink, its foliage is thick and glossy, and it is altogether a very desirable variety to cultivate.

In growing climbing roses the secret of success is simply good soil. The earth can hardly be too rich nor the trench too deep. If strong plants are bought at the outset and they are planted in good soil and well watered, success is almost absolutely certain. The only harm possible might come from insects, but these may be guarded against by judicious spraying.

Fair Directors Pay John Bolton.

The directors of the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition have paid practically a total of $200 in settlement of the various claims arising out of the injuries to John Bolton, Jr., who was bitten by a trained bear at the fair last September. Dr. Greer's account was $70.00. Dr. Bennet and Goodwill's fees were $50 and the hospital bill amounted to $11. Mr. Bolton receives only a fraction of the total claim.

Baseball Magnate Coming.

The provisional directors of the Peterborough Ball Club, Limited, as noted in yesterday's issue, met Wednesday night and after the question of the managerial position for the local club had been discussed, it was decided to telegraph "Old Folks" Templin, and have him come to the city. He wired an answer yesterday stating that he would be here in the course of a couple of days.

Chink Has Eye in Black.

Talking of the Yellow Peril! On Wednesday a scrap took place in a local Chinese restaurant. Had about four corks remained in as many bottles of whiskey, one of the waiters in the aforesaid restaurant would not have as he has an eye in deep mourning. Those who took Canada's curse were white and started the row.

Sidewalks to Be Taken Up.

At the town council meeting in Lindsay on Tuesday night, Reeve Baldwin suggested that the wooden sidewalks should be torn up, as they were dangerous and the town could not afford to put down new walks. If that progressive town goes back to cattle trails there is something not only anachronous but contradictory to Lindsay's history of the past few years.

For High Class Printing.

The Times yesterday received what is probably the finest lot of script type that ever came to Peterborough. We are now prepared to print the handsomest and most up-to-date society stationery, wedding invitations, calling cards, etc. that the printers' art can supply. Nothing better could be produced in the largest cities of the world.

Local Enterprise In Insurance.

A local citizen was yesterday introduced to a Peterborough Insurance Agent whom he had not met before. In conversation, it developed that the Insurance Agent had recently returned from Alberta. The local citizen has relatives in that far Western Province. To the surprise of the latter the Insurance Agent showed how he held life insurance policies on four of the local citizen's friends. This is how Peterborough [illegible]

Local Detective Reverses History.

A local citizen yesterday remarked to a Times reporter [illegible] that a detective does some stunt to conceal his identity. A local detective has reversed conditions. This brilliant officer, at whose personal efforts was due the capture of a lot of pickpockets and other diver arrests of wrong doers, has shaved off his moustache and has thus concealed his identity. The Times reporter a few minutes later met this local officer, and saw that his former communicant was justified in his remarks.

Farmer's Dog Turned on Him.

Yesterday afternoon a bull terrier, of a sort, and a collie dog entered into an argument on Water street. The bull was without seconds, whilst the owner of the collie, a husky farmer from Ennismore was on the spot. Just as the bull got busy with his jaws on the collie's north hind leg, the farmer tried to save the guardian of his flock. Instead of the bull terrier resenting the farmer's action, his own collie turned and made a grab at his owner's leg. Fortunately the collie's teeth missed both flesh and muscle, but made a ventilation in the farmer's trousers about five inches square.

Local Grocer Gets Experience.

In this city is a grocer, in fact there are a number of grocers. The grocer, this tale tells of has his store on George street. Shortly after he had sifted the sand out of his sugar yesterday morning, and saw that the scales balanced to give customers 17 ounces to the pound, a stranger entered the shop. The stranger said that the wife of a prominent citizen, recently deceased had fallen down stairs and broken her back. The stranger wanted 60 cents with which to send a telegram to relatives in Alberta. The grocer handed over the money, as the stranger stated that he was a neighbour, and happened to be short of change at the time. The result need not be told. The stranger got the change, and the dispenser of granulated sugar and salt cod fish got the experience.

The Parks Beautiful Yesterday.

The City Parks yesterday morning were like dreams of beauty. The usual unsightly bare gaunt limbs of the trees had, over night, been covered by Jack Frost with a garb of frozen loveliness. As the rays of old Sol came over the eastern horizon, and filtered through the frost-covered tree boughs, a thousand prismatic colors danced from limb to limb. The slight breeze stirring, caused particles of the frozen mist to fall. As this gentle shower of white passed through the dancing rays of the sun, a scene long to remember was enjoyed by those fortunate enough to witness it. Victoria Park was particularly beautiful. A Philistine, as far as the esthetic is concerned, had his attention called to Victoria Park's beauty. With a grunt and a growl he said, "Pretty? Humph! I'd a darn sight sooner see one bunch of lilac blossoms than all your frost. It makes me think of coal bills and chillblains!"

Garbage By-law Is Needed.

Whilst Peterborough is dumping the contents of her sewers into the Otonabee River, and paving thousands of dollars annually for carting garbage away from our homes and hotels, the new born town of Haileybury has installed an up-to-date incinerator plant. If a little backwoods town like Haileybury can, and does, put in such a plant, why should a city of nearly 20,000 population, be content to have garbage simmering and festering in the yards right under windows where our citizens eat and sleep. Let Peterborough pass a garbage by-law and a drastic one at that. Surely a few mills on the taxation of the city is cheaper than an epidemic that garbage might easily create. This is apart altogether from the question of flies. Flies are now acknowledged by all the leading experts, to be a great thoroughfare for the transmission of disease. Cut out, eliminate, reduce the garbage, and our city can, figuratively speaking, snap its fingers at the doctors. In this connection, no offence is meant to the grand God-gifted medical profession, and their splendid mission. All we want is to employ and pay our doctors for their work in healing such troubles as human nature is prone to, but we do not want a permanent bait hung out, in the garbage pails, for diseases to give the medical men overtime work. Let us have a garbage by-law.

A WOMAN DOCTOR

Was Quick to Discover What Was Doing the Mischief.

A lady tells of a bad case of coffee poisoning (tea is equally harmful, because it contains caffeine—the drug found in coffee) and tells it in a way so simple and straightforward that literary skill could not improve it.

"I had neuralgic headaches for 12 years," she says, "and have suffered untold agony. When I first began to have them I weighed 140 pounds, but they brought me down to 110.

"I went to many doctors and they gave me only temporary relief. So I suffered on, till one day, a woman doctor advised me to drink Postum. She said I looked like I was coffee poisoned.

"So I began to drink Postum, and gained 15 pounds in the first few weeks and am still gaining, but not so fast as at first. My headaches began to leave me after I had used Postum about two weeks—long enough, I expect to get the coffee poison out of my system.

"Now that a few months have passed since I began to use Postum, I can gladly say that I never know what a neuralgic headache is like any more, and it was nothing but Postum that relieved me.

"Before I used Postum I never went out alone; I would get bewildered and would not know which way to turn. Now I go alone and my head is as clear as a bell. My brain and nerves are stronger than they have been for years." Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont.

"There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

GROUND FLOOR ON OIL MEANS WEALTH

England and her industries are practically paralysed, because, owing to the present strike, her coal supply is cut off. In both the United States and Canada, and in many countries of South America, the same business paralysis would inevitably ensue should the present supply of oil both crude and refined, and the by-products were stopped. Ships, both mercantile and man-of-war, would remain fast at their anchorages as the boilers would be cold. The owners of automobiles, both of the "joy ride" and the dray classes, would have to keep their garage doors locked, if the supply of oil were eliminated. This all proves conclusively that Oil! Oil! Oil! is absolutely essential in modern life. This accounts for the fact that most of the big fortunes of to-day have their foundation either in oil or oil-lands. A common expression applicable to all lines of business, is "He has struck oil." The origin of this saying was the finding of crude oil on one's property. The man who finds oil in paying quantities is lucky and rich. The next best thing to finding oil on your land, particularly if you don't own land, is to get in on the ground floor with those owning oil lands. There is a company owning 5200 acres of oil lands on Graham Island, B.C. A glance at the big advertisement in this issue will convince you that the Otard Bay Oil & Coal Co. have possession of this vast tract of land, and that the land gives every promise of becoming one of the greatest oil producing properties in the world. It would pay anyone seeking an investment for funds in either large or small amounts to fully investigate this proposition. To get in, as noted above, on the ground floor in a good oil property means quicker and better returns for money than any other form of investment. For full particulars write Messrs. Galloway & Garman, 134 Hastings St., Vancouver, B.C.

is of more importance than assessment or taxation rates. It seems that the proposed health act divides the Province into "Health Districts," thus doing away with local boards of health. Mr. Editor, with all due deference to Hon. Mr. Hanna, and his wide knowledge of conditions regarding health, I do not agree with this most accomplished Minister of the Crown in this regard. Of course the Act provides that physicians are compelled to notify the authorities of all cases of infectious diseases. Is not the old saying "An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure" well founded? The representatives of the Ontario Health Department, whilst, admittedly anxious to serve the public interest are, as I read the proposed Act, only to be casual visitors to the various municipalities under their charge. Is it in reason to suppose that these "Health District" officials, no matter how keen for prevention of disease, can or could be as fully posted on local sanitary and health conditions as are the various local boards of health? Can these gentlemen, if so appointed, be expected to know what is going on everywhere? Could they possibly know, in time to prevent chance of contagion of a sewer pipe emptying into a couple of residential cellars. Could they get the news in time to clean out and disinfect a well into which a dog has been drowned? Could they? But there are a thousand matters that a local board of health, right on the spot, immediately in possession of advance information, could deal with whilst letters were winging their way to the district inspectors. In writing this I offer no adverse criticism on the government's plan, but I seriously consider that, in so important a matter as Health, after duly considering every argument both pro and con, that present Health conditions are best for the community. Another point for consideration in this respect, if you will allow me a few more lines, is the personal of the Sanitary Inspector said to be appointed for this city. This nomination should provide, not so much a big sturdy man as a man with, at least a superficial knowledge of sewerage, the theory of germs, and a sufficient idea of infection, its causes and a smattering of the principles of disinfection.

The Company's property consists of 240 acres of patented and proven OIL-BEARING LAND, situated in King's County, California, east of the croppings.

In this particular location there are no dry holes. Many companies in Coalinga have the same capitalization or greater than that of the Dominion Oil Company, have control of only 20, 40 or 80 acres, and even these companies are making big money for their shareholders. Compared with them, the holdings of the Dominion Oil Company are immense, and when developed and producing oil, should be worth Millions of Dollars. The Company's well has been drilled to a depth of 2180 feet.

The Canadian Coalinga Company, which adjoins the Dominion Oil Company's property on the north, have their well down about 3000 feet, at which depth the oil came in, and is now producing 7500 barrels per day, which means an income of $8,250.00 per day, and their stock is selling at $20.00 per share. This well is only a short distance from the one now being drilled by the Dominion Oil Company. Mr. G. W. Warner, who has charge of the Dominion Oil Company's development work and who is without doubt one of the best authorities on oil, predicts that with from 100 to 600 feet further drilling, the Dominion Oil Company will strike the same flow, and he believes that the Company will get an enormous flow of the light oil, for which there is a ready market at from $1.10 per barrel up.

The Directors of the Dominion Oil Company are all shrewd, practical and successful business men, noted for their integrity. They stand for Honest Effort, Honest Purpose and Capable Management, and their selection of the 240 acres in the Coalinga Oil Field, which is said to be the greatest oil field in the world, manifests their judgment. From this field over 1,250,000 barrels are being produced per month. In the south field, where the Dominion is located, the oil is of high gravity, it being of the finest quality, and commanding $1.10 per barrel at the well, and is acknowledged the Money-Making Marvel of the Age.

There are now being offered for public subscription 100,000 shares of the Treasury Stock at 50c per share, which will leave 400,000 shares still in the treasury. It will be the aim of the directors to maintain and keep as large a treasury balance as possible in both money and stock available to meet at all times any and all contingencies that may arise, and thus effectually safeguarding the interests of all shareholders.

If you would join one of the most progressive and promising California Oil Companies, let us have your subscription to-day for a block of this valuable stock. The stock of the Dominion Oil Company for development purposes is what we offer and what we sell you. Experts have pronounced the property as in proven territory. It has competent management, small capitalization, large acreage, no debts, fine equipment, unlimited market for the oil, and all in all is a business opportunity that rarely comes to the individual inventor more that once in a lifetime.

The right is reserved to return all subscriptions received in excess of the allotment to be sold, or to increase the price without notice whenever developments warrant it. With these facts and statements before you we solicit your consideration and co-operation by inviting you to join us in helping to develop a great property that will be an honor and credit to corporate enterprise. Our faith is strong that this is a proposition worthy of thought and investment and that it can soon be made a property of tremendous earning power.

The stock is now selling very rapidly, and as this is an investment of an exceptionally meritorious nature, you cannot afford not to investigate. Write Us at Once for Prospectus and full particulars of the Dominion Oil Company, which will be mailed to you without any obligation or expense on your part.

FIVE KILLED AND TWENTY INJURED IN RAILWAY WRECK

Smash Occurred While Passenger Train Was Backing Into Union Station at Hull, Quebec

Sharp Turn in the Line Prevented Trainmen From Seeing Their Peril in Time

Freight Dashed Into Passenger Train With Territic Force, and Telescoped the Coaches

Montreal, Mar. 8.—The Canadian Pacific Railway authorities here handed out the following statement this morning in regard to the wreck at Ottawa: "A passenger train from Waltham, moving from Hull into Broad Street Station, Ottawa, collided with a transfer engine at 9.30 this morning at the east end of Prince of Wales Bridge. Early advices state that five people were killed and as many more injured."

SUMMARY OF WRECK.

PLACE—At Tetreauville, a suburb of Hull, Quebec.

TIME—9.30 a.m. to-day.

NATURE OF WRECK—A rear end collision between a freight train and a passenger train on the C.P.R. Pontiac line, backing across the river into the Union Station, Broad street, Ottawa. The freight overtook the passenger train.

CAUSE OF WRECK—A mixup in orders. No blame attached to C.P.R. officials.

RESULT OF WRECK—Five persons killed and a score injured.

Ottawa, Mar. 8.—Five killed and nearly twenty injured, many of them seriously, was the toll of an accident this morning on the C.P.R. line, between Hull and the Union Stations here, when a freight train ran into the rear of the Pontiac passenger train, which was backing into the Union Station. There were thirty-four passengers on the train.

The responsibility of the accident seems to rest with a mixup over orders, the crew on each train apparently thinking they had a clear right of way, as both were travelling at a high rate of speed.

Doctors and ambulances from both Hull and Ottawa were rushed to the scene, and as soon as possible the dead were removed and the injured cared for.

The passenger train was in charge of Conductor John Anderson of Ottawa, who was instantly killed, apparently from a blow on the head. His engineer was Joseph Murphy and his fireman Camille Lemieux.

VICTIM WAS A WELL KNOWN MAN.

The freight engine was in charge of Engineer Fred Cole, and William Short, fireman. All are of Ottawa. Anderson was one of the best known conductors on the road.

The passenger train had come from Waltham, Que. and as is the custom at the Hull Station, was reversed to back into the Union Station. It left the Hull Station at 9.22, and the accident happened a few minutes later. Both trains were travelling at a good rate of speed, and as there is a sharp curve and a deep cut just where the accident happened, it was impossible for the crew of one train to see the other train until too late.

The passenger train was composed of an engine, baggage car, second-class passenger, and a first-class passenger, in the order named.

THE SECOND-CLASS CAR TELESCOPED.

In backing up the first-class car was first, and it was the car struck by the on-coming engine of the freight. The impact caused the first-class passenger to completely telescope the second class car, over one-half of the latter being completely demolished. It was in this car that the five were killed. The first-class car was practically intact with the exception of the seats, which were nearly all torn from their fastenings. The vestibules were demolished. The baggage car was also considerably damaged, but was used to convey the injured to the Hull Station, from where they were taken to the hospitals.

KING AND QUEEN FOR CANADA

London, Mar. 8—It is definitely understood that King George and Queen Mary will visit Canada during 1913 or 1914. More probably the earlier date will be selected. It is not yet certain whether a visit will also be made to the United States. In any event it is to Canada not to the United States that the visit will be made and the greater time of the Royal visitors will be spent in the Dominion.

SHE SAID "THANK GOD I AM INNOCENT"

Atlanta, Ga., Mar. 8.—"God knows I am innocent," exclaimed Mrs. Daisy Ulrich Opie Grace, after her release on bail pending a hearing on the charge of assault with attempt to murder her young husband, Eugene H. Grace, a leading building contractor, who was mysteriously shot at their home yesterday.

Physicians said that Grace had but slight chance of recovery. The bullet penetrated the left side, went through the lung and lodged near the spinal cord. Pneumonia already has set in, they said.

"Did your wife shoot you?" asked a policeman, who broke down the door of Grace's room.

"It begins to look that way," the wounded man replied.

Mrs. Grace was found at Newman, Ga., at the home of her mother-in-law.

COCAINE FIEND HOLDS UP A TRAIN

Calgary, Mar. 8.—Held up on a west bound train by a cocaine crazed negro porter, who flourished a huge revolver in front of him and threat[illegible] Mr. Laxton, of Black Diamond who arrived in Calgary on Saturday from Winnipeg, had a thrilling story to tell.

The negro jumped from the train and escaped on several of the train crew coming on the scene, after holding up his man.

According to Laxton, he had an altercation with the porter at Winnipeg. When some distance out of Calgary, however, the man again appeared, turning the lights down low in the car as he came along. When he reached Mr. Laxton he drew a revolver out of his pocket and holding it in front of him said that he intended to use it because Mr. Laxton had reported him to the conductor.

Mr. Laxton rushed passed the negro knocked him down and ran from the car. To the train crew he reported the occurrence, and they went to capture the porter. But by the time they reached the car where the encounter had taken place he had made his escape.

AUTOS MUST BE CONSIDERED.

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—Now that the City is thinking of paving George Street, it would be shortsighted not to take advice or opinion from automobile owners. Such vehicles must be a big factor in the future. The world habitually pays too little heed to the shadow of coming events. That the automobile demands a different highway surface from its vehicular predecessors is axiomatic, that it invites a different sort of surface area and surface is nearly as clear. Would it not be well, then, to wait before extensively overhauling our street system to see what this new device is going to do for us?

WHO OWNS BARNARDO HOME?

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—To settle an argument a few of us had last night will you kindly inform me who owns the Barnardo Home property in Peterborough. I claimed that the grounds and buildings have been made over to the Barnardo Homes permanently, because this institution, which belonged to Senator Cox has been called the Margaret Cox home. Am I right or wrong.

—J. C. Ritter.

Reply: You are partly right, but, in the most important detail, mistaken. Hon. Geo. A. Cox, as a token of respect towards his first wife, very kindly and charitably gives the buildings and beautiful grounds you mention to the Barnardo Homes for a nominal rental of one dollar a year. In deference to Senator Cox's wishes the Home is known as the Margaret Cox Home. Still, the title remains in the possession of Mr. Cox.—Ed. Times.

REPLY TO ARCHBISHOP BRUCHESI.

Editor Morning Times.

The arrogant and defiant attitude of Archbishop Bruchesi in his sermon in St. James' Cathedral on Sunday, 25th ult. (which may be fairly assumed to be that of the hierarchy generally) only accentuates the urgent necessity of a Federal marriage law applicable to or governing the whole Dominion.

LOCAL COAL CONDITIONS BETTER THAN KINGSTON'S

Now that we have published a somewhat long article showing that the coal dealers of this city are honest in their system of weights, it is interesting to note that five of the same class of merchants, in Kingston have been haled before the Police Magistrate of that city, charged with selling coal on short weight.

After the evidence had been taken, court adjourned. The argument of counsel will be heard next Monday morning. The court room was filled by an audience which was so interested in the evidence that it forgot to go home for the noonday meal. The defence tried to explain the discrepancy between the dealers' scales and the city scales. Some of the explanations were: The adhesion of snow and ice to the sleighs, the varying positions of the horses, and in one case, the fact that a pail of water was thrown on the coal, causing ice to form on the bottom of the sleigh.

WOMAN ADMITS THE SHOOTING OF RIVAL

Lynn, Mar. 8.—Calmly inquiring of her friend and neighbour "Are you Mrs. Ingalls?" when the two met just after twilight on Fair Oak ave. [illegible] ponse in the affirmative, Mrs. Jessie Chapman pulled a revolver from her handbag and fired six shots into the body of Mrs. Eva F. Ingalls.

Four took effect and death was instantaneous.

Mrs. Chapman was arrested. She offered no resistance to the police, and at the station house declared she committed the crime because, "Mrs. Ingalls ruined my life." By a coincidence, the revolver taken from Mrs. Chapman, by the police, was identified as one lost by Patrolman Bugrill, a year ago, who was a friend of hers.

LIBERAL PARTY AS FOMENTER OF NATIONALIST AGITATION

Debate Was Not Adjourned Until 2 a. m.—Manitoba Liberal Insists on "Rights for Minority"

Ottawa, Mar. 8.—The Liberal party has set up business as the fomenter of the Nationalist agitation in Quebec. It obstructed the Manitoba Bill all night, for the purpose of giving the champions of Separate Schools time to fire the heather. For a while it looked as if there was to be an all-night sitting. At last, just before two o'clock Mr. Borden allowed the House to rise. There remains to be considered Mr. Wondou's amendment guaranteeing existing rights, of which he has given notice, and also whatever further amendments the Liberals may move on the one clause which remains unpassed.

The situation is that on Saturday night Mr. Bourassa, Mr. Lavergne and the other leaders of the fight for a Separate School clause, intend to hold a meeting in Montreal. It will make a considerable difference to that meeting whether it is a demand upon a House of Commons which still is deliberating on the measure, or a protest against action which has been taken and is done. A post-mortem is not so exciting as a fight. Well, the Liberals apparently set themselves to hold the house up until that meeting could be held, and fresh threats levelled against French Conservatives. It is not so many months since the Liberals could find no words bitter enough for the Nationalists; to-day we see them abetting a Nationalist and clerical movement.

The proceedings of the day were thoroughly dull themselves; the interest lies in the situation, not in the speeches, which have been dreary rehashes of those made on the second reading. The subject did not arise until the evening, the afternoon having been occupied with miscellaneous Government business.

After an hour's speech by Mr. Turgeon, of Gloucester, N.B., Mr. Molloy, of Provencher, one of the two Liberals elected in Manitoba, said that the minority in Manitoba had "got the tomahawk" from the Borden Government, and that the Province had got less territory than Sir Wilfrid Laurier had offered it. The school question, he said, had been made the football of politics by the Liberals in 1896, and he had then voted Conservative. His denunciation of the Bill evoked some comment from the Conservative benches.

HOME RULE AS REGISTER HAS IT

Roman Catholic Organ in Toronto on the War Path

"SETTING UP DRINKS"

This is What the Register Says the Crowd at the Big Anti-Home Rule Meeting in Massey Hall Were Mostly Concerned About—Abuse of Speakers Including Protestant Ministers.

THE Catholic Register, published in Toronto, is apparently out of humor these days, judging from the following article commenting on the great mass meeting held in Massey Hall a few days ago, protesting against home rule for Ireland. The organ of the Roman Catholic Church in Toronto, says

The hands of the Ulster "patriots" were greatly strengthened on Wednesday last, when the blue blood of the L. O. L. democracy met in Massey Hall to deliver speeches and pass resolutions expressive of their contempt for representative forms of government. His Worship Mayor Geary, a firm believer in lodge as opposed to popular rule, adorned the chair, and with his hand thrust into the lapel of his coat, appealed to the street-cleaning department of Toronto to save Ireland to the office-holding class who have "booed" themselves hoarse in a frantic attempt to preserve the Protestant Ascendancy. After he had subsided "Ne Temere" Hincks wigwagged his way to the front of the stage and thrust his ebullient beauty upon the audience, which by that time was chiefly concerned with the question as to who was "setting up the drinks." In a voice like a circus calliope, Brother Hincks comforted his hearers by informing them that the integrity of the Empire demanded that the Orange lodges of Ulster keep on drawing the salaries, for Ireland is now so rich and prosperous that the spoils of office must be quite considerable. At this point a page entered bearing a $125 cheque from the pooh-bah of Ontario Orangemen, John Ross Robertson. The audience was on its feet in an instant for it hailed the cheque as an invitation to "come and have something"; but it was finally induced to sit down and hear Hincks through to the end. When he had finished telling about the fifty thousand drunken worthies who paraded the streets of Belfast and "booed" the Right Honorable representative of British authority, Brother Hocken arose and presented the usual Orange resolutions calling upon free-born Canadians to resist any attempt on the part of the British Government to grant Home Rule to any constituency which did not wear the Orange collar and take its cue from the Grand Lodge. By this time a considerable portion of the audience was slaking its thirst in the nearby life-saving establishments, but the remnant that remained woke up and cheered when some misguided "patriot" called for three cheers for Winston Churchill, Hincks and Hocken. Brother Willison, of the News, arose and said in substance that the lodge room was the only place where the dear public could be thimble-rigged, and that he was not in favor of letting any but lodge "patriots" have a voice in governmental affairs. One member of the audience asked our reporter what it was all about. He had been ordered by his lodge to turn out, but for the life of him he could not tell what they were trying to do. And from the puzzled look on the faces of those who remained to the end it was evident that most of the audience was in the same boat.

DISCUSSED NE TEMERE DECREE WITH SIR JAMES WHITNEY

Evangelical Alliance Asked That the Ontario Counsel Be Appointed and if Conclusion is Indefinite the Legislature Should Take Strong Action

Toronto, Mar. 8.—Premier Whitney was waited on at noon yesterday by a deputation representing the Dominion Evangelical Alliance. The deputation consisted of Rev. E. D. Silcox secretary of the Alliance; Rev. A. L. Geggie and the Rev. W. H. Hincks.

Half an hour was spent in private conference with the Premier on the question of the marriage law as affected by the ne temere decree. When the delegation withdrew the members expressed themselves as well satisfied with the result of the interview.

The deputation urged upon the Premier that Ontario be represented by counsel at the hearing of the stated case prepared by the Dominion Government, and that the efforts of Ontario's representative be directed to clearing up the status of the marriage law as affecting the Dominion, and not to emphasizing Provincial powers as opposed to Federal.

Speaking for the delegation, Rev. E. D. Silcox, said:

"We have waited on the Premier with a view to making clear the position of the Alliance, both to the Government and to the general public. In view of the attitude of the Federal Government we have thought it wise not to present our petitions asking for a stated case to the Ontario Government. We had planned a meeting for Massey Hall, but called it off because of the Lancaster bill and the request made by the Federal Government to the Provincial Government that they be represented by counsel at the trial of the stated case.

"We urged upon the Premier that Ontario be represented there. He gave us assurance that the Government was considering the appointment of a legal representative.

"We asked that if the stated case of the Dominion resulted in any definite conclusion, the Ontario Government take steps to clear up once and for all the meaning of "solemnization of marriage."

"We urged that the Province co-operate with the Dominion in getting the case settled, instead of entering into a legal conflict on the respective jurisdiction of Federal and Provincial powers in relation to the marriage law."

SIMPLER JUDICIAL SYSTEM OF PROVINCES

Ottawa, March 7. The Minister of Justice is planning to call a conference of Provincial Attorney Generals sometime during the Parliamentary recess with a view to systematizing the judicature of the different Provinces. At present the Dominion appoints the Judges and provides their salaries, while the Provinces creates the judicial districts and formulate the court procedure. The systems at present are very dissimilar and many reforms are urged.

WHOLE BRITISH EMPIRE TO BE LINKED TOGETHER BY TELEGRAPH

London, Mar. 8. After many delays the British Postmaster-General, acting on behalf of His Majesty's Government, and the Government of the Dominions and colonies, has formally notified the Marconi Company of the acceptance of the terms submitted by that company for the construction of all the long distance wireless stations which are required for the Imperial wireless scheme.

Godfrey Isaacs, managing director of the Marconi Wireless Company, said to-day:

"The Postmaster-General's notification to us marks the first step toward the establishment of a girdle of wireless stations round the British Empire. The scheme has many far-reaching potentialities. It has been advocated for a number of years but it was not until June last, when the colonial premiers and postmaster-General Herbert Samuel acclaimed the practicability of the scheme before the Imperial Conference, that a decisive step was decided upon.

LOCATING THE STATIONS.

"The result of this [illegible] shown [illegible] Government's concerned to proceed with the construction of stations forthwith at the following places: London, Egypt, Aden, Bangalore, India, Pretoria, South Africa, and Singapore.

"The importance of the scheme for public, commercial and strategic purposes will be appreciated by a glance at a map. There is no doubt that stations will be established in countries contiguous to the colonies for communication with them, in which case the colonies will be in the position of being able to communicate cheaply and directly with any country with which they are doing business within a range of two or three thousand miles."

SUCCESSFUL RECORD OF SUN LIFE COMPANY

Among the strongest financial institutions, not only of Canada, but of the world, is the Sun Life Assurance Co. The Sun Life Co., at the annual meeting held recently demonstrated that, during 1911, its directorate had strengthened the assets, gained an enormous amount of new business and now stands stronger than ever. During the year, new insurance had been issued to 15,161 persons, the policies amounting to $26,536,781. This is 785 more policies, amounting to $2,942,403 than issued during the preceding year. The Sun Life now has 110,754 policies in force for the enormous sum of $164,572,073, being an increase in total figures of $21,022,767 over the year before. In the matter of income. There was an increase of $981,882 over the preceding year. The company has $20,000,000 more insurance in force and a larger income than any other Canadian insurance company. Such startling figures display, beyond chance of contradiction, the unlimited faith the people of Canada have in the integrity and stability of the Sun Life Assurance Co. During 1911 this company distributed $479,127 of surplus to the policyholders. On December 31st, 1911, the company had a total surplus over all liabilities and capital, of $4,717,074. Their total business in force now amounts to $164,572,073. With the progressive policy of the company and the conservative class of securities owned by the company to protect their policyholders, the Sun Life Assurance Co. is, as noted above, one of Canada's strongest financial institutions. A report of their annual statement is given in this issue. Mr. W. H. Hill, the well known local insurance expert is District Manager for the company.

OIL OIL

Oil is King--King of Fuel for all purposes

Without it the automobile could not exist. Just as soon as a supply can be depended on, ships on every ocean, sea, lake, and river, will be propelled by it. The British Admirality are building war-ships to be propelled by it. The great railway transportation companies are altering their locomotives to be driven by it. The cooking stoves and heating plants in every district where it can be secured are being made to use it—in fact the whole civilized world is crying out for it.

And we have it—have the piece of the earth's crust where it is bursting out and spilling over in such quantities that we are able to collect it from the surface of the pools, put it in bottles, and have it analyzed, and here is what the [illegible] has to say of it:

BABYLONIAN SURGEON'S FEES

The French newspapers contain interesting references to the discovery of a Babylonian stone which shows the fees that were paid to surgeons some four thousand centuries ago. The fees, considering the risk, were extremely moderate; and they were fees literally with a vengeance, and not honorariums, in those far-away days. An operation to the neck, we learn, cost about five francs. Setting a broken leg is, we are informed, put down at $3. Dentistry was paid for at a better rate, seeing that the tariff for removing a tooth was $1.25. This seems a very stiff sum relatively, but there is a reverse to this beautiful medal. If the operation turned out badly, and the patient died, then the unfortunate practitioner had both his hands cut off.

London Pensioners

Of the 69,200 odd in receipt of old-age pensions in London, 61,814 receive the full amount of $1.25; 3,675, $1; 2,901, 75c.; 1,418, 50c., and 840, 25c.

GREAT BRITAIN'S UNCROWNED KINGS

Lords of the Calf of Man, Sacred Bardsey, Lambay Island and Inishmurray

It was only last autumn that Mr. William L. Cary disposed of his island kingdom, the Calf of Man, to a Huddersfield manufacturer for $[illegible] Under a grant of the island from the Crown in the days of Queen Elizabeth, the Calf of Man was declared to be forever free from taxation. No one can land, and, above all, live, on the island without the [illegible] owner. It is [illegible] word a [illegible] laid out as [illegible] to this little kingdom [illegible] s that but a small [illegible] vated, and [illegible] with rabbits [illegible] to [illegible] Mr. Cary's [illegible] years [illegible] was a man [illegible] men [illegible] his books [illegible] J. [illegible] [illegible] built [illegible] son and suc[illegible] to [illegible] ing behind [illegible] big store [illegible] own in [illegible] proved so successful that in a few years he amassed [illegible] a fortune. He developed, however, a taste for American life which [illegible] quiet, secluded [illegible] which [illegible] father had lived on the island, and it was for this reason that, after holding it for ten years, he sold it.

Bardsey Island

Out in the waters of Cardigan Bay, off the coast of Carnarvon, is Bardsey Island, a small slip of land two miles long, covering an area of 370 acres. Here reigns the Hon. Frederick G. Wynn, who is acknowledged chief by the inhabitants, numbering less than 200 all told. The island figured largely in the early religious history of the country. Tradition has it that no less than 20,000 "saints" were buried there. That the story has at least some substance of truth is proved by the immense number of human bones and antique remains which have been unearthed in every part of the isle. The name "Bardsey" was bestowed upon the island by the Saxons, probably on account of its having formed a refuge to the Bards. Thither fled a great number of these monks, who escaped the general massacre by the Saxons under the Northumbrian Prince Ethelfrith, the Bernician Conqueror. Of the monastery built here, as early as the sixth century, only the shell of a ruined tower re[illegible].

Island of Lambay

Just north of Howth, in Dublin Bay, lies the Island of Lambay. Formerly it was the property of the Archbishops of Dublin, but a few years ago it was purchased by the Hon. Cecil Baring, heir to the Earldom of his childless brother, Lord Revelstoke. The island is a small one, barely three miles in circumference, and, although scarcely four miles from the coast, is curiously isolated when one considers its proximity to the capital of the Green Isle. It is only occasionally that any of the frequent excursion steamers from Dublin touch at Lambay. The cliffs which go to make up the greater part of the coastline are exceptionally fine, and rise to a considerable height.

Lambay Castle, the residence of the owner, is an interesting old building of some historic note, from the fact that Archbishop Usher, a staunch adherent to Charles I., took refuge in the house on one occasion when his life was endangered. Some declare that it was on Lambay that St. Patrick first landed in Ireland, and that he built his first church there; while others aver that the old church ruins on the island are those of a sacred edifice founded by St. Columba.

Inishmurray

Another island kingdom in Irish waters is Inishmurray, in Sligo Bay. It has been owned for two hundred years by a family of the name of Waters. The late Michael Waters, the father of the present proprietor, was a great character, and known throughout Ireland. Although his kingdom was small and his subjects few, he ruled without difficulty over a community which knew no law but his will, and who devoted themselves to farming, fishing, and to the manufacture of illicit but excellent whiskey. The island boasts of the most interesting remains of early monastic architecture to be found in Ireland, St. Mulacuis, a disciple of St. Patrick, having established a monastery there, his wooden representation being still preserved in the oratory. Among the oddities of the island is the fact that there is one graveyard for the women, and another, some distance off, for the men. The islanders firmly believe that no male could rest content in the female burying-ground, and that any attempt to inter him there would result in the unrest of his spirit and in ghostly wanderings.

ONE TO THE PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Asquith, the Prime Minister, is in these days regarded as such a particularly solemn gentleman that the following anecdote is interesting.

Long years ago he attended a small preparatory school for boys, the principal of which was a [illegible] clergyman, and a strict disciplinarian.

One night, after ten o'clock, when all the boys should have been in bed, he was passing silently along the corridor when he heard sounds of revelry from a dark[illegible] dormitory.

He rapped on the door. Silence within. Then:

"Who's there?" called out the future Premier.

"It's me—the principal. Open the door!"

"Ha, ha, ha-a!" answered young Asquith. "If it were the principal he would say, 'It is I.'"

Seeing the force of this argument the schoolmaster passed on.

WOMEN IN PARLIAMENT

A Glance at the Reigns of the Early Edwards

In the very early times the affairs of the nation were not wholly in the hands of the sterner sex, for in the reigns of Henry III and Edward I. four abbesses at least were summoned to Parliament namely, those of Shaftesbury, Barking, Winchester, and Milton. To one of the Parliaments of Edward III. there were summoned by writ ten ladies of noble birth, seven of them countesses. Gurdon, in his "Antiquities of Parliament," goes back still further than this, for he says that "ladies of birth and quality sat in council with the Saxon Mitas." A certain Abbess Hilda, according to the historian Bede, presided at an ecclesiastical synod. In Wighfred's great council at Becconfeld, A.D. 694, the abbesses sat and deliberated, and five of them signed decrees of that council along with the King, Bishops and nobles. King Edward's charter to the Abbey of Crowland, A.D. 961, was with the consent not only of the nobles but also of the abbesses, their names appearing among those who signed it.

BOOK-MAKING EPISODE

An Incident in the Career of Marcus Wright

When a bookmaker dies rich he [illegible] was a bookmaker. Marcus [illegible], of Nashville and Chicago, died recently and was extensively written about as "one of the wealthiest and most successful bookmakers in the American turf." He had been all of that, but was not a bookmaker when he died and hadn't been for the last and most fruitful dozen years of his life.

As a bookmaker one can plaster his career with all the superlatives without extravagance, but the greatest triumph of his career came when he "turned his slate" forever. Therein he gave the most remarkable example of his most remarkable judgement. He quit long before the art of bookmaking had degenerated into a measurement of wits with the desperados "on the ground" and before the volume of race horse speculation had shrunk to a slender thread—before, in short, it became "a case of dog eat dog."

Cartwright booked while large sums of money could be safely handled on a percentage basis by an operator who had the courage and the power of continuance. He was called "a game gambler." The "corroding passion" never had possession of him and he never exposed himself to the crash that comes to all gamblers sooner or later.

As an employer of other bookmakers he would have nobody about him, no matter how smart and self-contained who departed from the system for a single race. They might shoot off their allotted bank-roll and he'd never squeal, but would stake them to another, and tell them to keep right on in the simple, if sometimes disastrous, specialty of "knocking down the top choices."

One day at New Orleans an assistant bookmaker, with a mind of his own and a lot of faith in his own figures, broke his shovel with Cartwright because he won $4,000. That day there happened to be, what sometimes happens, a fusillade of winning favorites, ranging in price from 4 to 5 to 8 to 5, and almost a corresponding number of sharply played outsiders that didn't eventuate. It was a decidedly bad day for the Cartwright system, and the big man was some $10,000 to the bad in his own book. Climbing down off the block, he took a stroll down the line to see how much his men had lost. Peeking over the back of the box he said to the cashier.

"Well, how much?"

"Four thousand," said the cashier, without looking up.

"And expense?" asked Cartwright.

The cashier looked up and laughed a gleeful, gloating laugh, and said, "Expenses! We didn't lose four thousand; we won it. He (meaning the man on the block) didn't write the name of one of those winners. He had 'em all for cinches, and held 'em flat."

That night while he was lounging in the lobby of the hotel, the dazzling blockman walked up to him; expecting to receive the accolade of the boss' approval. He didn't get it. Instead:

"You're through," said Cartwright.

"After I [illegible]" the blockman began but Marcus took up the running.

"I said you were through. Tell the cashier to give you a thousand out of that bank-roll and turn in the rest. You can't book for me. See what you can do with that thousand on the ground. A fellow as smart as you are is wasting time on the block."

The next day the discharged book maker went to the track with the thousand Cartwright gave him and proceeded to play his own figures from the ground. He didn't pick a winner, and when the sun sank sought his quondam employee in the hotel lobby.

"So they took ye, eh"

"Good and proper," answered the penitent. "But [illegible]"

"Exactly I understand," said Cartwright. "Are you tame enough to go to work again"

"I'm pretty tame."

"Can ye do like I tell ye?"

"Sure."

"All right; I'll try ye again."

WALLY HERN, STRATFORD, the popular hockey referee.

NO "DUMB" BOXERS

Havana Fans Insist on Fighters Talking to Them Between Rounds

The Cuban fans have their own notions how boxing bouts should be conducted. They do not tamper with the rules governing the time of rounds, the regulations regarding "fouls"—hitting in clinches, etc., but they do insist that the time between sessions shall be of sufficient duration for each boxer to make a speech and, if needs be, receive applause. The crowd will not permit a fight to proceed until the combatants have responded to the cheers of their friends. Tommy Smith, a lightweight, who recently boxed a negro boy named Bowers in Havana, in speaking on the subject says that this method is a blessing—it gives a boxer a chance to recuperate. "After every round," he said, "the crowd cheered and we made a speech. In the fifth Bowers knocked me down for a six count, and I got up just as the bell rang. Thunders of applause. I went forward and said: "Gentlemen, I will endeavor to make up for that knockdown in the immediate future,' and they nearly took the roof off.

"In the eighth I crossed a right to Bower's jaw and down went the black boy in a heap. He was counted out, and the Cubans whooped it up for several minutes. When I could get in a word I told them I was glad to have entertained them, thankful for their courtesy and hopeful of some day fighting Al Wolgast before them. Terrific cheers and a shower of Spanish money. By this time Bowers was up and he told them how sorry he was to have been defeated before so noble an audience. More cheers and a hat full of money for him. Some of the rests between rounds instead of one minute were over four minutes, especially one time when I felt groggy and needed all the time I could get. Some class to the Cubans though, and believe me, some novelty to their ideas."

BOOSTS IN SALARIES

That is One of the Certainties of Lacrosse in 1912.

Just what will be presented to the patrons of Canada's national game in the form of lacrosse this season is not known. The Coast League has not decided on its makeup, and it is possible that a third team may be brought into being. The National Lacrosse Union has decided to go ahead on a semi-professional basis, while the Big Four is paving the way for a four-club triple schedule. Things are a little undecided and the fan must wait until the mist clears away and the leagues make public their plans for the year. One thing is certain, and that is the coming boost in the salaries. No matter how the magnates may manipulate their cards, they will have to fall for the demands of some of the players. Of course, there are quite a few of the veterans with whom they can dispense, but the coming stars must be kept in the game, and these latter boys declare that they will quit the game unless tendered a contract that will repay them for the chances that they are taking. The players state that with the bigger gates and longer schedule, that they ought to get bigger contracts.

BALL GAME OF TO-DAY

Pretty Hard to Improve on it Says Bill Evans

"It would be pretty hard to improve the ball game to-day" says Billy Evans. "It is a constant battle of wits, the pitcher always trying to outguess the batter, the batter attempting to do the same with the pitcher. The base runner is ever alert to put one over on the battery men, while the battery men seldom pass up an opportunity to make the base runner foolish. A hit means something under present conditions. No man is supposed to step up to the plate and whale every ball to some far distant corner of the field. The fellow who can deliver once out of every third time he steps into the batter's box is considered a mighty valuable asset to his club. Yet withal, there is plenty of good solid hitting, enough to satisfy any fan. About the only fellow who longs for a lopsided score and a game lasting between 2½ and three hours, is the chap who makes a trip to the ball park once a year.

BOY MUSICIANS BEFORE KINGS

Children Who Earn More Than Cabinet Ministers—A Genius of Five Years

This can certainly be termed the age of baby prodigies, for the number of boys and girls of tender years who perform on the stage at the present time runs well over a score. A few Sarasates and Paderewski's in sashes and pinafores gain Royal recognition almost before the public has heard of them, and during the last week or two the inhabitants of a street in Maida Vale have been surprised, if not exactly pleased, by brilliant five-o'clock-in-the-morning performances on a grand piano of rhapsodies by Liszt and Chopin waltzes.

At first it was imagined that an old professor had taken up his abode in the neighborhood, but it has just come to light that the pianist is Master Erwin Nyiregyhazi, of Budapest, who is only five years of age. Erwin has apparently been practising for a Royal performance, for soon he will play before King George and Queen Mary.

Although the boy will not become a public artiste before he reaches the age of fifteen, it is understood that he will give a series of drawing-room concerts. He appeared at the Duchess of Rutland's house in Arlington Street, Piccadilly, and gave a wonderful exhibition of technique and memory. He played with perfect fluency works by Bach, Handel, Chopin, Rachmaninoff, Mozart, Greig, and Liszt

After the unveiling of Queen Victoria's Memorial the German Emperor and Empress drove to St. Dunstan's, Regent Park, where they were present at a garden-party given by Lord and Lady Londesborough. The Kaiser took a great deal of interest in David Paget, the "boy fiddler," who played a couple of selections, appearing before the Royal party in the clothes which he wore during the latter days of his street peregrinations, for some time ago he was found playing to a theatre queue in a London thoroughfare. Paget, who is ten years old, was awarded first prize in a recent competition held for street-players. He performed the Intermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusticana" before the German monarch with remarkable skill.

His Majesty of Potsdam quite recently instructed Hans von Garnier, a boy musician, to write him an opera. It was six years ago when the Kaiser first became interested in the boy, who is now sixteen years of age. Garnier had composed a Grenadier March, which his Majesty thought so well of that he ordered its inclusion in the list of the so-called German Army marches for infantry and cavalry. A little while ago Garnier composed a Review March, to be played during the "Present," when the Emperor passes down the front of his troops, and this was played, by Royal orders, at a banquet of the Territorial battalions.

Moritz Lutzen, who commenced to play the piano when three years of age, has acquired considerable distinction as a composer of music. He has conducted an orchestra of 150 players in some of his own compositions before the German Emperor, and conducted the Garde Républicaine, the famous Parisian band, in a concert consisting exclusively of his own pieces. He also won prominence in this country by giving a concert of his compositions to his own conducting with Mr. Dan Godfrey's band at Bournemouth, on the outskirts of which city, by the way, he was born.

Mischa Elman, is another wonderful boy musician. He was thought good enough to play a concerto at the Birmingham Triennial Festival in 1906. Young Mischa was a pupil of Professor Auer, of St. Petersburg, who described him as the future Joseph Joachim.—Tit-Bits.

AND STILL SOME VACANCIES

George W. Perkins Recalls a Humorous Western Advertisement

George W. Perkins, who has withdrawn from the banking-house of J. P. Morgan & Co. to devote himself to the great public questions of the day, said at a recent dinner in New York:

"Ours is a country of phenomenal prosperity. There is no such prosperity anywhere else on earth. Here we have work for all."

Mr. Perkins smiled.

"In fact," he said, "we have such a scarcity of labor here that the Western farmer was hardly joking when he inserted in the newspapers this 'want ad.':

"'Wanted—Harvest hands. Hired girl blonde and pleasant. Phonograph music during meals. Pie three times a day. Six lumps of sugar to each cup of coffee. Hammocks, leather divans, cosy corners, feather-beds. Rising hour, 10 a.m. Organ concert every evening. Free chewing and smoking. Come one, come all."

OPPOSED TO POLYGAMY

In connection with the application of a Mohammedan woman, Sir. J. Wessels at Johannesburg recently decided that no person could bring into the Transvaal more than one wife. A protest has now been made by the Indian community to the Minister of the Interior, in which it is pointed out that polygamy is a recognised institution in India.

Prefers Indian Dress

A growing number of Indians are adopting European dress. For our own part we think this is very much to be regretted in itself. We wish Indians would retain their own easy and dignified dress, and spare their money for something more worth having than cheap and ugly imitations of European clothes.—Madras Weekly Mail.

ARMY'S LATEST RECRUIT

Laura, the Coldstreams' Pet Pelican, Returns from Egypt

One of the latest recruits which the British Army has secured is Laura, the pet pelican of the Coldstream Guards. Laura has been brought home from Egypt by the famous regiment, and is now a favorite with all, except—and an important exception—Chinko, a pert little monkey, which is another pet of the Coldstreams'.

However, breaches of the peace are now uncommon between them, as Laura and Chinko do not often meet. The pelican is quite expert in the duties of a soldier. She occasionally wears the uniform, and does "sentry-go" in front of a box in quite the approved style.

A long, narrow beak of sword-like dimensions is an excellent substitute for the real thing, and more than one member of the regiment, not excepting Chinko, has felt its keen edge.

It is reported that Laura found England very depressing after the sunshine of Egypt, but is now getting more acclimatized and contented with her life in the regiment.

THE SQUIRREL'S CUNNING

Storing Its Winter Supply—Why It is a Game Bird Guard

Although the common red squirrel is one of the liveliest and most attractive of our wild creatures, a knowledge of its habits is more casual than intimate.

The past winter gave forest lovers an opportunity for studying squirrels to an extent seldom possible, as the mildness of the weather made neither for long nor deep hibernation. I was surprised at the number and variety of places where the little animal had stored its winter hoards. The smallness of these, too, was noteworthy, as they seldom contained more than a handful of foodstuff.

The larders were in hollow trees, old birds' nests, but most often in the ground a little below the surface, and although many of the hoards were at the foot of trees, the favorite place was in a field bordering a wood and about twenty or thirty yards from the edge. The latter is probably the safest larder of all, as marauding rats and mice do not venture so far outside the wood in winter.

After watching the squirrel going from one hoard to another, I have little doubt that its ability to find these is not a matter of memory or of instinct, but of smell. It is the same highly-developed sense, too, that makes the squirrel an accomplished truffle hunter (for truffles are a great squirrel dainty), and I think that it must have been their smelling abilities that brought squirrels to a peach house in which they did a lot of damage.

Squirrel cunning defeated the most cleverly laid traps and other attempts at capture, and to save the fruit the unwelcome visitors had ultimately to be shot. The squirrel is one of the best game bird guards, and its winter stores have fed many a famished pheasant.

Beyond an occasional "chuck!" the squirrel does not pay much attention to a mere man, but immediately it espies a fox or stoat on the prowl it chatters loudly in the greatest excitement, and game birds never fail to profit by their sentinel's warnings, apparently knowing that the squirrel is no idle alarmist.

Pheasants scratch up and devour the squirrel's winter stores when other food is scarce, and as "pug" always wastes ten times the quantity of food he consumes, and scatters nuts, acorns, wild fruits and hedge berries which the game birds would not otherwise get, and which they thoroughly enjoy, it thus benefits them all the year round.

One of the prettiest sights is that of young squirrels taking their first lessons in climbing and jumping. Like most wild animals the squirrel can swim well when the occasion demands, but it does not love damp, and when passing through wet grass its tail is carried high and not foxwise, as it usually is when the squirrel is in motion.—From the Scotsman.

MARRIAGE RESOLUTIONS

When Theodore Parker, the great American preacher, was married, h entered in his journal on his wedding day the following resolutions:

First—Never, except for the best reasons, to oppose my wife's will.

Second—To discharge all duties fo her sake freely.

Third—Never to scold.

Fourth—Never to look cross at her

Fifth—Never to worry her with commands.

Sixth—To promote her piety.

Seventh—To bear her burdens

Eighth—To overlook her foibles.

Ninth—To save, cherish, and fo ever defend her.

Tenth—To remember her always i my prayers. Thus, God willing, w shall be blessed.

The commandments which Parke put upon himself are like the old de calogue, all comprehended in on word—love.

WHY HE FOUGHT

A defendant at Enfield the othe day made the following answer to th accusation against him: "His litt boy came to my house and sai 'Father sends kind regards, and he waiting to do it on you.' I said, don't fight in the street,; but he cam and knocked the door; and I went ou and had a go with him, and the ginge beer man was referee."

A Foolish Fish

A curious angling story com from Cornhill. An enthusiastic di ciple of Isaak Walton was sitting mu ingly on the river's side, when he f a tug at his line. He pulled sudden and the line gave way, the fish ma ing off with the hook, worm and ca Putting on a new cast, what was t angler's surprise to find on hooki a trout that it was the same one th had run off with his hook and line.

The Ontario Government seems determined to protect the people of this Province. Any such transaction, as our citizens know of, as handing over the streets of a municipality to a street car company, by the Council, without consulting the people at large will be impossible. The government is considering a bill whereby the Council of a municipality shall not grant to any individual, firm or company the right to use or occupy any of the highways of the municipality or to construct any street railway or public utility, unless or until a by-law setting forth the terms and conditions upon which and the period for which such right is to be granted, has been assented to by the municipal electors

Why the present discrepancy in postage charges on postage parcels? Why discriminate against Canadian parcels sent to Canadian points? The rate charged by the post office authorities for parcels mailed in Canada to be delivered in Canada is 16c a pound. Parcels mailed in Canada to be delivered in Canada actually cost more than those to be delivered outside of Canada. This is like a Peterborough expressman charging 75 cents for taking a box to Lakefield that he would ask $1.00 for delivering to, say, some point on Hunter or Water Street, Peterborough.

A London, Eng., dispatch says "the authorities of the Church of England are considerably worried over the recent activities of Mormon missionaries, especially in the northern part of the country. Twenty-six agents of the Mormon church, lately arrived from Salt Lake City have established he quarters at Sunderland and have st ed out on an elaborate house to ho campaign." The average Canad who has come home late from "lodge" and been caught creeping stairs with shoes in hand at 3 a thinks one wife is enough by the his better half has unloaded her ion of him.

YOU CAN ENRICH YOUR WORN-OUT BLOOD AND QUICKLY RE NEW YOUR HEALTH WITH DR. HAMILTON'S PILLS

Sufferer of Twenty Years States Dr. Hamilton's Pills Are a Real Cure.

"I can't remember any time during the past 20 years when my head wasn't aching. If I bent over, dark specks would come before my eyes, and it seemed as if all the blood in my body wanted to rush to the head." Thus opens the letter of Mrs. Enoch S. Spry, of Putnam P.O., and continuing her interesting statement she says: "Work or exertion made my heart beat terrible, and going up stairs caused such shortness of breath that it fairly frightened me. My doctor told me that if that was the cause Dr. Hamilton's Pills are the greatest blood renewer on earth. I tell you how I feel today and you can understand what a great cure Dr. Hamilton's Pills have made.

I feel strong enough now to work like a man, as for going up stairs on the run, it doesn't bother me at all. I eat and sleep as any well person ought, and as for dizziness which used to frighten me so much, it has entirely disappeared. Dr. Hamilton's Pills are a wonderful woman's medicine. They helped me in other ways, too, and I know every woman that uses them will have comfort and good health.

CHANGES IN ELECTION ACT.

Now that a local option campaign [illegible] in this Riding, and as women entitled to vote on this subject are very generally interested, it is of interest to learn that the Ontario Gov[illegible] reads as follows: "Every unmarried woman and widow qualified to vote at Municipal Elections under the provisions of The Consolidated Municipal Act, 1903, and amending Acts shall be entitled to vote if she is at the time of tendering her vote a resident of and domiciled in the electoral district within which is the municipality where the said unmarried woman or widow is entitled to vote at such municipal election as aforesaid."

A UNIFORM WAGGON TIRE.

Good roads mean cheap transportation and cheap transportation means cheaper prices for all the goods people eat. It means cheaper eggs, butter, wheat, and, in fact, everything the farmer produces could be sold cheaper if a ton could be brought into the city over good roads as easily as 1200 lbs. over bad roads. In the keeping of good roads, a broad tire, and tires of uniform width are of material advantage. The Provincial authorities intend hereafter to insist that, after Jan. 1st, 1914, no vehicle may be sold unless its tires are of the following minimum width:

For a vehicle having a carrying capacity of 2,000 pounds, and not exceeding 4,000 pounds, 3 inches; for one having a carrying capacity exceeding 4,000 pounds but not exceeding 6,000 pounds, 4 inches; for one having a carrying capacity exceeding 6,000 pounds and not exceeding 8,000 pounds 5 inches; for one having a carrying capacity exceeding 8,000 pounds, 6 inches.

BI-LINGUAL SCHOOLS.

Is Canada, and particularly Ontario, to be Anglo-Saxon or Gaelic, or tinged by the language and heriditary ideas of any other nationality? Dr. Merchant, has been appointed by Sir James Whitney to investigate the public and Separate Schools of the Province which are being attended by considerable numbers of French-speaking children. This expert educationalist, after a careful study of the subject, found that many children of French parents are being insufficiently educated in the English language. Thus the children, leaving school are handicapped when they come into life's competition with their neighbors. The very fact that, in an English-speaking Province, a small minority of French seem bound to adhere to the French language, is practically a proof that the traditions and ideas of their French ancestors will permeate every thought and action of the growing generations. It has been argued, by some, that it is well to let the children learn French at school, and that they will, later on, pick up the English language. This is an anomoly in an English owned, English ruled, and English speaking Province. Why should not the Doukhobor of the West, insist on having the Russian language taught in the schools of Alberta and other Western Provinces? Why should not the tens of thousands of Norwegians and other European immigrants demand that their respective language be taught in the schools? This is not two hundred years behind the age Province of Quebec. This is the progressive and Anglo-Canadian Province of Ontario. If the French families of Ontario object to keep up with the procession of Ontario's progress and prefer to speak French, there are many trains daily to Riviere de Loup, or Trois Rivieres where Mons. le Cure will welcome them and accept tithes towards the Church.

Editorial Notes

A glance over the names of members of Parliament who voted on the Manitoba Boundary Bill on Tuesday night is somewhat significant. Those voting in the affirmative, in support of Sir Wilfrid are, judging by their spelling, and presumed pronunciation, almost exclusively either French or Irish. There are, it must be admitted, a few "Macs."

A wise precaution taken by the Ontario Government to prevent the spread of tuberculosis, and one that [illegible] whereby every doctor who becomes aware that any person attended by him is suffering from, or is suspected of tuberculosis shall immediately give notice in the prescribed form to the Medical Officer of Health for the local municipality in which such person resides.

ED. M. ELLIOTT,
County Clerk.
Peterborough, February 27th, 1912.

WHICH?

He was a large gentleman, with a face which resembled the setting sun in all its September glory. A shrewd observer might have come to the conclusion that he earned a living by tearing up the road, and then punching it down again. And the shrewd observer would have been right. For his name was Andy Mullins, and he was the Pride of the Picks.

"Porous-plaster, please," he said to the chemist, and forthwith confided in that learned tradesman the fact that he'd a pain in his back, and that the doctor had advised the plaster.

"Yes, certainly!" said the obliging chemist. "There you are! Is there anything else I can have the pleasure of getting for you?"

"Well, not as I knows of," said Andy. "But—Oh, yus; you might tell me one thing! Do I take it in milk, or just plain water?"

TEACHING HIM A LESSON

Mrs. Poorly:—"The grocer called here to-day with a bill nearly a year old. He was very impertinent about it."

Mr. Poorly:—"Impertinent, was he? I'll teach him a lesson. I'll make him wait awhile for his money."

POLITE TO THE WIFE

How it must jolt a man when he is polite to his wife in public to have her look as if she wasn't used to it!

ENJOYMENT IN TROUBLE

Some people get a lot of enjoyment out of the trouble they are able to bestow on others.

PRETENDING TO BE TIRED

A pretty girl [illegible] to give people the impression that she is tired of being admired.

VERY DIFFICULT

"So, your daughter is married at last. Didn't you find it very hard to lose her?"

"It was rather. But she caught this fellow at the seashore, and landed him all right."

A CURIOUS PERSON

The curious person had opened a conversation with the fat woman in the side-show.

"Are your parents living?" he asked.

"Yes."

"Have they a large family?"

"Rather large," answered the fat woman. "I'm the family."

A FINE FINISH

"Did you hear about the man in the North End who drank piano polish in mistake for cough mixture?"

"How did it all end?"

"He had a fine finish."

ALONE vs. A LOAN

"Can I see you apart for a moment?"

"You mean alone, don't you?"

"Exactly. I want a loan of a fiver."

McGILL AND VARSITY

McGill gave Varsity an unmerciful beating the intercollegiate contests taking every one of the four college titles at stake. They won the hockey honors, and followed this up by defeating the Toronto students in water polo, basketball and in the aquatic events. The Montreal athletes outclassed the blue and white representatives, and with the defeat of the hockey team, 'varsity downfall was complete.

UGLY PEOPLE

Don't laugh at ugly people; probably you are no beauty yourself.

DEPENDED ON MOTHER

Gertie: "If you must know the truth I will tell you; father doesn't like you, but mother seems rather fond of you."

George: "Good! Shall we be married this month, or wait until October?"

DISABLED

Judge:—"You say that because of injuries inflicted by your wife you have been unable to pursue your vocation? What is your business?"

Mr. Strong:—"Your honor, I am a lion tamer."

IMPOSSIBLE

"One of [illegible] old man's [illegible]?"

"No. But, oh, it's awful! You know, dear mamma had such trouble to get an invitation to this affair, and she had built such hopes of getting really to know the best people in the town, as the outcome of having been to the dear countess's dinner-party, and now papa has spoilt it all, and disgraced us for ever."

"Good gracious! How?"

"Why, at the end of the dinner he had four knives, three forks, and two spoons left! Isn't it awful?"

ANOTHER CHAMPION

"Oh, yes," remarked Mr. Nooriche easily, "the United States is a great place! I've been all over 'em—New York, 'Frisco, Philadelphy, Rocky Mountains—oh, yes!"

The guests were very much impressed.

"Wonderful range of mountains, that!" continued Mr. Nooriche complacently.

"Indeed?" queried the guests politely.

"Ay, indeed! I went for a tour on that range once. Used to roll myself in a blanket and sleep in the open. But the most remarkable thing about it is the echo. Would you believe it, when I went to bed of an evening, I had only to yell out 'Time to get up!' at the top of my voice, and the echo would wake me next morning!"

"Oh, Nooriche! You shameless old sinner!"

Proven Oil Lands Consisting of 240 Acres, King's County, Coalinga, California, U. S. A.

The Company's property consists of 240 acres of patented and proven OIL-BEARING LAND, situated in King's County, California, east of the croppings.

In this particular location there are no dry holes. Many companies in Coalinga have the same capitalization or greater than that of the Dominion Oil Company, have control of only 20, 40 or 80 acres, and even these companies are making big money for their shareholders. Compared with them, the holdings of the Dominion Oil Company are immense, and when developed and producing oil, should be worth Millions of Dollars. The Company's well has been drilled to a depth of 2480 feet.

Thousands of clerks, struggling lawyers and business men have become rich through their interests in oil, and they are still putting their money in larger and more extensive oil investments. Many of our friends and clients ask about the chances of investments in California oil as compared with mining. There is really no comparison. 90 per cent. of the legitimate oil companies operating anywhere near the proven fields have been successful beyond the dreams of the most sanguine. Oil stock values have doubled, quadrupled, and in many instances advanced from a few cents per share to as many dollars, and there is scarcely a legitimate oil proposition two years old that is not paying a large rate of interest on the par value of its shares. Investors generally in mining shares have realized very little on their investments, and we believe that it is safe to say that not more than one mining company in a hundred makes good. If you are interested in mining we believe you will agree with us that our estimate is not far out.

California stands at the head of the oil-producing territories of the world and her oil industry is a small empire in itself. The resources of the state have been but scratched, and the earth has yielded only a tithe of its great wealth. The market for oil is being constantly enlarged, and so long as heat and light are needed in the world's business, so long will California oil find a ready market at remunerative prices.

In conclusion, we particularly wish to draw your attention to the calibre of the Directors of the Dominion Oil Company. They are well known, wealthy, Canadian business men, men of sterling integrity and highest business principles, men who may be trusted to the very limit in any and all business transactions. One has the assurance, therefore, that the affairs of the company will be handled to the very best possible advantage. A purchase of shares in the Dominion Oil Company is sure to turn out profitable to you.

There are now being offered for public subscription 100,000 shares of the Treasury Stock at 50c per share, which will leave 400,000 shares still in the treasury. It will be the aim of the directors to maintain and keep as large a treasury balance as possible in both money and stock available to meet at all times any and all contingencies that may arise, and thus effectually safeguarding the interests of all shareholders.

This is your opportunity to make good in the great oil industry of California. We are fully acquainted with the situation and feel that we can advise you to purchase at least 100 shares of this stock and as much more as you can afford. Write us at once for Illustrated Prospectus, which will give you full particulars of this sterling investment.

ROOSEVELT TALKS 'BOUT-ATHLETICS

Taking the Olympic Meet as His Test He Commended the Fighting Never Quit Sport

Roosevelt is much interested in the athletes who will soon be crossing the sea to compete against the world at the Olympic meet at Stockholm. Busy man as he is he has found time to talk over the [illegible] topic with various members of the American Olympic Committee.

"Of course," said Mr. Roosevelt, "it's a fine thing for us to have the champions of the world on our team and to see them win every event and break athletic records, but for my part I am inclined to give as much credit to those who go and do their best and don't win.

"Winning isn't everything. When I was a boy at Harvard I entered the boxing competitions. I never was a great boxer, but I liked boxing. I worked hard and did my best every time I started. I fought my way through the preliminary bouts all right, but in the finals I always met some fellow who was a little too good for me. I never felt sorry that I had tried. There was some satisfaction in knowing that I had gone at it like a man and had done my best and that I could do better than some of the fellows even if some other fellow did beat me. I learned how to work hard and I've trained a little ever since my college days, and it has done me a world of good.

"It's a fine thing to be a champion, but it's just as good to be a runner-up.

"Take the case of a younster who tries for a college team. He goes out and puts his heart into the training because he hopes to win points for his college. It isn't just a selfish motive that drives him along. He makes the team. He may be the last man selected, but he has a chance. And when the big test comes, and he wears his college colors in a competition, it's a fine thing if he can even go out and win a fourth or fifth place—beat somebody.

It's a fine thing for the boy to feel that he has become an athlete even if he isn't a brilliant champion. If he has trained for distance running, he has gained something, even if he doesn't become a record-breaker. He can run five or ten miles much better than an untrained man. Nobody can tell when his training will come in good. It is always in the unexpected emergency that athletic ability counts, whether it is in the boxing or wrestling or running or something else.

"Suppose [illegible] can go into a [illegible] or twenty-mile race and beat half of the men entered. The man who can do that is the fellow who gets the benefit of atheletics. In any out-of-the-way place—down in Africa, for instance—it might be a very good thing to be able to run ten miles well or to run a hundred yards well.

"If I went to Stockholm and saw our boys coming in over the finish line I'd cheer just as much for the fellow who comes in second or third or fourth as for the winner. Usually it is the 'place man' who has had to work harder in preparation and the man who sets his teeth and goes in to fight it out to the last inch and do the best he can is the backbone of the American nation. It's the trying that makes a man, not only success. What we want to send over to these Olympic games is a team of men full of the fighting, trying, never-quit spirit. Then we'll win; and, better than that, we'll turn out a race of men."

THE DIRECTOR DEAD

An Incident Showing the Stress of Football Management

A writer in London Daily Express thus tells of a football director who died because the side opposed to his played roughly. A director of a professional football club told me that he thought of resigning his official connection with his club because of the physical and mental strain it involved. This strain is a phase of football management that is lost sight of by disappointed shareholders and spectators, whose first thought after a defeat is to blame the officials. When a club is successful, everything goes all right. Players are easy to handle, and no friction results from the "resting" of men. Money pours in, and there is no worry as to where the wages are to come from. The depression that results from the continued loss of matches must have a bad effect on a man's constitution, and I know, too, of one director who owed his death to foul play on the part of an opposing eleven. It was a Southern League game and the director was so upset at the brutal play of the home side that he took to his bed immediately on his return to London, and, although he rallied afterwards, he eventually succumbed to a weak heart."

YOUNGEST BIG LEAGUER

Paul Strand, the rookie twirler of the Boston Red Sox, bids fair to be the youngest player in big league baseball. This lad, who stands six feet and one-half inch in his sox and weighs 180 pounds, is but [illegible] years old. He won five and lost nine games for the Spokane club of the Northwestern League in 1911 and so impressed the Red Sox scout that he signed him immediately, paying the minor league club a fancy [illegible] him. Strand is a southpaw, but [illegible] on the orthodox side of [illegible]

Colds

Don't trifle with a cold; no one can tell what the end may be. Pneumonia, catarrh, chronic bronchitis and consumption invariably result from neglected colds. Nothing can be compared with

A FINE SPORT

A Tribute to the Late Dean David Ward of Hanlan Days

The late David Ward, Toronto, was easily the best and most trustworthy friend Ned Hanlan had. He was head and front of the Hanlan Club which financed the champion and secured for him thousands of dollars that would have otherwise most probably have eluded him. But, after the fashion of mankind, "the world's famous," was not as grateful as he might have been and got it into his head that David Ward and his associates were reaping more than glory and riches out of his efforts than they were entitled to. Dave Ward was ever the wise and generous sagacious friend and counsellor. He had been commissioned so to be by the champion's father, to whom he was warmly attached, and he was true to his trust. But Hanlan bolted, took affairs into his own hands, and still went on successfully but hardly with the substantial rewards that wiser management might have produced. Dave Ward was not one to talk. He was eminently a silent man and withal a kindly man. Consequently he had little to say about the trouble that arose between him and Hanlan. That he felt it keenly was very evident. And the champion was no easy man to manage. In England, when he rowed Hawdon and Elliott, and againn when he rowed Trickett, he several times exhibited a tendency to kick over the traces, but Dave Ward bore everything with exemplary patience and brought him out triumphant in every instance. After his defeat of Trickett, the split occured, and Hanlan went to Australia and twice suffered defeat from Beach. At Barrie he succumbed to Ryley, although the decision of six feet against him, was disputed and afterwards on Toronto Bay to Teemer, on this occasion undoubtedly owing to lack of wise counsel and management. But it is all over now and both men have gone to their last account.

WOLGAST IS THE RICHEST

He Leads all Light Weights in the Coin Retained

Ad Wolgast is the world's richest lightweight, having earned and saved more money during his "term of office" than any other man who ever pranced along under the 133 pound title.

Battling Nelson "hogged" the lion's share of many big purses and was never a spendthrift and has a bunch of it well invested.

Poor old Joe Gans earned several fortunes in the time that intervened between his victory over Frank Erne at Fort Erie on May 12, 1902, and his second defeat at the hands of Nelson in the Colma ring on September 9, 1908, but the money ran through the wonderful mulatto's fingers like water and when his untimely end came in Arizona the scant hotel holdings of Joe represented his total assets.

Bill Rothwell, "Young Corbett," ruled the roost from 1901 to 1904, and even after his defeats at the hands of Britt, Nelson and Hanlon the Denver [illegible] the primrose path was never really blistered until Rothwell started to travel. Billy's speed singed the buds and scorched the bushes. He left nothing in his trail but cinders. Several "benefit performances" have been staged for Rothwell, and, according to the latest reports from New York, he is now ripe for another life-sized "benefit."

Packey McFarland is a clean living and frugal youngster, but the stock yard lad has never had a chance to box for what could really be considered "big" money. McFarland has saved and wisely invested his money and, according to Harry Gilmore, Jr., could to-day write his check for $50,000, the same being as good as gold, but compared to Wolgast the Chicagoan is a pauper.

It wouldn't be exactly fair to Wolgast to reveal the exact amount of his fortune, but the same would stagger even those who realize the earning capacity of a world's champion.

IN YE OLDEN TIMES

Skating must have been a difficult art before the introduction of steel blades, yet Londoners used to go in for it as early as the twelfth century. Fitzstephen, in his "Description of London," published in 1180, records that "when the great fenne or moore (which watereth the walls of the city on the North side) is frozen over, many young men play on the yce. . . some striding as wide as they doe slide swiftlie; some tye bones to their feete and under their heels, and shoving themselves with a little picked staffe do slide as swiftlie as a bird flyeth in the aire or an arrow out of a cross bow."

EDDIE ST. PIERRE, the Montreal newspaper man who has been chosen secretary treasurer of the Dominion Lacrosse Association, otherwise known as the "Big Four."

PROOF OF PATIENCE

Gertie.—"But how am I to know you will be patient and forbearing when we're married?"

George.—"I can put a 14½ stand-up collar on a No. 15 shirt without saying a word."

PICKING UP A GLOVE

Gertie:—"Why were you in such a hurry to pick up my glove when I dropped it?"

Jack.—"I thought there might be something in it for me some time."

TAKING HIS CHANCES

"Have a cigarette, old man?"

"No; I don't smoke fool-killers."

"Well, I don't blame you for not taking chances."

BASEBALL FARMS

Major League Magnates May Buy up Minor Franchise

Recent baseball developments demonstrates that the trend of matters in the national game is toward the ownership of the best minor league clubs by big league magnates and it may not be many years before the franchises will be owned b ythe major circuit magnates. This condition will be furthered, it is thought, by the new classification which will make the Class A A franchises more valuable than before. C. W. Somers of Cleveland is really the pioneer in this field, for he has been the practical owner of the Toledo Club of the American Association for several years, and a strong belief is entertained to the effect that he is financially interested in the New Orleans Club of the Southern Association. Charles Comiskey of [illegible] of the Western League and is suspected of being Cantillon's "backer" at Minneapolis. Recently Navin and Yawkey, the Detroit magnates, bought the Providence Club of the Eastern League and placed Fred Lake in charge, intending to use that team as the Tiger farm. The New York Yankees are supposed to be the real owners of the Atlanta franchise in the Southern, while John I. Taylor is accused of being the real owner of the Sacremento Club of the Pacific Coast League. Connie Mack also has his Class A A affiliations, being, it is said interested in the Baltimore team of the International League. In fact, the only American League clubs that have no out-and-out farm are St. Louis and Washington, and they probably will fall into line before long.

McALLISTER'S STUNT

He Holds the Record for Quick Shifts Among Teams

Lew McAllister [illegible] of holding a record that will probably stand for all time. The veteran [illegible] backstop had a peculiar [illegible] 1910, one which probably never has been duplicated. He was a member of the Toronto club at the time and was playing at Newark against the Tigers when Manager Barrows of the Royals, who were playing a series with the Pets over in Jersey City, telephoned to Joe Kelley that he was without a backstop and asked Kelley if he would loan him McAllister. Kelley sent Lew over to Jersey City and while he was playing a game there Manager Kelley and Joe McGinnity got their heads together and McAllister was sold to the Tigers.

All this happened betwen 10 o'clock in the morning and 9 o'clock at night and when Secretary Martin, who was with the Newark club at that time, found Lew sitting in the lobby of the Continental hotel and told him that he had just been sold to Newark, Lew jumped up and flung himself out of the place with the remark: "Don't it beat the Dutch. At 10 o'clock I am a member of the Toronto club, at 4 I am a wearing a Montreal uniform and now here I am one of the Tiger outfit. Well, I guess they will have to go some to beat that."

Notice to Fat Women.

Presumably you know, ladies, that the proper caper nowadays is lines. Curves are passe. You have got to take off your fat. This must be done in one of three ways. By dieting, by exercise, or by means of Marmola Prescription Tablets. The two former will keep you busy for months and punish you pretty severely, the latter will cost you 75 cents at the druggist's. The tablets will not make any alteration in your diet necessary, and yet in all probability, before you have used up one case, you will be losing from 12 to 16 ounces of fat a day. Which method do you like the best?

If you fancy this pleasant method of getting off the fat, see your druggist instantly, or else write the Marmola Co., 1192 Farmer Bldg., Detroit, Mich. to send you a case by mail. These cases contain so generous a quantity of tablets that the treatment is very economical. It is, also, quite harmless for the tablets are made exactly in accordance with the famous Marmola Prescription.

NO DOUBT ABOUT IT

Greatest Invention of age for Hoarseness, Weak Throat

Nothing So Far Discovered is so Beneficial to Public Speakers, Ministers, Singers and Teachers as CATARRHOZONE.

Because of its strengthening influence upon the vocal cords, Catarrhozone cannot be too highly recommended as a wonderful voice improver. It almost instantly removes huskiness or hoarseness, thus insuring clearness and brilliancy of tone. Catarrhozone keeps the mucous surfaces in perfect condition, and its regular use absolutely prevents colds and throat irritation, thereby removing the singer's greatest source of anxiety—unfitness of voice. The most eminent speakers and prima donnas are seldom without Catarrhozone, and credit in no small degree their uniform strength and brilliancy of tone to its influence.

Singer Recommends Catarrhozone.

"For many years I have been a sufferer from that terrible disease known as CATARRH.

"Being a professional singer, you can readily understand that Catarrh would be a serious hindrance to my professional skill.

"One year ago I read in the 'Progress' a convincing testimonial from one who had been cured of this disease through using your God-sent invention, Catarrhozone.

"Believing in the merit of Catarrhozone, I tried it.

"Catarrhozone cured me and has been the means of my success.

"You are at liberty to use my name if it will help relieve some from suffering, and I will always remain.

"Bob Bixley, New Glasgow, N.S."

Mr. Bixley is one of the best known singers and entertainers in the Maritime Provinces. Everyone knows him and his testimonial for Catarrhozone is the best sort of evidence of what great benefit Catarrhozone is to those suffering with throat weakness or catarrh.

Complete outfit, consisting of a beautifully polished hard rubber inhaler, and sufficient liquid for recharging to last two months, costs one dollar. Sold by all druggists, or sent safely to your address by mail if price is forwarded to the Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N. Y., or Kingston, Ont.

MOSQUITOES THAT BARK

"When I was on the West Coast," said the old sailor, "the mosquitoes used to stand on the stones and bark."

"Great heavens!" ejaculated Pilsner. "You don't mean it!"

"Yes, I do," replied the sailor. "They often get on the stones and bark—of the trees!"

A obliging young parson was driving home one evening after making his pastoral calls, when he overtook a young woman of his congregation, the maid-of-all-work at a farm which he would pass, so he offered her a place in his carriage. The offer was gladly accepted and they chatted pleasantly all the way to the farm gate.

"Thank you, sir," she said as she got down.

"Don't mention it, my dear girl. Don't mention it," he told her politely.

"No, indeed, I won't," she assured him.

CONCERNING THE MOON

An Interesting Bit of Canadian Folklore by E. McCulloch

Eveline McCulloch, Ridgetown, Ontario, contributes the following bit of interesting folklore:

A new moon high in the north sky portends a cold month.

A new moon low in the south sky portends a hot month.

A new moon straight up so that the hunter may not hang his powder horn on it denotes a dry moon, for he may safely hunt that month.

Vice versa, a moon lying flat, on whose corner the hunter may hang his powder horn is a wet moon, and rain can be counted upon.

A red moon denotes heat and drouth.

A yellow moon, storms, especially wind.

A clear, white moon, clear weather.

When the moon changes from one quarter to another, a change of weather is looked for.

A large circle around the moon denotes a storm as many days off as there are visible stars inside the circle.

A far-off circle denotes a near-by storm.

If you catch the first glimpse of a new moon over your right shoulder and wish without looking away you will have good fortune all that moon and obtain your wish; also, vice versa, seeing the moon over your left shoulder is not good luck.

All signs fail in a drouth.

A harvest moon stays full two nights.

A hunter's moon follows the harvest moon.

The moon shining on one's face sleeping causes insanity. This is carefully observed among old nurses.

Certain phases of the moon affect our moods and dispositions.

Insane people are perceptibly worse in certain phases of the moon.

Pork killed in the advance of the moon will not shrink in the frying, while that killed in the waning of the moon will shrink while cooking.

Potatoes should be planted in the full of the moon when stems are hol-

To cut or burn the ends of one's hair in new moon systematically for some months will insure a heavy, luxurious growth of hair.

The ancients reckoned time and events by the phases of the moon and the moons in succession.

The moon and the phase of the moon we are born under determine not only our characteristics, disposition, etc., but our capabilities and achievements. These are determined with the signs of the zodiac corresponding.

People born under certain moon conditions are susceptible to those conditions as they reoccur.

Many sailors and fishermen guide their expeditions by the moon.

If you cut Canada thistles in the full of the moon. No other time. low, it succeeds in killing them outright.

LONG DISTANCE EXPERIMENT

A very successful experiment in long-distance telephoning was carried out the other day between Paris and Aberdeen. Communication between the two cities was established by way of London, Dover, and Calais, says the Daily Chronicle Paris correspondent. The Paris International exchange called up the local office of the Daily Chronicle, and switched it one to Aberdeen. Despite the long distance—a matter of 1,000 miles or so—it was possible to hear quite distinctly and without any buzzing.

GLASS FROM SLAG

Slag obtained from various ironworks in England is being made into glass by a concern in Liverpool. Proportions of sand and sulphate of soda, and in some instances a little lime, are put into the blast furnace, converting the ordinary slag into a glass that is available for slates, paving-blocks, bricks, and tiles. It is said that slates can be manufactured at less than half the expense of Welsh slate. They have a polished appearance, and can be made in any size and shape, and in many colors.

STOP STREET CRIES

In fulfilment of a promise to a dying patient, Dr. C. Fenwick, of Thornton Heath, recently called the attention of the Croydon Council to the nuisance of street cries to persons ill in bed. In consequence a new by-law has been adopted imposing a penalty of $25 where any offender refuses to desist.

LIGHTS OF THE OCEAN

The number of lighthouses and lightships in the world, not including the inland bodies of water, such as the Great Lakes, is 15,224. Of this number, 12,171 are on the Atlantic, 2,288 on the Pacific, 677 on the Indian Ocean, and 88 in the Polar seas.

A BABY SUPERSTITION

In the annual report of the Medical Officer of Health for Stepney it is stated that there is a curious objection on the part of some women to weigh their babies. It is often their firm belief that if a baby is weighed it will die before it is a year old.

A VETERAN COMPOSITOR

One of the oldest compositors in Scotland, Mr. John White, has retired from the service of The Glasgow Herald. Mr. White, though in his eightieth year, is a man of remakable vigor. He was 64 years at the "case."

The spy-glass is placed inside the brim of the hat, and is a tiny reflector which forms the [illegible] of a giant rose, and more often it nestles in a choux of ribbon. It is visible, of course, only to its wearer, who by its aid can see exactly what kind of impression she has succeeded in creating upon those behind her.

Any Peterborough baby left out on the verandah here all morning, would be a pretty cold, stiff infant by dinner time!

MAKING NOSES FROM SHINBONES

Up-to-Date Methods of Facial Specialists in Germany—Beautifying the Homely

Sigh no more, ladies, sigh no more,
Beauty is knocking at your door.

In fact, judging by the prophecy of Dr. Hans Kersten, the well-known medical specialist of Berlin, the time is coming when every woman will be beautiful, and men will stand amazed at the brilliant charms of every member of the opposite sex.

Says the worthy doctor: "Skilful surgeons are already able to replace missing organs, such as ears and noses, so perfectly that no scar is seen. That being so, they can reduce or increase the size of any facial organ, and, as all beauty is symmetry, the most misshapen face can be transformed into a likeness of Apollo. And the artificial beauty may be of the highest type. It is quite an easy matter to reduce exceptionally big ears, narrow unduly distended nostrils, straighten a crooked nose, and take away all blemishes of the skin. Radiant liquid air, frozen carbolic acid gas, electricity, when properly applied, are all beautifiers. The woman of the future will be the radiant daughter of these miraculous forces of Nature."

Noses and Marriage

Already, however, scientific skill has been applied to remedying Nature's defects in a wonderfully successful manner. Another German doctor, for instance, Dr. Jacques Joseph, has made quite a reputation on account of the manner in which he reconstructs ugly noses. "I remedy every day," he said a short time ago, "by operative means, defective noses of various kinds. Noses from which, by Nature, illness, or accident, part or nearly the whole is missing. I build up the nose from the inside, after delicate use of the knife, by injecting either liquid or solid paraffin, or by fitting in a piece of the patient's own shin bone. Crooked noses can also be straightened from within, without leaving any semblance of scars on the outside; and almost every week I get engagement cards of men and women ex-patients, who, long denied matrimonial bliss on account of [illegible], now describe me as the architect of their new-found happiness."

The use of electricity as a beautifier mentioned by Dr. Kersten, has produced some wonderful results. By its means impaired compexions can be restored, wrinkles can be eradicated, and dimples produced. It is also largely used in the removal of what is commonly known as the port-wine stain, although many people believe that it is impossible to remove this blemish from a person's features.

Wonderful Appliances

The appliances of beauty specialists are really wonderful. One of the latest is an apparatus with a series of thumbscrews for making the fingernails a better shape. Then there is an elaborate face and neck mask for removing wrinkles, and a chin strap which drives away that nightmare of many women—a double chin.

Equally remarkable is the slight operation by which beauty doctors are able to beautify the ears. This operation, which is practically painless, and in which only a little cocaine or any local anaesthetic is required, consists in removing from the back of the ear a small wedge-shaped piece of cartilage and skin, so that when the edges are united the ear can be pulled back into its proper position.

AERIAL TORPEDOES

They Will Explode When They Strike Airship

Messrs. Krupp, the great German firm, have filed the details of their new aerial torpedo with the Federal Patent Office, London. According to the plans which accompany the company's statement, the torpedo is fitted with a fuse so sensitive that it explodes on coming in contact with the delicate surface of a gas-bag. There is a base-plug containing fulminate of mercury, which, when ignited, explodes the torpedo. This is done by a needle driven by a spring, which is controlled by two levers. These levers, normally, are held firm by a movable wooden shaft. When the head of the torpedo strikes an airship, the levers are released, and swing outward under centrifugal force, permitting the needle to be driven into the fulminate. The inventors have succeeded in preventing the torpedo from exploding through resistance to the air.

HARD-WORKING WOMEN

Portuguese women bear burdens more out of the balance of the sexes than in almost any land in Europe. Most visitors get something of a shock when they see a woman staggering under big crates of coal as they unload the barges by the Tagus quayside. And that is typical of the whole country. Speaking broadly, the women seem to be working more strenuously than the men, whose tastes run to gaudy clothes, cigarette smoking, and much talking.

A PECULIAR HYBRID

What has been aptly described as a hybrid between a needle and a frog has been grown by two eminent French scientists, M. Bataillon and M. Hennegux. The eggs of a frog have been fertilized purely by a mechanical stimulus, pricking them with a fine platinum or glass needle. The needle has been as remarkable in its effects as Aaron's rod, for the eggs have on being placed in sterilized water, developed into tadpoles just as though a male frog had fathered them into existence.

DIAMONDS IN HEAPS

Shaken by [illegible] to greased tables, over which dirty water is constantly passing they have no lustre in their raw state, and even when seen in heaps of all sizes on the office counters, it is impossible to think of Hatton Garden [illegible]

Passing envy is followed by wonder that minerals so plentiful and so cheaply extracted (the cost may be given roughly as $1.40 per load, and the yield $3.90 per load) should be the coveted hall-mark of wealth and fashion. There is infinitely more beauty in a wayside flower—until you see the cut diamond fashioned at Amsterdam. They have a box of finished diamonds at the Kimberley offices of De Beers.

It is a strange thing that most of the largest diamonds have been found by accident. This was the case with the great Cullinan diamond, which an overseer discovered by accident.

The Hero of the Famous Fight Preaches Every Sunday

The hero of one of the finest books for boys ever written has celebrated the eighty-seventh anniversary of his birthday. The Rev. Augustus Orlebar, vicar of Wellington, Bedfordshire, for nearly fifty-three years, is the original of Tom Brown, whose fight with "the Slogger" is so vividly described in "Tom Brown's Schooldays." Mr. Orlebar remembers the encounter very well.

It is not claimed that he represents Tom Brown in any other respect, but he was the Rugby boy who at coverpoint caught out the redoubtable batsman in the cricket match against the Marylebone team described in the same story. Hughes, afterwards the judge, was captain of the eleven when he put Orlebar into the team, and Orlebar himself was captain when Dr. Arnold died in 1842.

Despite his age, Mr. Orlebar, as he has always done, enjoys good health. He preaches every Sunday and looks after the Parish generally. Mr. Orlebar is a non-smoker, but not a teetotaler.

GREATLY EXAGGERATED

She had been at the seaside and in the country for the holidays, and her industrious fiancé had been working and waiting for her during the long, long days. Now she had returned, and he had been hearing many things of her, and was sore displeased.

"They tell me," he said, painfully, "that you flirted desperately with no fewer than six men."

Her cheeks flushed and her eyes blazed. "Who told you that?" she asked, angrily.

"Several people. It has been common talk."

Her anger gave way to sobs. "Oh, Frank," she pleaded, as she flung herself on his neck, "it isn't true—it isn't true."

A great load was lifted from his heart. "No, Frank," she went on, "it isn't true; there were only four."

PREFER BIG CLOTHES

The male portion of our United States visitors (says the Tailor and Cutter) might generally pass as native-born subjects of this country if it were not for their obtrusively easy-fitting garments. The United States is a big country, and many of her subjects seem to prefer looking [illegible] sizes larger than Nature intended them to be. Their coats are usually cut about four inches larger than they ought to be, and then built up with wadding and haircloth until there is a semblance of outline agreeable to the American idea of largeness.

THE OLDEST FLAG

The flag of Denmark, a plain red banner bearing on it a white cross, is the oldest flag now in existence. For 300 years both Norway and Sweden were united with Denmark under this flag. In the year 1219 King Waldemar of Denmark, when leading his troops to battle against the Livonians, saw, or thought he saw, a bright light in the form of a cross in the sky. He held this appearance to be a promise of Divine aid, and pressed forward to victory. From this time he had the cross placed on the flag of his country, and called it the Dannebork—that is, strength of Denmark.

STATUE OF THE KING

Mr. Arthur Rogers, AR.C.A., is now engaged upon the creation of a colossal bronze statue of King George V. This, mounted upon a lofty pedestal, will stand at the summit of the main steps leading to the grounds of the Crystal Palace; thus his Majesty will seem to be always overlooking the Festival of the Empire. The King will be represented wearing his Coronation robes, and holding his sceptre in his hand. The sculptor was a prominent pupil at the Manchester School of Arts.

BELIEVES IN SOCIALISM

"I am still a Socialist," writes Mr. Robert Blatchford in the Clarion. "I still believe that Socialism is the only hope of the workers. But I am opposed to all forms of superstitious religion. I regard the Bible as an untrue and harmful book and the churches as impediments to human progress."

A FUNNY PROPOSITION

The Boston Transcript makes the very pertinent remark that man is a funny proposition, because, when he reads a medical book, he fancies he has every disease described; but when he reads the work of a moralist all the faults that are pointed out he sees, not in himself, but in his neighbor.

Sidewalks to Be Taken Up.

At the town council meeting in Lindsay on Tuesday night, Reeve Babcock suggested that the wooden sidewalks should be torn up, as they were dangerous and the town could not afford to put down new walks. If that progressive town goes back to cattle trails there is something not only anachronous, but contradictory to Lindsay's history of the past few years.

Local Grocer Gets Experience.

In this city is a grocer, in fact there are a number of grocers. The grocer, this tale tells of has his store on George street. Shortly after he had sifted the sand out of his sugar yesterday morning, and saw that the scales balanced to give customers 17 ounces to the pound, a stranger entered the shop. The stranger said that the wife of a prominent citizen, recently deceased had fallen down stairs and broken her back. The stranger wanted 60 cents with which to send a telegram to relatives in Alberta. The grocer handed over the money, as the stranger stated that he was a neighbour, and happened to be short of change at the time. The result need not be told. The stranger got the change, and the dispenser of granulated sugar and salt cod fish got the experience.

"My husband selects all my hats."

"Indeed! He seems to have excellent taste."

"Oh, I let him choose the hats, and then exchange them afterwards for the ones I want."

THE WIFE IN CONTROL

"My wife is devoted to me," moaned the unhappy husband; "she dotes upon me; she can't bear to be out of my sight and yet I am not happy."

"Does she look after you well?" inquired his friend.

"Look after me well? I should think so! She even takes my boots off for me."

"When you come home from the club, for instance?"

"No; when I want to go there!"

PLENTY OF SOAP AND FRESH AIR

An English Borough Proposes to Make People Healthy — Suggestions Added by Correspondent

The Paddington Borough Council are considering the enactment of a new set of by-laws, to provide that every lodger in a tenement house shall, except in special circumstances, cause his bedroom windows to be opened for at least one hour in the morning and one hour in the afternoon; and to have the floor of his bedroom or bedrooms swept daily, and washed at least once a week.

"As one who is all for fresh air and plenty of soap and water, I welcome with joy this step on the part of the Paddington Fathers," says a correspondent, who thereupon proposes that the additional by-laws be adopted:—

Any person or persons doing anything prohibited by or otherwise offending against any of the following by-laws shall be liable for every such offence to a penalty not exceeding forty shillings for a first offence, and not exceeding five pounds for any subsequent offence.

All plates, dishes, cups, glasses, knives, forks, spoons, saucepans, frying pans and other utensils, implements and instruments used in the preparation and consumption of supper shall be washed, scoured, dried, and otherwise made clean overnight, and not left to be washed up with the breakfast things in the morning.

All chimneys, flues, and other passages, holes, and recesses to which smoke has regular access shall be swept once in every three months, and the resultant soot preserved for the cultivation of Coronation Sweet Peas.

All grates, ranges, and stoves shall be blackleaded, and all stone and concrete hearths, whether cracked or sound, as well as all doorsteps and window-sills shall be whitened, once every seven days.

No cobwebs shall be allowed to hang suspended from any ceiling in any room, passage, closet, or cupboard for a longer period than one calendar month.

All beds that have been slept in overnight shall be stripped, and the mattress or mattresses turned back, immediately upon the occupant arising in the morning, and allowed thus to remain airing for a period of at least one hour from such time.

All beds shall be re-made by 10 o'clock a.m.

Once every seven days the bottom sheet of each bed in every bedroom in every house in the Borough shall be removed, and the top sheet substituted for it, and a clean sheet substituted for the top sheet thus transferred.

Every occupant of every house shall wash, or cause to be washed, his or her face, hands, and no less than three inches of neck at least once every twenty-four hours.

Every male occupant of every house shall shave or cause to be shaved, his chin, cheeks, neck, and top lip, at least once every three days, provided always that such male occupant does not grow a beard and moustache (which is to be deprecated), or has not reached such age as is favorable to the production or growth of face moss.

Every female occupant of every house shall have her hair out of curling pins or curl papers by midday at the latest each day (Saturdays excepted), and all hooks and eyes securely fastened.

Every child occupant of every house shall have his or her nose duly wiped by some qualified person at least three times a day, and four times on Sundays.

THE NEED OF MEN

Work in Every Field Not Only Remains But Increases

More men are needed in the world to-day than ever before, because there is more to do, more different things to make, more actual people to support. Fifteen years ago the bicycle makers would have been frightened into bankruptcy if you had told them that in 1910 their trade would have almost disappeared. But what do we see now? The coming of automobiles has given work to all the bicycle men and thousands more. And it is so in other businesses and professions. The point to remember is that, while the form of work changes, the work in every field remains, and even increases. The real claims are not all taken up. Alexander the Great was only a fool when he wept because there were no more worlds to conquer. He didn't use his eyes to see with, but only to weep with.

POPULAR THOUGH POOR

"Be forgetful of self; think, and think kindly, of others."

"Say a kind rather than a smart thing."

"Be ready to help whenever you can."

"Give others credit for doing and knowing something."

"Be courteous to all, in or out of business."

"Don't talk scandal."

"Pay what you owe, and never borrow money."

Old Age Pensions

Following the removal of the pauperism disqualification, 10,938 persons in London alone received old-age pensions.

New Streets

One hundred miles of new streets for the Metropolis are proposed by the London Traffic Branch of the Board of Trade.

Priests as Cab-Drivers

Since the disestablishment of the church in France, many former priests have taken up the occupation of cab-drivers in Paris.

THE RIVER CLYDE

A Few Notes About the Most Wonderful Waterway in the World

The Clyde is one of the most important shipbuilding districts in the world. Between Glasgow and Greenock there are about fifty shipyards, and their aggregate output has on two occasions exceeded 600,000 tons. During the last twenty years the total has rarely been less than 400,000 tons, and has frequently exceeded 500,000. Two Super-Dreadnoughts are at present under construction on the river, besides several cruisers and torpedo destroyers; and some of the most notable liners afloat, including the Lusitania, have been built and launched from the banks of the narrow waterway. The River Clyde is one of the most wonderful waterways in the world, particularly that part of it which extends from Greenock up to Glasgow bridge, a distance of nearly twenty miles. At one time, a few hundred years ago, it was possible for pedestrians to cross the river at various points without wetting a shoe. To-day, between the points named, there is a uniform depth of nearly twenty feet at low water.

Needless to say this great change has not been effected without a tremendous amount of forethought, skill and determination. As far back as 1566, detachments of the city's inhabitants were employed to clear away a formidable sandbank about two miles above Dumbarton, but although the people labored away for several weeks their efforts had little effect. The river continued to wash down the sand from the upper reaches, and the bank became as formidable as ever. It was about this time that a then well-known civil engineer was consulted as to the best method of making the river navigable for shipping. He informed the city authorities that it would be impossible to deepen the river, his theory being that as the bed of the river was deepened the water level would fall correspondingly.

Fortunately, the authorities did not allow themselves to be seriously influenced by this expert's opinion. After several more ineffective attempts had been made to solve the problem, a civil engineer from Chester, in 1768, experimented on a system of contracting the river by means of jetties, and removing the sand and gravel from within the narrow channel. In 1773, he contracted with the town council to make the river from Dumbuck upwards a depth of six feet and a width of 300 feet at low water, at a cost of [illegible]. He succeeded in giving a depth of ten inches more than he bargained for, and he was rewarded by the town council with an additional sum of [illegible] and a silver cup. That may be said to have been the beginning of the great work of widening and deepening the river, a work which has been proceeding almost incessantly ever since.

THE PATAGONIAN INDIANS

Normally the Patagonian Indians are a peaceable and kindly people, but they are [illegible], [illegible] prejudices, very revengeful, and often with good reason suspicious of strangers. They are not to be trifled with, and when under the influence of drink are brutal and dangerous. They show love for their children and wives and kindness to their own people. They are divided into numerous tribes or groups, each having its chief, or cacique, upon whom the burdens of government rest but lightly. The cacique of the tribe to whom this village belonged was then at another camp. They believe in a good and an evil spirit, whom they propitiate, and have many stories, myths, and superstitions connected with the sun, moon, and stars, while the slaying of horses and drinking of blood form a conspicuous part in their superstitions, birth, marriage and death ceremonies, many of which are most repulsive.

What is the oldest piece of furniture in the world?—The back seat.

What do you put on the table, cut, but never eat?—Flowers, and certain kinds of [illegible].

Why does a chicken cross the street? Because the man over there has just planted some seeds.

What will make more noise than a pig under a gate?—The family upstairs (guaranteed).

What is even better than presence of mind in a railway accident?—Presents of insurance companies.

Which is the strongest day in the week? Washday. Because it supports so many families.—Saturday Journal.

VEGETABLES AND CHARACTER

According to a French doctor, the potato develops in the eater an evenness of temper and calmness of thought. The carrot acts as a stimulant to the character, and is recommended for biliousness and to peevish or jealous persons. Spinach develops ambitious dreams and energy. Peas, we can understand, are not calculated to help serious thought; and the cauliflower [illegible] egotism.

Stack of Old Horseshoes

A unique sight is to be seen at Upper Studley, near Trowbrige, where Mr. James Jennings, the well-known steam roundabout's proprietor, has a huge stack of old horse-shoes which he has collected during the past two years. It stands 17 feet high, is 10 feet through, weighs about 150 tons, and could not be purchased for $2,000. The shoe stack attracts great attention, particularly from touring motorists, who frequently stop to examine the curious pile.

Farmer's Dog Turned on Him.

Yesterday afternoon a bull terrier, of a sort, and a collie dog entered into an argument on Water street. The bull was without seconds, whilst the owner of the collie, a husky farmer from Ennismore was on the spot. Just as the bull got busy with his jaws on the collie's north hind leg, the farmer tried to save the guardian of his flock. Instead of the bull terrier resenting the farmer's action, his own collie turned and made a grab at his owner's leg. Fortunately the collie's teeth missed both flesh and muscle, but made a ventilation in the farmer's trousers about five inches square.

Curling Cup Goes to Orillia.

The Neill-Sheppard trophy, competed for annually, since the year 1904, by the Peterborough and Orillia Clubs, goes to Orillia this year. Last year the local curlers captured the cup but this year Orillia has a 22 shot margin in their favor, they defeating the local curlers in Orillia by 11 shots. Orillia won here by the same number of shots.

Former Local Man's Death.

W. F. Nelson, yesterday, received a telegram informing him of the death of Mr. Dawson, father of Edward Dawson, in a runaway accident in Vancouver, B.C., on Thursday. No particulars of the accident were given in a message.

The deceased was well known in Peterborough, formerly residing at Nicholls' Oval.

Mrs. Bertram Recovering.

The many friends of Mrs. John Bertram, formerly of this city, who was seriously injured in a street car accident in Toronto, a few days ago, will be pleased to learn that she is recovering. Her son, Mr. Hugh Bertram, of Smith, gave The Times yesterday, the pleasing information that his mother is getting over her recent accident.

The Bugle Band Concert.

The Bugle Band "Colored" Minstrels last night, at the Armouries, gave a most interesting and amusing program. The jokes, many of them local gags, brought down the house. The end-men were Johnny on the spot and acted as though they had faced the footlights for years. The Ark Quartette rendered music that was thoroughly enjoyed.

Prof. McLay Here on Tuesday.

The local Ministerial Association have succeeded in securing the presence of Prof. W. S. McLay, the dean of McMaster University, Toronto, for their meeting next Tuesday evening. Prof. McLay will present a paper on the subject "Immortality in the Works of Browning and Tennyson." The meeting will be held in the parlours of the Y.M.C.A. at 8 o'clock.

Good Work of the Poultry Men.

Peterborough Poultry men seem bound to keep at the top of the heap. At their monthly meeting with President Fred Holmes in the chair, much enthusiasm was displayed. As an evidence of how the poultrymen are advertising Peterborough, many of the members of the Association reported having received numerous enquiries for stock and eggs from all points in Canada, and many from the United States.

Local Operators Get a Raise.

The telegraph operators of the G.T.R. at this city are wearing the smile that won't come off. The Grand Trunk has decided to raise wages in that department at once. The reason is that many operators that work on Sunday do not receive any extra pay but in the future they will receive the regular day's remuneration for Sunday as well as the other six days of the week.

Mr. Chas. Holland's Funeral To-day.

Mr. Chas. Holland, aged 23 years, son of Mr. Stephen Holland has passed away. The deceased has lived in the city all his life, and had many friends here. He had been ailing for about twelve months.

The late Mr. Holland is survived by his mother, one sister Pearl, and a brother, Leo.

The funeral will take place this morning at 9 o'clock, leaving the late residence of the deceased, 520 Concession street, East City, to St. Peter's Cathedral and from thence to St. Peter's cemetery for interment.

Dog Poisoners at Work.

Whilst it is generally said that Peterborough has too many dogs running at large, there are a few good dogs worth the price of their license and worth much more than a dose of poison costs to get rid of them. "A few days ago, Mr. V. Eastwood's fox terrier, "Laddie," died as a result of poisoning. On Thursday, three other dogs in the same section of the city, received doses of poison, at the corner of Antrim and George streets, two succumbed. The other dog, a fox terrier, the property of Mr. J. B. Pentland, Benson Avenue, is suffering severely.

Defunct Local Bird Recalled.

One of Peterborough's oldest citizens happened to meet a Times reporter in the Collegiate Institute yesterday. As the two looked at the cases of stuffed birds there, the older citizen pointing out a stuffed snowbird, remarked, "Do you know, I remember when, 30 or 35 years ago, snow birds were more numerous here now than those infernal English sparrows. Why, I used to go down to Spalding's Bay, where the McDonald Lumber Co. store their lumber, just west of the George street car lines, a good many times during the winter months. Where the mulleins and other weeds rise through the snow, thousands of snow-birds used to assemble. I used to kill from two to ten at a shot." Our reporter asked, "What did you shoot them for?" The reply, given with the fervour of an epicure, was, "why the millionaires of New York pay fancy prices for reed birds and canvas back ducks. Still neither of these birds begin to compare with the roasted snow-bird on toast. Unfortunately, the snow-birds, like the wild pigeons have mysteriously disappeared."

Former Local Family Out West.

A family from the Township of Smith, consisting of a young man, his wife and three children, went out to Saskatchewan about two years ago. They had read in the Western press of the wonderful crops raised in that Province. Among their other household goods they took a Guinea pig, a Thomas cat and a canary. On their arrival they bought two horses and a cow. Then Dame Fortune gave them the "Marble glance." Their barn was burned down and their best horse, "Rosy," was destroyed. Next day Thomas cat killed the Guinea pig, and in the evening as the coal oil lamp shed its feeble rays cat the canary bird. Thomas died by the pick-axe-handle method. A few days later these Peterborough County settlers began to dig a well. Through the rich soil the men sunk their spades until about twenty-five feet in depth had been reached. As the soil was soft, and time was not of much account the well was dug with a diameter of about ten feet at the top. "Bessie" their cow, was and is of an inquisitive turn of mind. One evening Bossy, seeing the new improvements to the ranch, investigated. She looked over the edge of the well and fell in. Fortunately for her, water had not yet been struck. She loed and mooed as cows will when in trouble. Ropes with loops at the ends were let down, to no purpose. At last a hose was attached to the water supply of the next door neighbour and the half-finished well was flooded, in the hope that Bessie would swim on the top. And strange to say, so she did. The crumbling side of the well confined the water coming from an inch and a half pipe until the cow, lowing and moaning, was brought out safely.

LITTLE LOCAL LINES

Rev. W. C. Riddiford took the pulpit of Knox church yesterday evening.

The Home Rule Bill argument has been postponed. It should be postponed "sine die."

Rev. Mr. McCree of Norwood, conducted the preparatory service, preparatory to communion, in St. Andrew's church last night.

The last of the series on "The Seven Churches of Asia" will be given to-morrow evening at the Murray street church.

The Department of Railways and Canals has issued orders that the dam at Campbellford will not be removed until June 1st.

Eggs are twelve cents a dozen cheaper in Chicago than in Peterborough. Our local farmers seem to have a full and perennial harvest.

The course of lectures on agriculture that has awakened much interest in Norwood, was completed on March 1st.

The Eko Club held a very enjoyable club dance in their quarters, at which some forty people were present. Appropriate music was supplied by Mr. R. J. Devey, light refreshments were served at 12 o'clock.

Now that a motion is to be brought up in the Ontario Legislature to allow wives who are property owners, to vote, has not caused the ladies of Peterborough to doff skirts and don the bifurcated garments.

A young woman in Port Hope was charged in the police court there with striking a neighboring lady, over the head with a tea kettle. Fortunately the kettle was not full of hot water. The case was adjourned.

A local lady yesterday, referring to the punishment of "solitary confinement" handed out to the London Suffragettes, said, "The mean old things to put a woman where she will not, and could not hear a word of gossip!"

The editor of an "esteemed contemporary" received here in exchange strongly advocates the elimination of the word "obey" from the marriage service. We'll bet a lead quarter that the editor is loving a strong minded lady, with fixed ideas!

Hastings, Ont., is mad at Norwood, Ont. It seems that the village council of Norwood asked Provincial Secretary Hanna to cut off the liquor store license in Hastings. The latter town thinks it is possibly not 21 years old, but still able to conduct its own affairs.

The Suffragettes in England still seem to be raising H—— Harpicords and other kinds of music. Why don't they emigrate to Peterborough and marry? By the new legislation to be introduced by the Ontario Legislature, they could vote and still be respected!

Black smallpox, a most dreaded and dreadful disease has broken out in the Province of Quebec. And still people here talk, talk, talk, about a garbage by-law. The people of Ontario would not like to have every third man walking about with his face pitted. That is if he is lucky enough to escape the services of an undertaker.

WOMEN IN ALL PARTS OF CANADA

TELL OF THE HEALTH DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS BRING.

They Made a New Woman of Mrs. Elie Amirault Who Was a Victim of Kidney Disease for Over a Year.

Amirault's Hill, Yarmouth Co., N.S. March 8—(Special)—"Four boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills made a new woman of me." Those are the words of Mrs. Elie Amirault of this place. They are words that have been used again and again by women in all parts of Canada who have suffered, and who have found relief and cure in Dodd's Kidney Pills.

"I suffered for over a year from kidney disease," Mrs. Amirault continues. "Nothing I tried helped me. At last some one told me to try Dodd's Kidney Pills. Before I had finished the first box I felt better. Four boxes made a new woman of me."

No remedy ever given to the public has brought health and happiness into the lives of so many women as Dodd's Kidney Pills. This is because nine-tenths of the ills to which women are subject come from diseased kidneys. No woman who uses Dodd's Kidney Pills can have diseased kidneys. They always cure the kidneys.

recent decision of Judge Charbonneau, His Grace substantially declares that the State may enact any law it pleases, and the courts interpret them as they will; the Church will continue to do just as it pleases, irrespective of courts and parliaments.

This pronouncement of His Grace is timely, and should demonstrate to the Government the necessity of attaching to such Federal law a heavy penalty for its infringement, otherwise the enactment of any law will be impotent.

His Grace reminds us that Roman Catholic priests never celebrate a marriage between parties belonging to another communion than their own. It is a pity he could not have gone a little farther and told us that they have never entered the homes and destroyed domestic happiness by tearing the husband and wife asunder and throwing their unprotected offspring on the streets with the brand of illegitimacy, when one of the parents happened to be a Protestant; and yet he tells us that the decree affects Roman Catholics and Roman Catholics only.

A painful illustration of this came recently before the courts at Cornwall, where a young couple had got married the husband a Protestant, the wife a Roman Catholic. The priest entered the home, worked on the feelings of the woman, separation took place, a quarrel ensued, one man was shot dead and another is now in the penitentiary for life. Does this affect Roman Catholics only?

It is estimated that there are at least 30,000 mixed marriages in Canada. Are these 60,000 individuals and their families entitled to protection?

In view of these facts will his Grace persist in declaring that the Ne Temere decree affects Roman Catholics only?

Taking a wider view of the matter. Suppose it affected Roman Catholics only. His Grace must know that you can't affect one part of the people without (to a greater or less extent) affecting all the people.

The decretals of the Council of Trent have bathed Europe in blood in the centuries that are gone; vide the History of the Dutch Republic; hence we are determined that the Ne Temere decree, which is one of its most vicious, shall be rendered inoperative in British North America.

Wonderful Praise Accorded Peruna the Household Remedy

Mrs. Maria Goerts, Orienta, Oklahoma, writes:

"My husband, children and myself have used your medicines, and we always keep them in the house in case of necessity. I was restored to health by this medicine, and Dr. Hartman's invaluable advice and books. People ask about me from different places, and are surprised that I can do all of my housework alone, and that I was cured by the doctor of chronic catarrh. My husband was cured of asthma, my daughter of earache and catarrh of the stomach, and my son of catarrh of the throat. When I was sick I weighed 100 pounds; now I weigh 140.

"I have regained my health again, and I cannot thank you enough for your advice. May God give you a long life and bless your work."

AMUNDSENS TRIP THOUGHT TO FORESTALL LONDON TIMES

Change of Intention From a North to South Pole Voyage Designed Against Spirit of Fair Play by Discoverer

The Notorious Cook Fiasco Makes Scientists Hesitate to Accept Details of Amundsens Discovery

London Cables to New York Intimate That Amundsen May Make a Dash Now For the Nortn Pole

London, Mar. 9.—The Times in an editorial this morning refers to the surprise with which Amundsen's change of plan to find the South Pole instead of the North Pole was received says this change and the unnecessary secrecy with which it was surrounded were felt to be at variance with the spirit of fair competition and that the enterprise appeared in the light of a mere dash for the Pole, designed to forestall the British expedition. It adds that although British feeling would have been in sympathy with such an enterprise if it had been openly declared, the circumstances of its inception has produced a less favorable impression.

SCIENTISTS RETICENT.

London, Mar. 9.—The Standard prints the following Copenhagen dispatch:

"Nothing will afford the people of Denmark greater pleasure than the knowledge that the conquest of the South Pole has been accomplished by a Scandinavian expedition, but in the absence of any official announcement of Amundsen's reported success, scientific and other authorities here are inclinep to be reticent.

"They remember somewhat bitterly the arrival of Dr. Cook in September, 1909, and his claim to have discovered the North Pole—a claim which was perhaps too hastily accepted by the open minded Danish. They are, therefore inclined to be cautious in expressions of opinion. There inclination is, however, to regard it as practically certain that Amundsen has reached the South Pole.

"While freely admitting the possibility of Captain Scott's success and possibly a prior success, the general public, which some three years ago acclaimed Dr. Cook as an Arctic hero, displays an attitude of indifference and is inclined to await further news."

MAY TRY FOR NORTH POLE.

New York, Mar. 9.—A London cable to the New York Times, says: According to C. A. Bang, a personal friend of Captain Amundsen, the Norwegian explorer will not be satisfied until he has reached the North Pole as well as the South.

Mr. Bang says that in order to get funds for his Antarctic expedition Captain Amundsen mortgaged everything he possessed, and that his father and Nansen, the explorer, also helped.

POSTMASTER APPOINTED

Mr. A. S. Palen Succeeds the Late Henry Gladman at Lindsay.

Lindsay, Mar. 9.—Mr. A. S. Palen, has been appointed Postmaster of this town, and will be sworn in today. The position was rendered vacant by the death of Mr. Henry Gladman, who died in Toronto on Monday last. The appointment of Mr. Palen is a popular one, and a deserved promotion of a worthy and efficient public servant. Mr. Palen is about 40 years of age, has served in the Post Office Department here for over 20 years, and has practically had charge of the office as deputy for the past five years. The appointment has no political significance.

MR. J. H. BURNHAM M. P. IN THE LIMELIGHT

That Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., is making good and bringing himself, and incidentally the County, into the limelight at Ottawa, is demonstrated by Saturday's Toronto Empire which says: J. H. Burnham, of West Peterborough, has an idea that the system of voting in the House might be improved. Under the existing system a vote is taken by the members standing one by one, their names being called out by the assistant clerk of the House. Mr. Burnham has given notice of this question:—"Has the Government considered the advisability of introducing vote by ballot during the divisions in the House or otherwise, instead of open voting as at present?"

THE WEATHER.

Fair and about the same temperature.

SEPARATE SCHOOL QUESTION

The Autonomy Acts of Sir Wilfrid Laurier's Government, which were drafted in part by Mr. Bourassa, were unjustified and unconstitutional in so far as the school clauses were concerned. A school clause in the Manitoba boundaries bill would be even more improper. Ontario and Quebec have Separate School systems by constitution and by reason of a compact made at the Confederation conference. From the beginning of things the Roman Catholic hierarchy and the politicians speaking for it have continually sought for an extension of the privileges granted. Ontario has kept faith. More than that, it has yielded to the insistent demands of the Church upon more than one occasion. The Church has yielded nothing. It has agitated, agitated, agitated to secure privileges to which it is in no wise entitled, and to compel the violation of the constitution in its own interests. The temper of the non-Catholic people of this country and especially of this Province is long suffering. But there is an end to all things.

MASS MEETING OF NATIONALISTS

Montreal, Mar. 11.—The big National demonstration took place this afternoon in Montreal, and was attended by an immense crowd. The meeting was engineered and conducted by Mr. Henri Bourassa, the leader of the Nationalists, who in a fiery speech denounced the Borden Government for its attitude in respect to the Separate Schools in Manitoba. Mr. Bourassa was particularly severe on Hon. Mr. Monk, Minister of Public Works as well as Mr. Pelletier, the Postmaster-General for what he termed the betrayal of their co-religionists. Mr. Bourassa asks that our unhappy practice of violating the constitution should be continued in order to secure for a Roman Catholic minority privileges that were never contemplated by the framers of the British North America Act. He favors continued infringements by the Federal authority upon Provincial Rights. Mr. Pelletier has correctly defined the extravagance of this demand by showing that, if it were granted, half of Manitoba would be under one system of educational administration, and the other half under one totally different—certainly an impossible situation.

The education clause in the British North America Act declares that when in any Province (entering Confederation) a system of Separate Schools exists by law at the union or is thereafter established by the Legislature of the Province an appeal from any Provincial Act affecting the rights or privileges of the minority shall lie to the Governor-General in Council. The Act permits Parliament to make remedial laws after the Provincial authorities have failed to pass legislation satisfying the grievances of the minority. But it does not contemplate the passing by the Federal House of laws of instruction to the Provinces with respect to education.

ARCTIC EXPLORER HAS BEEN DESERTED BY HIS GUIDES

Harry V. Radford Forsaken in Heart of Barren Lands, and and Has Doubtless Perished From Cold and Starvation

New York, Mar. 9.—Harry V. Radford, Arctic explorer, Fellow of the American Geographical Society and member of the Arctic Club, who left this city on February 12, 1909, to engage in four years of exploration and hunting in Northern Canada, is reported to have been forsaken by his guides in the heart of the barren lands between Chesterfield Inlet on the Northern end of Hudson Bay and Great Bear Lake, about 500 miles inland. He is believed to have been left without provisions and fear is expressed for his welfare.

A letter written by A. J. Bell, Canadian Agent at Fort Smith, North West Territory, telling of Radford's plight, reached the Arctic club here last night. The letter dated January 15th last, said Bell had received word that two Indians hired by Radford last summer to accompany him for one year to the barren lands had visited Fort Resolution last month and stated that they had deserted Radford last fall owing to a disagreement.

EX-PRESIDENTS WIFE ON UNEXPECTED VISIT

San Jose, Costa Rica, Mar. 9.—Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt and her daughter, Miss Ethel, arrived at Port Limon this morning.

The visit of the wife and daughter of the ex-president was a surprise to the government, which, however, took steps immediately to place a special train at their disposal to bring them to San Jose.

Preparations are being made by a women's reception committee to entertain the visitors.

NICE NEWSPAPER PEOPLE (?)

Catholic Record, March 7: "The Catholic Citizen expostulates because one of its editorials is going the usual round whilst being credited to The Angelus. If it had turned to its first page it would have found an article taken "holus bolus" from this paper, with no credit given to us for starting it on its way."

PREVENTING FRAUD BY RETAIL MERCHANTS

To protect wholesale merchants W. D. McPherson, M.P.P., will introduce in the Legislature a bill to prohibit retailers from disposing of their stock in bulk for cash without first supplying the intended purchaser with a list of his creditors, and obtaining the consent to the sale of a majority of the creditors. This is in order to put a stop to the practise of a retailer selling out his stock.

DYNAMITERS TO BE ARRAIGNED

Labor Leaders to Stand Trial on Murder Charges

FIFTY-FOUR ON TRIAL

United States Government to Punish the Dynamiters—The Country-Wide Campaign of Dynamiting to be Unearthed—Will be Severely Punished.

Indianapolis, Mar. 9.—Forty-six of the 54 defendants in the alleged dynamiting conspiracy are expected by Federal officials to be arraigned in Federal Court here to-day.

Federal District Attorney Miller said that none of the five indicted men involved in dynamiting proceedings in California courts would be here for arraignment. The removal of John C. Carroll and Edward E. Phillips of Syracuse, N.Y., has been delayed by their fight against extradition, and they will not be here. John J. McCray of Wheeling, W. Va. has not yet been arrested.

The indicted men on the Pacific Coast who will not be here are: E. A. Clancy and Alof A. Tveitmoe, of San Francisco; Ortie E. McManigal now in jail at Los Angeles, and John J. and James B. McNamara, now in San Quentin prison in California.

Arrival of the indicted labor leaders here for the coming court proceedings, began last week. Local labor leaders have made arrangement for quartering all of the men at the same hotel. A general conference of the indicted men took place yesterday.

Various groups of attorneys have been engaged by the defense, but it is reported here to-day that P. H. O'Donnell of Chicago, former counsel for Senator Lorimer in the investigation of his election, will be chief counsel for the accused.

PRIEST ADDRESSED A BRIDE AS "MISS"

Moose Jaw, Sask., Mar. 9—The community is highly excited by an enforcement of the Ne Temere decree here. A young couple who had been married by an Anglican minister were called on by a Catholic priest. The wife, who was a Catholic, he addressed as "Miss," and assured her she was not married. She was in such agony that the ceremony according to the Catholic Church was hurriedly performed.

CHASED NEGRO FOR OVER TWO MILES

New Orleans, La., Mar. 9.—M. B. Mauras, 2825 Constance, proved his ability as a detective by following a thief who had stolen his bicycle, valued at $35. His persistency was rewarded when Harvey Joseph, well-known to the police, was arrested.

It seems that Mr. Mauras' little son left the wheel in front of a residence. Joseph jumped on the wheel and hurried off. The boy told his father. Mr. Mauras, believing Joseph would make his way to one of the second-hand stores to dispose of the wheel, jumped on a car and hastened down town. In South Rampart he met the negro, who was just about to enter one of the second-hand stores. Drawing his knife, Mr. Mauras frightened the negro, who ran out, and after a stern chase of over two miles was captured and handed over to the police.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RY. MAY PARALLEL IT'S WESTERN LINES

Calgary Alta., Mar. 9.—Vice-President and General Manager of Western Lines Bury announces that the Canadian Pacific may parallel its Western lines at a cost of $60,000,000.

The great increase in the traffic makes necessary a double track from Winnipeg to Vancouver. The raid agricultural settlement bringing with it business and manufacturing is responsible for the enormous increase.

DO NOT LIKE MR. BURNHAM

Catholic Register Has No Good Word for Our M.P.

The following, taken from The Catholic Register, of Toronto, shows a bitterness that one would hardly expect to find in a Christian gentleman, much less a clergyman. Evidently the reverend editor does not believe in the principle of when one cheek is smitten to turn the other so that it may be swatted also:

"A certain J. H. Burnham, a member of Parliament, is acquiring quite an unenviable fame in the local press by his contributions re "Ne Temere" and "Quantavis Diligentia." The gentleman evidently cannot be taught anything regarding the force or meaning of these decrees only what he chooses to read into them. He is a lawyer himself, we believe, and he would laugh at any ordinary layman attempting to interpret the civil law, but he does not see how ridiculous he makes himself when he cavorts around in a field with which he is as familiar as a cow with astronomy. But he undoubtedly has Catholic constituents in his riding, who, if they remember, can put more learning into his pate than he is likely to acquire by his unaided efforts in many long years."

FIRST THRO' FLIGHT LONDON TO PARIS

Paris, Mar. 9.—Aviator Salmet left the Issy Aerodrome Friday afternoon in an effort to make a non-stop return flight to London. After battling his way through a blinding rain storm which drenched him to the skin, he arrived at the Issy Aerodrome, just outside of Paris, having made a no-stop flight from the London suburb of Hendon.

By the route travelled, Salmet covered 237 miles in 325 minutes. He left the Hendon aerodrome at six o'clock and made fast time all the way.

When Salmet descended he was so chilled from the rain and cold that he had to be helped from his monoplane. He quickly revived, however, after partaking of hot drinks and being wrapped in blankets.

HOUTRAGEOUS!!—From The Toronto News.

TORONTOS WATER SUPPLY WAS IN DANGER THIS SATURDAY

Geyser of Water Upheaves Great Blocks of Asphalt and Interrupts Traffic on Several Streets Through Break in Big 36 Inch Main

Toronto, Mar. 9.—Bathurst street was suddenly flooded for a mile on Saturday. A big 36-inch water main at the corner of London and Bathurst streets, broke at half-past eleven o'clock in the forenoon.

The broken main was one serving the reservoir direct, and the city's water supply was in danger. There is a chance that the reservoir will run dry. The level dropped from 9 feet at 12 noon to 7 feet 2 inches at 5 p.m., and is still dropping. Officials feel assured that the other mains will be able to cope with the extra work. Over a million gallons were lost when the main broke.

A hurricane of water belched up through the roadway with volcanic force and effect, rose three feet high from street side to street side and poured southward in a torrent.

Rushing down to Bloor street the water spread east and west a foot deep, and down Bathurst street to College.

At Bloor and Bathurst the furnaces in the two bank block cellars were extinguished and the whole of the basement speedily flooded.

The cellars and basements near London street, filled brimful.

Word was phoned to the waterworks and police, and both sent a special staff to the scene.

Supt. W. H. Randall of the waterworks department had manholes opened in the sewers beginning at College street to carry off the flood.

For two hours the Bathurst street cars had to detour west on Bloor.

A circle of 30 feet in diameter in the roadway, was upheaved and broken into great slabs and fragments.

A citizen said he attributed the break to a defective pipe, and blamed lax inspection for the trouble. "There will be a big bill of damages," he said, "in addition to the cost of repairs."

Engineer C. L. Fellowes said the cause of the break was at present mere guesswork. It might be on account of the frost.

RESERVOIR SUPPLY IMPERILED

Supt. Randall said "The break in the water main on Bathurst street will not affect the private services at all. It was in one of the 36-inch mains, through which the water is pumped up to the reservoir."

PROTECTING THE PUBLIC FROM EXCESSIVE LAW COSTS

Hon. J. J. Foy, Attorney-General Will Shortly Introduce a Law Reform Act---Awaiting for Appointment of New Judges

Toronto, Mar. 9.—The Law Reform Act fathered by Hon. J. J. Foy, Attorney-General, will in all likelihood come into effect in Ontario shortly.

Inquiries as to the cause of delay brought the reply from Mr. Foy that the Government was awaiting the appointment of two extra judges by the Federal Government, such as would be required for the operation of the Act.

This is taken as indicating that the Act is by no means shelved such as the Bar Association and many of the judges expressed themselves as in favor of.

The plan for the reformation of legal processes within the province is understood to have emanated in part at least from Sir William Meredith.

The act is intended to lighten the expenses of litigation and at the same time make it more difficult for wealthy corporations to appeal a damage suit beyond the financial endurance of the average plaintiff. It directly discourages appeals from the trial judge.

The present Divisional Court would be abolished as an appeal court under the working of the Act. As is now the procedure, a case may be passed from the trial judge to the Divisional Court judges and thence onward to the Court of Appeal.

TWO BRANCHES.

Under the Act a new Supreme Court of Ontario would be composed of two branches, the Appellate and the High Court. For the Supreme Court, the Government has asked for the appointment of two additional judges.

A usual process under present system is for the loser before the trial Judge to carry his case to the Divisional Court, which in deciding against him, bars him from further appeal, but would allow the plaintiff should he desire, to go on to the Court of Appeal.

HOT STUFF FROM REGISTER

Roman Catholic Organ Hands Out a Few More Boquets.

The Christian Guardian, ordinarily fair and decent, has joined the yelping pack, and declares in last week's issue that Canada may ultimately be forced to pass a law prescribing fine and imprisonment for Catholic priests who may be guilty of "unjustifiable and mischievous interference in family affairs." We beg to assure our agitated contemporary that Catholic priests have no desire to meddle with that negligable little entity known as the Methodist "family." They proceed on the principle that time and race-suicide will take care of the Methodist affliction, without any interference on their part, so the Guardian has really no cause for worry.

"Roman Catholics," says the Presbyterian, "who have been married by Protestant ministers either to other Roman Catholics or to Protestants, will still be told that in the eyes of the Church they are living in sin." Yes, and we will keep on telling this to our people so long as there is a single priest left alive to raise his voice in defence of the truth. The Old Church at least is consistent. She cannot extend the hand of fellowship or have any communication with outsiders in Divine things. She possesses the sacred deposit of faith, received from her Divine Founder," and compromise is impossible. Is not her consistency worthy at least of admiration?

* * * *

It is wonderful what apparently sensible men will sometimes do to keep up with the exactions of fraternal societies. Old men, who ought to be comfortably in their beds or in the bosom of their families, can be seen chasing about at unseasonable hours, apparently under the impression at times that they are saving the Church and country. The older we grow and the more we see of the inner workings of our quasi-secret societies the more respect we have for the plain, everyday, Catholic who does not need any grip or pass-word to keep him faithful to his religious duties. And at bottom and behind the scenes it unfortunately happens too often that a few clever, interested gentlemen pull the strings for their own personal aggrandizement. This in the last analysis is the bane of this whole fraternal society business.

* * * *

The Watson case in Winnipeg drew all the "Ne Temere" fire of the non-Catholic press. The papers had to speak out and say that if there was a Protestant "Ne Temere" there would be no such abominable profanation of marriage as that. The scandal has done this much good; there will be no more "Ne Temere" balderdash in Winnipeg. The abominable case of Protestant morals before this virtuous city of Toronto in which a husband is in jail, a prominent doctor in flight, and a poor wife lying dead in the morgue because of the way the connubial tie is celebrated and connubial responsibility regarded should frighten the bigoted press off "Ne Temere" territory forever. And it is hinted that hundreds of cases like the Davidge one are going through here all the time so degraded have common morals become. Something has to be done to make marriage more than a mere contract to be put on and off at will, or what will become of this blessed Canada! The Catholic Church is its only hope to-day.

OIL OIL OIL

Oil is King--King of Fuel for all purposes

Without it the automobile could not exist. Just as soon as a supply can be depended on, ships on every ocean, sea, lake, and river, will be propelled by it. The British Admirality are building warships to be propelled by it. The great railway transportation companies are altering their locomotives to be driven by it. The cooking stoves and heating plants in every district where it can be secured are being made to use it—in fact the whole civilized world is crying out for it.

And we have it—have the piece of the earth's crust where it is bursting out and spilling over in such quantities that we are able to collect it from the surface of the pools, put it in bottles, and have it analyzed, and here is what the analytical chemist has to say of it:

A glance over the names of members of Parliament who voted on the Manitoba Boundary Bill on Tuesday night is somewhat significant. Those voting in the affirmative, in support of Sir Wilfrid are, judging by their spelling, and presumed pronunciation, almost exclusively either French or Irish. There are, it must be admitted, a few "Macs."

WOMEN IN PARLIAMENT

A Glance at the Reign of the Early Edwards

In the very early times the affairs of the nation were not wholly in the hands of the sterner sex, for in the reigns of Henry III. and Edward I. four abbesses at least were summoned to Parliament—namely, those of Shaftesbury, Barking, Winchester, and Milton. To one of the Parliaments of Edward III. there were summoned by [illegible] ten ladies of noble birth, seven of them countesses. Gordon, in his "Antiquities of Parliament," [illegible] back still farther than this, for he says that "ladies of birth and quality sat in council with the Saxon [illegible]." A certain Abbess Hilda, according to the historian Bede, presided at an ecclesiastical synod. In [illegible] great council at [illegible] A.D. [illegible], [illegible] abbesses sat and deliberated, and [illegible] of them signed decrees of that council along with the [illegible], Bishops and nobles. King Edward [illegible] to the Abbey of Crowland, A.D. 961, [illegible] the [illegible] not only of the [illegible] but also of the [illegible] [illegible] and [illegible] II.

BABYLONIAN SURGEON'S FEES

The French newspapers contain interesting references to the discovery of a Babylonian stone which shows the fees that were paid to surgeons some four thousand centuries ago. The fees, considering the risk, were extremely moderate; and they were fees literally with a vengeance, and not honorariums, in those far-away days. An operation to the neck, we learn, cost about five francs. Setting a broken leg is, we are informed, put down at $3. Dentistry was paid for at a better rate, seeing that the tariff for removing a tooth was $1.25. This seems a very stiff sum relatively, but there is a reverse to this beautiful medal. If the operation turned out badly, and the patient died, then the unfortunate practitioner had both his hands cut off.

London Pensioners

Of the 69,200 odd in receipt of old-age pensions in London, 61,314 receive the full amount of $1.25; 2,675, $1; 2,991, 75c.; 1,413, 50c., and 840, 25c.

BI-LINGUAL SCHOOLS.

Is Canada, and particularly Ontario, to be Anglo-Saxon or Gaelic, or tinged by the language and heriditary ideas of any other nationality? Dr. Merchant, has been appointed by Sir James Whitney to investigate the public and Separate Schools of the Province which are being attended by considerable numbers of French-speaking children. This expert educationalist, after a careful study of the subject, found that many children of French parents are being insufficiently educated in the English language. Thus the children, leaving school are handicapped when they come into life's competition with their neighbors. The very fact that, in an English-speaking Province, a small minority of French seem bound to adhere to the French language, is practically a proof that the traditions and ideas of their French ancestors will permeate every thought and action of the growing generations. It has been argued, by some, that it is well to let the children learn French at school, and that they will, later on, pick up the English language. This is an anomoly in an English owned, English ruled, and English speaking Province. Why should not the Doukhobors of the West, insist on having the Russian language taught in the schools of Alberta and other Western Provinces? Why should not the tens of thousands of Norwegians and other European immigrants demand that their respective language be taught in the schools? This is not two hundred years behind the age Province of Quebec. This is the progressive and Anglo-Canadian Province of Ontario. If the French families of Ontario object to keep up with the procession of Ontario's progress and prefer to speak French, there are many trains daily to Riviere de Loup, or Trois Rivieres where Mons. le Cure will welcome them and accept tithes towards the Church.

A local lady yesterday, referring to the punishment of "solitary confinement" handed out to the London Suffragettes, said, "The mean old things to put a woman where she will not, and could not hear a word of gossip!"

CHANGES IN ELECTION ACT.

Now that a local option campaign is impending in this Riding, and as women entitled to vote on this subject are very generally interested, it is of interest to learn that the Ontario Government has amended the law concerning women voters. The amended law reads as follows: "Every unmarried woman and widow qualified to vote at Municipal Elections under the provisions of The Consolidated Municipal Act, 1903, and amending Acts shall be entitled to vote if she is at the time of tendering her vote a resident of and domiciled in the electoral district within which is the municipality where the said unmarried woman or widow is entitled to vote at such municipal election as aforesaid."

A UNIFORM WAGGON TIRE.

Good roads mean cheap transportation and cheap transportation means cheaper prices for all the goods people eat. It means cheaper eggs, butter, wheat, and, in fact, everything the farmer produces could be sold cheaper if a ton could be brought into the city over good roads as easily as 1200 lbs. over bad roads. In the keeping of good roads, a broad tire, and tires of uniform width are of material advantage. The Provincial authorities intend hereafter to insist that, after Jan. 1st, 1914, no vehicle may be sold unless its tires are of the following minimum width:—

For a vehicle having a carrying capacity of 2,000 pounds, and not exceeding 4,000 pounds, 3 inches; for one having a carrying capacity exceeding 4,000 pounds but not exceeding 6,000 pounds, 4 inches; for one having a carrying capacity exceeding 6,000 pounds and not exceeding 8,000 pounds 5 inches; for one having a carrying capacity exceeding 8,000 pounds, 6 inches.

"The meanest man I ever knew was Closefist. He smoked his cigars to the last half-inch, chewed the stumps, and used the ashes for snuff. Then he wasn't satisfied, and gave up smoking."

NICE OLD BURGLAR

"That's done it!" muttered the burglar, as his shin came into contact with a chair and overturned it. And he spoke the truth. It did do it. A sudden movement above, a hurried descent of stairs, and Sikes found himself staring into a revolver.

"Now then, hands up!" cried the householder. "What have you stolen?"

"Only your wife's pet dog," replied the burglar.

"If that's all, you may sneak out quietly," said the householder. "But you've got something besides that, you rascal!"

"Only your mother-in-law's parrot."

"You don't say so! Here's some loose change for you. Anything else?"

"Yes," said the burglar. "Your daughter's phonograph."

"Good fellow!" exclaimed the householder. "Here's a sovereign for you!"

"And your son's punching-bag."

"My dear sir," exclaimed the householder delightedly, "I only wish you could manage the grand piano, then I should have peace in my house at last! Still, of course, that can't be; but will you share a bottle of champagne with me before you go?"

BORROW AN AUTO

"That's a fine auto of yours. I'd like to borrow it for a little spin some day."

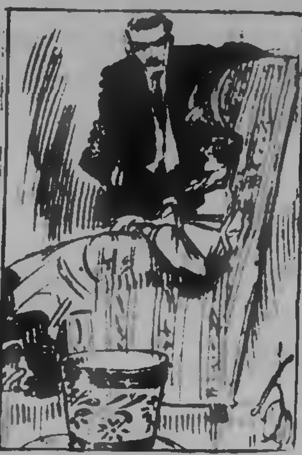
"Yes. By the way, what sort of a machine would you advise me to get?"

"One of your own."



SO SUDDEN

He:—"Do you believe in hypnotism?"

She:—"I must. I feel that you are going to kiss me, and I am powerless to resist."

PROOF POSITIVE

In all glorious Devon it is generally admitted there is no cider to equal that of Farmer Marshall. But he is notable for other things besides. It is said that he would very much rather receive than give—in short, that he is a stingy old rascal.

Young Peterson had heard of this, but he was a young man who had considerable faith in his own powers of passing on [illegible], and to some sporting companions he had boasted that he would get a drink of cider out of the old man without actually asking for it. As such a thing had never been known to happen in living memory, there were plenty of takers, and the next day Peterson drove over.

"'Morning, farmer!" said he. "Fine orchard you have here."

"Ay," said the farmer.

"They tell me, too, that you have a very fine press."

"Ay; 'tis the best in all Devon."

"Pretty good cider you get, I suppose, eh? But, I dare say I've tasted better."

"Not in your born days, Tom"—(to his son)—"draw a mug o' cider."

The luscious beverage was brought, and with a smile of triumph young Peterson held forth his hand to take it.

But the farmer's hand got there first. He drained the mug, and then handed it to the visitor.

"There!" he remarked. "If you think you've ever met one like o' that cider, just smell the mug!"

He:—"So I only bought one ticket for myself."

WINTER EXERCISE

Ball Players Will be Better off Out of Doors

"[illegible] during the winter time to put a baseball player in proper condition," remarked George McBride, the crack baseman of the Washington club in the American League during a fanning bee. "There are many players who during the winter months take to all sorts of indoor games, such as basket-ball, baseball, bowling and the like, to get into condition for the playing season, but I do not agree with them as to the benefits derived from such a course. It has been my experience that a ball player who was outside all the summer season, gains a great deal more by following the same method during the winter time—that is, taking exercise outdoors, such as skating, walking and, in fact, anything along that line with a little pleasure connected with it. During the last two months I have done a great deal of walking about the city and around to the outskirts, and have also put a great deal of time skating at the rink and on the river. I do a little bowling now and then, but not with the heavy finger balls, as I think the strain is too much with that kind. I bowl the pony ball, which is light and easily handled, and there is no danger of overtaxing your throwing arm in bowling that kind of a game. I have noticed that several ball players whom I know and who did nothing but indoor work during the winter season were in the poorest condition to play baseball in the spring and for that reason I keep away from the indoor work as much as possible.

"It may sound strange," continued the Washington captain, "but this talk during the last few weeks of independent leagues bring to mind the Fletcher deal of a year or so ago? There were many of the star players in both the big leagues who were ready to go over to the Fletcher movement, especially when they were offering big bonuses to those who signed contracts. I, myself, was offered a contract by the Fletcher people, and a most flattering one, but, of course, nothing ever came of it. It seems to me that the major leagues are adopting a very wise course in the proposed extension of the American Association into cities like Detroit, Cleveland, Cincinnati and Pittsburgh, for with continuous ball there it will make it much harder for the leagues to get a footing. In my opinion, the players will be slow to accept anything of that kind as long as the major-league magnates treat them fairly, and I guess most of them are doing that now."

RAPID HYDROPLANE

The Oregon Wolf, a nine-cylinder hydroplane, in a sanctioned race against time at Portland, broke the world's motor boat records on a five mile course for all distances up to thirty miles. The Oregon Wolf's time for the thirty miles was 42 minutes 14 2-5 seconds, the best previous record over a six-lap course was 44 minutes 33 1-5 seconds.

WOMAN'S PLUCK IN A SHOE SHOP

Continued the Business After Her Husband's Death—Finally Meets Success

In a downtown building there is a shoe shop far different from many other cobblers' places, in that it is light, airy and free from musty odors, says the New York Evening Post. Its chief title to fame, however, is the fact that it is run by a woman, a typical New Englander, tall, spare, with lines of granite about the jaw and little wrinkles of humor about the eyes. She has made a brave fight of it to maintain her business in competition with men who have been all too ready to cut prices and force her out of trade, and to-day she told the story of her struggles.

"Well, I've been here ten years alone now," she said, "and I'm alive yet. You see, they told me I would not be alive very long if I took up this business and tried to run it, but I did not look at it in just that way, and here I am. I worked with my husband first while he was sick for a couple of years, and I ran the shop while he was away winters. He never thought I could make it go, and he was surprised, I tell you, to see how well I had done.

"The thing started when he was taken sick. He had been in the business over in Nassau Street for twelve years before we came to Fulton, and then he began to have throat trouble. At least, that was what I tried to think it was; I couldn't believe it was consumption. However, when he came back from Florida, where he'd gone the first winter, and then had to go up to Saratoga and Liberty in the summer, and then the same thing over again the next year, why I knew that I was going to lose him. Of course, an illness like that cost a lot of money, what with specialists, and one thing and another, and by the time he died there wasn't much of a balance left.

"I made up my mind I'd have to work, and that I might as well keep up the business. I said to myself that I'd try it for a year, even if I did not make a cent. I told the young man who was our foreman that he had better stay with me, and he agreed to. Well, would you believe it, only a few days after I started in for myself three of my big customers left me because rivals, men, would do the work a few cents cheaper. Wasn't that a way to treat a woman who had just buried a husband? I tell you some men would just like to put a woman under their feet and walk on her. But they can't do that with me.

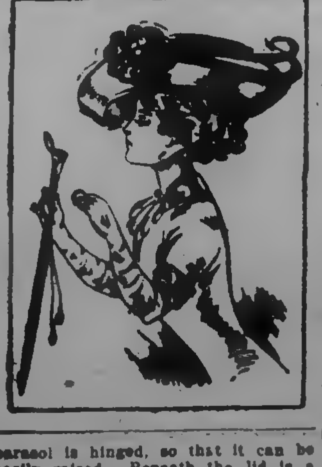
"Well," she went on, "things looked pretty bright after the first year. I knew something about a shoe, you see, for when I was married I was earning $18 a week in a shoe factory in Lynn. But this business was such a complicated one it nearly drove me crazy at first—so many prices and [illegible] little jobs, you know. But then, as I had said to my husband, 'If I go crazy they can put me in a sanitarium.' However, I didn't, and every year things looked brighter. Now I've got a good trade and lots of old customers, and some day I guess I'll have as nice a business as you'd want to see. I keep eight men and a foreman, myself, and a boy in this shop, and that's pretty good for a woman, now, isn't it?"

PUFF BOX IN PARASOL

Handle Also Contains Lip Salve or Rouge

Men as a rule delight in criticising the frailties of the weaker sex. They especially find amusement in alluding to the pleasure women take in using powders and lip salves. A peep into a woman's carrying bag will generally reveal a tiny powder puff or some other equally efficient beautifier. When opportunity offers they slyly slip the puff out and use it.

Just imagine how infinitely more convenient to have these little adjuncts stored in the handle of a parasol, where they can be quickly reached without being noticed. Parasols and umbrellas with these novel appurtenances are now obtainable, because of the thoughtfulness of an up-to-date inventor. The top of the handle of the parasol is hinged, so that it can be easily raised. Beneath the lid is a small cup, containing powder-puff, etc. In some of these handles the top when raised reveals a small mirror, an additional convenience that will naturally be appreciated.



Other personal ornaments that conceal the powder puff are the hat pins with large heads in which a puff can be accommodated under a hinged top, pendants and watch bracelets. In many of the watch bracelets, which are of course expensive, the puff is concealed beneath the watch in a little cavity just the right size and shape.

THE RIVER CLYDE

A Few Notes About the Most Wonderful Waterway in the World

The Clyde is one of the most important shipbuilding districts in the world. Between Glasgow and Greenock there are about fifty shipyards, and their aggregate output has on two occasions exceeded 600,000 tons. During the last twenty years the total has rarely been less than 400,000 tons, and has frequently exceeded 500,000. Two Super-Dreadnoughts are at present under construction on the river, besides several cruisers and torpedo destroyers; and some of the most notable liners afloat, including the Lusitania, have been built and launched from the banks of the narrow waterway. The River Clyde is one of the most wonderful waterways in the world, particularly that part of it which extends from Greenock up to Glasgow bridge, a distance of nearly twenty miles. At one time, a few hundred years ago, it was possible for pedestrians to cross the river at various points without wetting a shoe. To-day, between the points named, there is a uniform depth of nearly twenty feet at low water.

Needless to say this great change has not been effected without a tremendous amount of forethought, skill and determination. As far back as 1566, detachments of the city's inhabitants were employed to clear away a formidable sandbank about two miles above Dumbarton, but although the people labored away for several weeks their efforts had little effect. The river continued to wash down the sand from the upper reaches, and the bank became as formidable as ever. It was about this time that a then well-known civil engineer was consulted as to the best method of making the river navigable for shipping. He informed the city authorities that it would be impossible to deepen the river, his theory being that as the bed of the river was deepened the water level would fall correspondingly.

Fortunately, the authorities did not allow themselves to be seriously influenced by this expert's opinion. After several more ineffective attempts had been made to solve the problem, a civil engineer from Chester, in 1768, experimented on a system of contracting the river by means of jetties, and removing the sand and gravel from within the narrow channel. In 1773 he contracted with the town council to make the river from Dumbuck upwards a depth of six feet and a width of 300 feet at low water, at a cost of $9,200. He succeeded in giving a depth of ten inches more than he bargained for, and he was rewarded by the town council with an additional sum of $6,000 and a silver cup. That may be said to have been the beginning of the great work of widening and deepening the river, a work which has been proceeding almost incessantly ever since.

THE PATAGONIAN INDIANS

Nowadays the Patagonian Indians [illegible] They are impulsive, capable of strong prejudices, very revengeful, and often with good reason suspicious of strangers. They are not to be trifled with, and when under the influence of drink are brutal and dangerous. They show love for their children and wives and kindness to their own people. They are divided into numerous tribes [illegible] groups, each having its chief, or [illegible] upon whom the burdens of government rest but lightly. The cacique of the tribe to whom this village belonged was then at another camp. They believe in a good and an evil spirit, whom they propitiate, and have many stories, myths, and superstitions [illegible] with the sun, moon, and stars, while the slaying of horses and drinking of blood form a conspicuous part of their superstitions, birth, marriage and death ceremonies, many of which are most repulsive.

VEGETABLES AND CHARACTER

According to a French doctor, the potato develops in the eater an evenness of temper and calmness of thought. The carrot acts as a stimulant to the character, and is recommended for biliousness and to peevish or jealous persons. Spinach develops ambitious dreams and energy. Peas, we can understand, are not calculated to help serious thought, and the cauliflower induces egotism.

Stack of Old Horseshoes

A unique sight is to be seen at Upper Studley, near Trowbrige, where Mr. James Jennings, the well-known steam roundabouts proprietor, has a huge stack of old horse-shoes which he has collected during the past two years. It stands 17 feet high, is 10 feet through, weighs about 150 tons, and could not be purchased for $2,000. The shoe stack attracts great attention, particularly from touring motorists, who frequently stop to examine the curious pile.

Former Local Family Out West.

A family from the Township of Smith, consisting of a young man, his wife and three children, went out to Saskatchewan about two years ago. They had read in the Western press of the wonderful crops raised in that Province. Among their other household goods they took a Guinea pig, a Thomas cat and a canary. On their arrival they bought two horses and a cow. Then Dame Fortune gave them the "Marble glance." Their barn was burned down and their best horse, "Rosy," was destroyed. Next day Thomas cat killed the Guinea pig, and in the evening as the coal oil lamp shed its feeble rays cat the canary bird. Thomas died by the pick-axe-handle method. A few days later these Peterborough County settlers began to dig a well. Through the rich soil the men sunk their spades, until about twenty-five feet in depth had been reached. As the soil was soft, and time was not of much account, the well was dug with a diameter of about ten feet at the top. "Bessie," their cow, was and is of an inquisitive turn of mind. One evening Bossy, seeing the new improvements to the ranch, investigated. She looked over the edge of the well and fell in. Fortunately for her, water had not yet been struck. She lowed and mooed as cows will when in trouble. Ropes with loops at the ends were let down, to no purpose. At last a hose was attached to the water supply of the next door neighbour and the half-finished well was flooded, in the hope that Bessie would swim on the top. And strange to say, so she did. The crumbling side of the well confined the water coming from an inch and a half pipe until the cow, lowing and moaning, was brought out safely.

Men Who Don't Excercise

SUFFER FROM INDIGESTION, HEADACHES, POOR APPETITE, SLEEPLESSNESS.

Nothing so Sure to "Set Up" a Man Make Him Feel Brisk and Vigerous as Dr. Hamilton's Pills.

Lack of exercise and overwork were the causes that combined to almost kill Samuel S. Stephens Jr., one of the best known citizens in Woodstock.

In his convincing letter Mr. Stephens says:—

"A year ago I returned home after a long trip, completely worn out. I was so badly affected by chronic biliousness, so much overcome by constant headaches, dizziness, that I despaired of ever getting well. I was always tired and languid, had no energy and spirit, found it difficult to sleep for more than five hours. My appetite was so fickle that I ate next to nothing, and in consequence lost weight and strength. I was pale and dark rings under my eyes that made me look like a shadow.

"It was a blessing that I used Dr. Hamilton's Pills. In one week I felt like a new man. The feeling of weight and nausea in my stomach disappeared. My eyes looked brighter, color grew better, and, best of all, I began to enjoy my meals. The dizziness, languor and feeling of depression passed away, and I fast regained my old-time vigor and spirits. To-day I am well — thanks to Dr. Hamilton's Pills."

For health, strength, comfort and good spirits there is no medicine like Dr. Hamilton's Pills. Beware of substitutes, and don't let any dealer palm off some other pill on which he can make more money. 25c. per box, or five boxes for $1.00, by mail from The Catarrhozone Company, Kingston, Ont.

THE HINDU IMMIGRANT.

The decision of the federal government not to relax the regulations against the immigration of Hindus in- [illegible] caused great satisfaction in Vancouver, where the Hindus in Canada most do congregate. All the more so because the decision was based on official investigation by the department of the interior into the whole question, including the conditions of Hindu life in British Columbia, and was not merely a concession to public opinion in Vancouver. "The conclusion arrived at," remarks the Vancouver Province, "is a direct rebuff to those people in the east, and especially in Toronto, who made such a determined effort to open the door to this class of immigration."

AN ARTIST'S DEATH.

A Detroit newspaper recently announced the death in a charitable institution for old men of a portrait painter of "some fame" at the advanced age of [illegible] years. Ill health and grief at the loss of his wife and two children at sea when he was still, comparatively, a young man had, it was said, robbed his right hand of its cunning. His patrons slipped away, and at 60 he was both homeless and penniless. As is not always the case under similar circumstances, a number of his old friends stuck to him in his adversity, and agreed that if his admission into some institution could be managed, as being the only open door, they would pay for his maintenance. This was arranged, and the offer communicated to him, only however to be received with scorn. Later he was told that he had been appointed assistant of the home without salary, a position (?) which he occupied for 20 long years and he died innocent of the deception and rejoicing in the belief that he had finished his days without becoming an object of charity. Cases such as this should be startling enough to awaken the most indifferent to a realization of the terrible condition of an old age of want and penury, and to an immediate determination to adopt some absolutely sure means of safeguarding against such a calamity. The Government of Canada has supplied its people with this means, and by the payment at any Postal Money Order Office of a small amount weekly, monthly or as may be otherwise arranged, protection against an old age of dependence and humiliation may be made with absolute certainty. For example, the payment of $1 a week by a man of 25 until he is 55 would give him an Annuity from the latter age of $258.25, payable quarterly; while if he continued paying until he was 60, his Annuity would be $397.36. In either case, if he died before the date fixed for the Annuity to begin all his payments with compound interest at 3 per cent. would be refunded to his legal representatives.

Literature descriptive of the features of the Annuities System, and tables showing the cost of Annuities on different plans, may be obtained at the Post Office or on application to the Superintendent of Annuities, Ottawa, to whom letters go free of postage.

Editorial Notes

It is understood that before passing a new naval act the Ottawa Government will submit the question to the people. This seems the proper course. In so important a matter the consent of the people should be obtained. It is a new question in Dominion politics and involves an expenditure so great that it should not be entered upon rashly.

11,000 milk bottles have been seized in Toronto because their contents were between "wine" measure and "Imperial" measure. In this city, a good many people would not kick if there was only that slight difference in capacity if the price of milk would only come down and purchasers could be certain that the extract de cow and the farm pump were not, at least, third cousins.

The Times is in receipt of a very prettily gotten up booklet issued to inaugurate a Semi-Centennial of Confederation. This will, of course, be held in 1917. As the booklet says: "Let the idea of unity prevail among us. Let 1917 deepen and widen this. Let the confidence of Canadians in Canada increase, and the good will and harmony of our people grow abundantly. Let us realire that "faith is better than distrust, and concord than disagreement. Let us prepare ourselves for this great national and imperial event by designating ourselves everywhere in Canada as Canadians, not as provincialists."

The Dominion Government has issued a Blue Book of Express Statistics for the Dominion of Canada. According to this report the capitalization of distinctly Canadian Companies was reported at $4,005,200, divided as follows:—Canadian Express Company, $1,705,200; Canadian Northern Express Company, $300,000; Dominion Express Company, $2,000,000; total, $4,005,200. The amount realized in cash for the foregoing stock issue was reported to have been $3,165,200, thus leaving $840,000 of what seems "water". This, however, does not prevent the three Canadian Express Companies from doing splendid work and giving a most satisfactory service.

When the local Board of Trade had their important subjects up for discussion a few days ago, there were eighteen representative business men and manufacturers present. Whilst not wanting to throw cold water on the local Board of Trade, there should have been three or four times that many members present. Why not take St. Catharines as an example. That city, with not as large a population [illegible] campaign in favor of its Board of Trade, and increased the membership from 35 to 350. The chairman said that over one thousand mechanics would be required in the city in addition to those already employed, during the summer. What's the matter with Peterborough?

DIAMONDS IN HEAPS

Most of the Largest Ones Have Been Found Accidentally

Diamonds to the value of $20,000,000 are extracted from Kimberley annually. Everything impresses you at the mines except the diamonds. Shaken by machines on to greased tables, over which dirty water is constantly passing, they have no lustre in their raw state, and even when seen in heaps of all sizes on the office counters, it is impossible to think of Hatton-Garden cheques.

Passing envy is followed by wonder that minerals so plentiful and so cheaply extracted (the cost may be given roughly as $1.40 per load, and the yield $3.90 per load) should be the coveted hall-mark of wealth and fashion. There is infinitely more beauty in a wayside flower—until you see the cut diamond fashioned at Amsterdam. They have a box of finished diamonds at the Kimberley offices of De Beers.

It is a strange thing that most of the largest diamonds have been found by accident. This was the case with the great Cullinan diamond, which [illegible]

"TOM BROWN'S" BIRTHDAY

The Hero of the Famous Fight Preaches Every Sunday

The hero of one of the finest books for boys ever written has celebrated the eighty-seventh anniversary of his birthday. The Rev. Augustus Orlebar, vicar of Wellington, Bedfordshire, for nearly fifty-three years, is the original of Tom Brown, whose fight with "the Slogger" is so vividly described in "Tom Brown's Schooldays." Mr. Orlebar remembers the encounter very well.

It is not claimed that he represents Tom Brown in any other respect, but he was the Rugby boy who at coverpoint caught out the redoubtable batsman in the cricket match against the Marylebone team described in the same story. Hughes, afterwards the judge, was captain of the eleven when he put Orlebar into the team, and Orlebar himself was captain when Dr. Arnold died in 1842.

Despite his age, Mr. Orlebar, as he has always done, enjoys good health. He preaches every Sunday and looks after the Parish generally. Mr. Orlebar is a non-smoker, but not a teetotaler.

GREATLY EXAGGERATED

She had been at the seaside and in the country for the holidays, and her industrious fiancé had been working and waiting for her during the long, long days. Now she had returned, and he had been hearing many things of her, and was sore displeased.

"They tell me," he said, painfully, "that you flirted desperately with no fewer than six men."

Her cheeks flushed and her eyes blazed. "Who told you that?" she asked, angrily.

"Several people. It has been common talk."

Her anger gave way to sobs. "Oh, Frank," she pleaded, as she flung herself on his neck, "it isn't true—it isn't true."

A great load was lifted from his heart. "No, Frank," she went on, "it isn't true; there were only four."

THE MANURE HEAP

Never Allow Yourself to be Tempted to Dispose of It

So far as manure is concerned you should make it your business to keep your small holding self-supporting so far as possible. In these days of mechanical traction dung is becoming increasingly scarce, and though artificials are more used than ever, there will always be a demand for the invaluable farmyard refuse, which contains the nutritious properties for soil in such well-balanced quantities.

Still, though manure is such an important commodity, there is no need for it to intrude, and your stack may well be made up at some convenient point well away from the house. Here waste from the stable, pigsty, cowhouses and yards may be stored, and it should be packed closely so that it may "heat" and decompose.

Later on in the winter—preferably in frosty weather—the stuff may be carted on to the land and used, economically yet judiciously; the more rotten it is the better. Never be tempted to dispose of manure. It will probably be against the conditions of your tenancy, but whether or not, it is bad farming to let a load go.

CONCERNING THE MOON

An Interesting Bit of Canadian Folklore by E. McCulloch

Eveline McCulloch, Ridgetown, Ontario, [illegible] the following bit of interesting folklore:

A new [illegible] in the north sky portends a [illegible] month.

A [illegible] in the south sky portends a hot month.

A new moon straight up so that the hunter may not hang his powder horn on it denotes a dry moon, for he may safely hunt that month.

Vice versa, a moon lying flat, on whose corner the hunter may hang his powder horn is a wet moon, and rain can be counted upon.

A red moon denotes heat and drouth.

A yellow moon, storms especially wind.

A clear, white moon, clear weather.

When the moon changes from one quarter to another, a change of weather is looked for.

A large circle around the moon denotes a storm as many days off as there are visible stars inside the circle.

A far-off circle denotes a near-by storm.

If you [illegible] the first glimpse of a new moon over your right shoulder and wish without looking away you will have good fortune all that moon and obtain your wish; also, vice versa, seeing the moon over your left shoulder is not good luck.

All signs fail in a drouth.

A harvest moon stays full two nights.

A hunter's moon follows the harvest moon.

The moon shining on one's face sleeping causes insanity. This is carefully observed among old nurses.

Certain phases of the moon affect our moods and dispositions.

Insane people are perceptibly worse in certain phases of the moon.

Pork killed in the advance of the moon will not shrink in the frying, while that killed in the waning of the moon will shrink while cooking.

Potatoes should be planted in the full of the moon when stems are hol-

To cut or burn the ends of one's hair in new moon systematically for some months will insure a heavy, luxurious growth of hair.

The ancients reckoned time and events by the phases of the moon and the moons in succession.

The moon and the phase of the moon we are born under determine not only our characteristics, disposition, etc., but our capabilities and achievements. These are determined with the signs of the zodiac corresponding.

People born under certain moon conditions are susceptible to those conditions as they reoccur.

Many sailors and fishermen guide their expeditions by the moon.

If you cut Canada thistles in the full of the moon. No other time. low, it succeeds in killing them outright.

LONG DISTANCE EXPERIMENT

The Paris International exchange called up the local office of the Daily Chronicle, and switched it one to Aberdeen. Despite the long distance—a matter of 1,000 miles or so—it was possible to hear quite distinctly and without any buzzing.

GLASS FROM SLAG

Slag obtained from various ironworks in England is being made into glass by a concern in Liverpool. Proportions of sand and sulphate of soda, and in some instances a little lime, are put into the blast furnace, converting the ordinary slag into a glass that is available for slates, paving-blocks, bricks, and tiles. It is said that slates can be manufactured at less than half the expense of Welsh slate. They have a polished appearance, and can be made in any size and shape, and in many colors.

STOP STREET CRIES

In fulfilment of a promise to a dying patient, Dr. C. Fenwick, of Thornton Heath, recently called the attention of the Croydon Council to the nuisance of street cries to persons ill in bed. In consequence a new by-law has been adopted imposing a penalty of $25 where any offender refuses to desist.

LIGHTS OF THE OCEAN

The number of lighthouses and lightships in the world, not including the inland bodies of water, such as the Great Lakes, is 15,221. Of this number, 12,171 are on the Atlantic, 2,288 on the Pacific, 677 on the Indian Ocean, and [illegible] in the Polar seas.

A BABY SUPERSTITION

In the annual report of the Medical Officer of Health for Stepney it is stated that there is a curious objection on the part of some women to weigh their babies. It is often their firm belief that if a baby is weighed it will die before it is a year old.

One of the oldest compositors in Scotland, Mr. John White, has retired from the service of The Glasgow Herald. Mr. White, though in his eightieth year, is a man of remarkable vigor. He was 64 years at the "case."

A Millinery Contrivance

A French milliner has hit on the idea of fitting the headgear of her clients with little, round spy-glasses. The spy-glass is placed inside the rim of the hat, and is a tiny reflector which forms the heart of a giant rose, and more often it nestles in a choux of ribbon. It is visible, of course, only to its wearer, who by its aid can see exactly what kind of impression she has succeeded in creating upon those behind her.

A PECULIAR HYBRID

What has been aptly described as a hybrid between a needle and a frog has been grown by two eminent French scientists, M. Bataillon and M. Henneguy. The eggs of a frog have been fertilized purely by a mechanical stimulus, pricking them with a fine platinum or glass needle. The needle has been as remarkable in its effects as Aaron's rod, for the eggs have on being placed in sterilized water, developed into tadpoles just as though a male frog had fathered them into existence.

LEVEL COLT'S FEET

Properly Done, It Cures Wrong Tendencies and Prevents Resultant Injuries

The feet of foals frequently need leveling to prevent an abnormal development of the legs as a result of unequal wear of the hoofs. Many foals stand badly at first, and if they are slow in gaining a correct position of the legs the hoofs may become worn in such a way as to prevent a proper standing position or a straight form of action.

Leveling the feet acts both as prevention and cure. It prevents a breakage, or other cause of rapid wearing away of any part of the hoof from throwing the weight on the wrong part of the joints. Even if the foal is born with a natural tendency to stand wrong, as with the feet too wide apart or too close together or pigeon-toed, such a tendency may be gradually corrected in a large part by keeping the feet level. A colt that stands pigeon-toed, for example, wears off the outside wall of the hoof faster than the inside, and the more that condition develops the worse the tendency to stand wrong becomes. By rasping off the inner wall to correspond with or even slightly to exceed the wear of the other side, the foot will be thrown more nearly into line as it strikes the ground. While the leg bones and joints are growing they are susceptible to the persistent pressure from one angle or another and grow toward a correct position or away from it according to the condition of the feet.

A level foot induces the colt to assume a correct position of the leg. As an example of the marked effect of the pressure on the joints from shortening one wall or the other of the hoof, work horses with lameness and symptoms of spavin have frequently been made to go sound simply by taking half an inch off the inner wall of the hoof, thus throwing the concussion on to the outside of the hock joint. If colt's hoofs are kept fairly short at the toes, with the inner and outer walls of equal length, the foot will develop as nearly a correct shape as it can be induced to take and the limbs as well will be safe-guarded against deformity.

Dog Poisoners at Work.

Whilst it is generally said that Peterborough has too many dogs running at large, there are a few good dogs worth the price of their license and worth much more than a dose of poison costs to get rid of them. A few days ago, Mr. V. Eastwood's fox terrier, "Laddie," died as a result of poisoning. On Thursday, three other dogs in the same section of the city, received doses of poison, at the corner of Antrim and George streets, two succumbed. The other dog, a fox terrier, the property of Mr. J. B. Pentland, Benson Avenue, is suffering severely.

LIGHT THAT DOES NOT FAIL

A Volcanic Beacon in San Salvador Republic

The republic of San Salvador is the only government on earth that collects lighthouse fees on account of a volcano that it owns, and without the slightest cost of upkeep.

The volcanic beacon is about eight miles inland from the port of Acajutla, and its pillar of cloud by day and its fire sky by night are visible for many miles out to sea. It bursts forth every seven minutes, and is just as accurate as any revolving light that warns mariners of danger in any part of the world.

This volcano has been keeping up [illegible] seven minutes' service of eruption ever since anyone can remember. A FUNNY PROPOSITION

The Boston Transcript makes a very pertinent remark that man is a funny proposition, because, when he reads a medical book, he fancies he has every disease described; but when he reads the work of a moralist all the faults that are pointed out he sees, not in himself, but in his neighbor.

THE CLIMBING ROSE

Points to be Observed in the Cultivation of This Flower

There are climbing roses that will bloom continuously from June until the end of October. But it is just the past score years that have witnessed this remarkable development of climbing roses. Before that, the varieties most common were not at all hardy, their flowers were not nearly so large nor so beautiful as those of to-day. But twenty years ago someone introduced the memorial rose, and about the same time the crimson rambler, a hardy, showy, climbing rose, with flowers in clusters, came over from China and aroused great interest among horticulturists. The question arose whether it could not be combined with the memorial, for the crimson rambler, though strong and bearing beautiful flowers, had nevertheless many defects which were absent in the memorial. The grafting was done and successfully. New hybrids were produced, which combined hardiness, abundance of bloom, rapid growth and grace of form, with great resistance to disease and insects. It was the beginning of a new era in climbing roses. The new roses spread everywhere, and rose-growers were enthusiastic over the results of the experiment. Other combinations were attempted with success, and we have the results to-day in the multiplicity of lovely climbing rose vines that make beautiful so many gardens.

There are three groups of the climbing roses: the multiflora, which bloom early in June only; the prairie roses, heavy in flower and with grey-green foliage, and, most important of all, the memorial group, which flowers all summer and often until the frost has come. Nearly everyone knows one variety of the memorial group, the Dorothy Perkins. It is much like the crimson rambler, save that its flowers are pink: its foliage is thick and glossy, and it is altogether a very desirable variety to cultivate.

In growing climbing roses the secret of success is simply good soil. The earth can hardly be too rich nor the trench too deep. If strong plants are bought at the outset, and they are planted in good soil and well watered, success is almost absolutely certain. The only harm possible might come from insects, but these may be guarded against by judicious spraying.

STATUE OF THE KING

Mr. Arthur Rogers, A.R.C.A., is now engaged upon the creation of a colossal bronze statue of King George V. This, mounted upon a lofty pedestal, will stand at the summit of the main steps leading to the grounds of the Crystal Palace, thus his Majesty will seem to be always overlooking the Festival of the Empire. The King will be represented wearing his Coronation robes, and holding his sceptre in his hand. The sculptor was a prominent pupil at the Manchester School of Arts.

THE BEGUM OF BHOPAL

Her Highness of East India Visited London in State

Amongst the many interesting visitors who visited London this year was one of the most powerful of East Indian potentates in the person of her Highness the Begum of Bhopal. Her Highness brought a large retinue, including a native doctor, several cooks and an astrologer. The Princess (who is a reigning Sovereign) wore a beautiful silken robe and long veil over her face. A special train was brought to the pier, and her landing was from a gangway which immediately faced the door of the saloon carriage. One eye-witness of a great Durbar held in India tells of seeing at that wonderful and gorgeous ceremony, her Highness the Begum standing between two huge native Princes, Jeypore and Joudphore, who were magnificently got up with fall skirts (petticoats he called them) of folds innumerable of soft cream color. From the waist up the garments were of richest embroidered velvets and silks, and literally with their high turbans, massed with superb jewels, the splendid scimitars also glittering with precious stones, but the little woman, who had only a few above her in rank, the Sovereign of an independent province, with a gorgeous retinue, was most simply attired in trousers! The pajama-like garments of dull, shaded stripes, the bodice and short jacket being being also of sombre color, her black hair done quite plainly with a short silken shawl draped over head and shoulders and remarkably few jewels, only a few showing in her hair and round her throat. The Begum's rightful place was apparently between the two great Princes, and it was a most curious sight to see the huge Maharatto draw himself up to his stately height, advance, and bow low and gracefully to his Sovereign's representative, then retiring make way for the Begum, who, small though she was, showed no less dignity in her obeisance; and after her Highness came the second of the huge Princes, all eyes being fixed on such an unusual trio, even in that magnificent and inspiring assemblage.

FOR DOING NOTHING

Some Fat Salaries That Were Easily Earned

Uncle Sam has been "getting a move" on him lately, and, as the result of exercising his lynx eyes, has been successful in saving $180,000 a year of the public money which has hitherto been paid to people in the way of salaries for doing nothing. For decades past there have been some snug little jobs connected with the House of Representatives. Apparently, however, some Paul Pry discovered these sinecures, a committee investigated them, and their report has provided one of the most interesting documents produced by the American Parliament for a long time.

One striking example of the "waste of public salary funds," as a chairman of the committee describes it, was the discovery that a thirteen-year-old girl, the daughter of the chief doorkeeper of the Congress, was on the pay-roll as "clerk of the doorkeeper" at a salary of $1,200 per annum, and an extra month's pay each year as a vacation gratuity. And although they made the closest investigations, the committee were quite unable to discover exactly what the functions of this minor official were.

Then there were thirty-eight extra policemen authorized when, during the Spanish-American War, it was reported that there was a plot to dynamite the Capitol, who were still on the pay-roll, costing annually $39,000. Two telegraph operators, drawing $1,400 each, and assigned to a wire long ago discontinued, were also still on the pay-sheet. By abolishing the salaries of employes of the "clerks' document room," which room was itself abolished sixteen years ago, $6,000 per annum has been saved, and an almost equal sum by stopping the pay of employes designated as "attendants in the library," the library having been removed many years ago from the Capitol.

THE OLDEST FLAG

The flag of Denmark, a plain red banner bearing on it a white cross, is the oldest flag now in existence. For 300 years both Norway and Sweden were united with Denmark under this flag. In the year 1219 King Waldemar of Denmark, when leading his troops to battle against the Livonians, saw, or thought he saw, a bright light in the form of a cross in the sky. He held this appearance to be a promise of Divine aid, and pressed forward to victory. From this time he had the cross placed on the flag of his country, and called it the Dannebork—that is, strength of Denmark.

FOR ASSISTANCE OF EMIGRANTS

British Society That Will Advance Part of Necessary Funds—Matrimonial Bureau

New impetus to emigration from Britain to her overseas dominions has been provided by the Empire Emigration Society, an undertaking organized to assist those who wish to emigrate but are unable to do so for lack of funds. Lord Ridley and Lord Stanhurst are actively interested in this society and act as trustees of its funds. Not the ill nourished and poverty stricken but the able bodied with some savings to their credit are the class of emigrant to whom chances are being offered. Soon after it was established, the Empire Emigration Society had over 1,500 people on its books with $10,000 at their disposal, who were anxious to save the balance in order to win through to hoped for prosperity in Canada, Australia or New Zealand.

The intending emigrants have to open an account with the Society with a minimum deposit of four dollars. Each subsequent payment must not be less than one dollar. As soon as the depositor has paid in half the necessary amount his passage is booked and arrangements made to supply him with employment when he arrives at his destination. Every class of worker is dealt with, and steps are taken to help emigrants to follow their own callings overseas. Typical of the variety of applicants in touch with the Society are four cases the secretary selected at random. A nurse, who desires to go to British Columbia has enough money to pay her passage, but is in need of advice as to the best means of going; a stonemason, who means to emigrate as soon as he can raise sufficient funds and who has paid a first instalment of seven dollars; a widow, who is an expert dressmaker, and hopes to have saved enough by the end of June to go out to Canada; a doctor with some capital who wants to know of a colony where he may practice his profession and at the same time give his two sons a start in farming.

The Duke of Marlborough recently gave a broad hint to the surplus women of England to go to the dominions beyond the seas where men were waiting for wives. Said the Duke: "There are a million more women than men in England, and there are a million more men than there are women in the dominions." So, indirectly, the Empire Emigration Society is playing the part of marriage bureau for Canadian bachelors, and domestic helps all over the country are becoming infected with the travel fever after dreaming of more congenial careers in new lands.

FAMOUS FOLKS

Sir Charles Wyndham practised as a doctor before going on the stage.

Sir Edward Clarke's greatest hobbies are boating and piano-playing.

Violets have always been the favorite [illegible] Eugenie.

Stamp-collecting is one of the pastimes of Mr. Alfred Austin, the Poet Laureate.

Lord Charles Beresford collects ball programmes as a hobby, especially favoring those painted by lady artists.

Mme. Patti possesses an old doll called Henriette, which was given to her when she was seven years old for singing nicely.

Mr. Hall Caine makes a practice of visiting every place he intends to describe in a novel. When engaged on a story he writes on an average 1,500 words a day.

Mr. Louis N. Parker, the dramatist, was born in France, his father was an American, his mother an Englishwoman, his first language was Italian, and he was educated in Germany.

A GROTESQUE OFFERTORY

Mengo Cathedral, in Uganda, which was recently destroyed by lightning, was probably the largest edifice in Central Africa being capable of containing nearly 5,000 people. It was consecrated about six years ago, and an offertory of grotesquely varied gifts was collected on the occasion. This consisted of 13 cows, four goats, 125 eggs, 130 fowls, 75,000 cowrie shells, and a number of coins. The cows, for lack of room, were not taken inside the Cathedral, but the goats were led up to the altar and presented to the bishop, while the fowls were brought in big bamboo crates.

MELANCHOLY IN FLOWERS

Curious, indeed, the doom assigned to two of the fairest of the spring flowers, for if primroses are forsaken the violet is a nun. Perhaps this atmosphere of gentle melancholy increases the affection inspired by these favorite flowers which seem dearer far to human kind than such rivals as the brilliant marsh marigold and the dangerous aconite.—Black and White.

PREFER BIG CLOTHES

The male portion of our United States visitors (says the Tailor and Cutter) might generally pass as native-born subjects of this country if it were not for their obtrusively easy-fitting garments. The United States is a big country, and many of her subjects seem to prefer looking a few sizes larger than Nature intended them to be. Their coats are usually cut about four inches larger than they ought to be, and then built up with wadding and haircloth until there is a semblance of outline agreeable to the American idea of largeness.

IMPOSSIBLE

Father:—"I don't believe that young man loves you as much as he says."

Daughter.—"Why, father, he writes such clear and sensible letters."

Father.—"That's just it. Who ever heard of a lover writing sensible letters?"

NOT USED TO IT

There was an air of storm in the house. Papa, whose sole [illegible] was to get out of his evening dress waistcoat, and change into something with an elastic back, was looking as fierce as though somebody had asked him for a subscription. Mamma was in tears, and the two Miss Robinsons looked on more in sorrow than in anger.

"What's the racket?" whispered young Franklin, who, if report speaks true, will one day lead the youngest Miss Robinson to the altar.

"S-sh!" was the reply.

"Dinner not up to the mark, eh?"

"S-sh!"

"One of those waiters trod on the old man's favorite?"

"No. But, oh, it's awful! You know, dear mamma had such trouble to get an invitation to this affair, and she had built such hopes of getting really to know the best people in the town, as the outcome of having been to the dear countess's dinner-party, and now papa has spoilt it all, and disgraced us for ever."

"Good gracious! How?"

"Why, at the end of the dinner he had four knives, three forks, and two spoons left! Isn't it awful?"

ANOTHER CHAMPION

"Oh, yes," remarked Mr. N[illegible] easily, "the United States is a [illegible] place! I've been all over [illegible] York, 'Frisco, Philadelphia [illegible] Mountains—oh, yes!"

The guests were very [illegible] pressed.

"Wonderful [illegible] of [illegible] that!" continued Mr. N[illegible] complacently.

"Indeed?" queried the [illegible]ly.

"Ay, indeed! I went [illegible] that range once. Used to roll [illegible] in a blanket and sleep in the [illegible] But the most remarkable [illegible] it is the echo. Would you believe [illegible] when I went to bed of an evening [illegible] had only to yell out 'Time to get [illegible]' at the top of my voice, and the echo would wake me next morning!"

"Och, Noorshe! You shameless old sinner!"

[illegible] obliging young parson was driving home one evening after making his pastoral calls, when he overtook a young woman of his congregation, the maid-of-all-work at a farm which he would pass, so he offered her a place in his carriage. The offer was gladly accepted and they chatted pleasantly all the way to the farm gate.

"Thank you, sir," she said as she got down.

"Don't mention it, my dear girl. Don't mention it," he told her politely.

"No, indeed, I won't," she assured him.

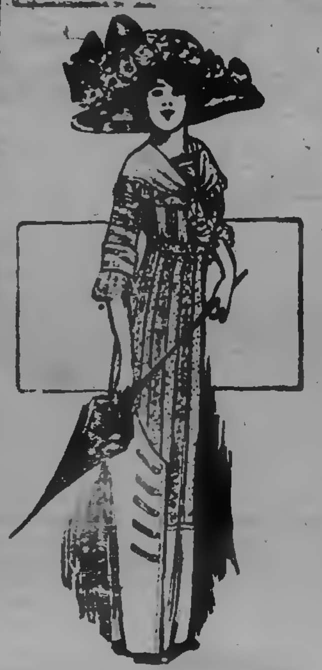
Auction Sales Conducted

I beg to announce to the residents of Peterborough County that I am prepared to conduct sales promptly and satisfactorily at reasonable rates. Your patronage is solicited. See me at home, Lot 16, Con. 5, Smith, (or at Massey Harris Office, Saturday P.M.), or write to S. J. Brooks.

Black smallpox, a most dreaded and dreadful disease has broken out in the Province of Quebec. And still people here talk, talk, talk, about a garbage by-law. The people of Ontario would not like to have every third man walking about with his face pitted. That is if he is lucky enough to escape the services of an undertaker.



THE DAINTY AND FASHIONABLE FICHU

The fichu effect is always extremely dainty for summer wear, and is this season one of the favorite modes with the French designers. The attractive design illustrated in the sketch is of lavender linen with tiny white embroidered dots and insertions of cluny lace. The waist line is slightly raised, and the bodice and sleeves are made entirely of linen and lace insertions. The sleeves are finished with deep cuffs of plain linen with lace frills falling over the arm. The fichu is of embroidered mull edged with lace matching the sleeve frills. The bottom of skirt is faced with a shaped band of lavender linen and trimmed with linen buttons and cord loops.

Diner:—"Look here, waiter, isn't this the steak I sent back fifteen minutes ago?"

Waiter:—"Oh, no, sir; the gentleman over by the door has the steak you sent back, sir."

MISS TALKER

"Do you know Miss Talker?"

"Not to speak to."

"But I thought you had called on her."

"I did, but she did all the talking."

Bell:—"Two pints."

EDITING A REPORT

He was editor of a go-ahead little journal which was published somewhere in the back of Arkansas, and, being new to the business and to the district, his personal paragraphs had been received with warmth, but not exactly the type of warmth he had expected. Anyhow, he took the lesson to heart.

"No more risks for me; no, sir!" he remarked, as he edited the report of the new revivalist's orration, and altered, "Cain, the murderer of Abel," to "Mr. Cain, the alleged cause of the late Mr. Abel's demise."

A WEAK ENDING

"That speech he made on Saturday night had a weak ending, it seemed to me."

"Well, what else could you expect on Saturday night?"

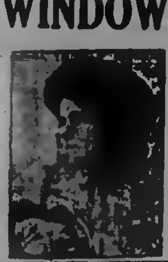
DELAYING

Most people put off until to-morrow that which they should have done yesterday.

FROM A SOUTH WINDOW

IN CANADA

"Love, Laughter and Life"



HEARTS TO LET

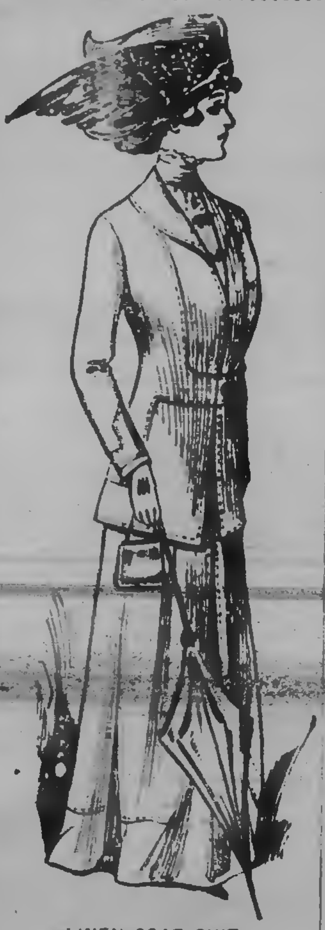
There are a good many hearts to let in this world, says the Family Journal. Some of them have been to let for years, and they will be to let until the owners die. Others are let too early, before the foundations of love are firmly set, and then they collapse on owner and tenant alike.

Again, there are those owners who wait so long for a tenant that they take the first one who comes along, and then complain because the tenant is undesirable. These are the foolish owners, for once they take a tenant they know that it is for life.

Then there are the careful owners who go about searching for the perfect tenant who never turns up, and they go on searching, searching, searching, passing by many splendid tenants whose qualities they fail to recognize, and all the time their hearts are getting dustier with the dust of age, and the owners are getting rustier with the rust of decay, until one morning we hear the owner has died after a long fruitless life-search for a perfect tenant to occupy a heart which was anything but perfect, and the owner of which was much too exacting and cantankerous.

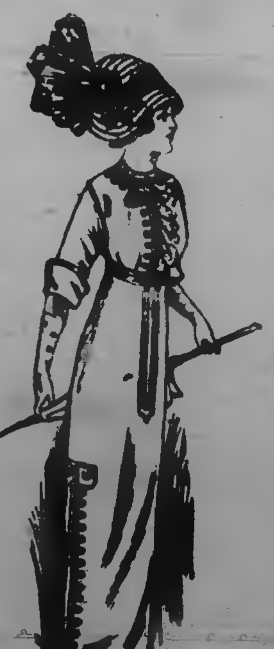
Absolute perfection does not exist in this world, and so it would be both silly and unreasonable to expect to find an absolutely perfect tenant. No; you have to take the best tenant you can possibly get, and then alter the house a little to suit the tenant, and alter the tenant a little to suit the house.

If the owner refuses to make any alterations to meet the wishes of the prospective tenant, then the tenant simply says that the house is unsuitable, and walks away to find one that is more comfortable.



LINEN COAT SUIT

Natural tone linen was used for an attractive coat suit put together on above lines. Note the cut of skirt, which has the effect of a tunic, but these pieces are stitched tight to the skirt all around. The coat is unique in its general design and especially good for a long-waisted woman. It depends entirely on heavy stitching for decoration.



SMART STREET COSTUME

The charming little dress illustrated to-day is developed in brownish green taffeta with trimmings of old gold braid and a border on bodice and sleeves of bronze velvet. The bodice is charmingly simple, but chic in effect, with the dainty jabot of fine cream lace and deep turnback cuffs on the short sleeves.

The hat is of black and white striped straw, trimmed with large loops of black satin and a cluster of cherries.

The Eko Club held a very enjoyable club dance in their quarters, at which some forty people were present. Appropriate music was supplied by Mr. R. J. Devey, light refreshments were served at 12 o'clock.

Now that a motion is to be brought up in the Ontario Legislature to allow wives who are property owners, to vote, has not caused the ladies of Peterborough to doff skirts and don the bifucated garments.

HINTS ON COOKING

How to Make a Good Plain Cake and Other Edibles

In making soups, if the stock is not rich enough, add half a teacupful, or less, of grated cheese. It will greatly improve the soup. Save all the odd bits of cheese, grate them, and keep in a stoppered bottle. The cheese is then ready for use when wanted.

Uncooked Fruit Cake

Take one pound each of Brazil nuts, dates and figs, or raisins can be used instead of figs, if liked better. Put all through the mincing machine. Butter a basin, and press the mixture down hard into it, and let it stand over night. Turn it out on to a plate, and cut with a knife. A slice of this cake and some bread and butter makes a very good midday meal.

A Good Plain Cake

Beat one-fourth of a cup of butter with one and a half cups of sugar; add the beaten yolks of two eggs and a cup of new milk. Mix two teaspoonfuls of baking-powder with two and a half cups of flour, and stir to the other mixture. Lastly, add the whites of the eggs stiffly beaten. Pour into a greased tin, and bake in a moderate oven.

Poor Man's Pie

Cut some raw potatoes in slices, and line a pie dish with them; then lay on slices of onions, season with pepper and salt, and, if liked, a little dried sage. Fill the dish with potatoes and onions, cover with mashed potato with a little bacon dripping, and season to taste. If preferred, pastry can be used instead of potatoes for a crust. When the pie is sufficiently baked, make a little hole in the centre, and pour in any gravy you may have.

Plain Cake for Tea

For tea, a plain cake is really cheaper than bread and butter. This cake is of the plainest kind, requiring neither fat nor eggs, yet children think it quite a treat. Mix together one pound of flour, two teaspoonfuls of baking-powder, three tablespoonfuls of brown sugar, four tablespoonfuls of currants, a teaspoonful of mixed spice, and a little candied peel. Make the whole into a soft dough with half a pint of milk or water, and bake in a moderate oven for about an hour.

French Custard

Take one quart of milk, two tablespoonfuls of flour, five lumps of sugar, the grated rind of half a lemon, or a few drops of almond essence, and three eggs. Beat the eggs well, and stir in the flour gradually, making it quite smooth, and thinning it with a little of the milk. Put the rest of the milk with the sugar into the saucepan, and when it nearly boils add the eggs and flour slowly. Keep stirring till it boils, and boil for five minutes, care being taken not to let it burn; then add the flavoring. This custard can be eaten hot or cold.

Home-Made Sausages

The best pork sausages cost twenty-two cents a pound; by making them at home they cost much less. Chop together one pound of fat and lean pork, one pound of lean veal, and one pound of beef suet; add half a pound of breadcrumbs, the rind of half a lemon, grated, one small nutmeg, one teaspoonful of pepper, six sage leaves, two teaspoonfuls of salt, and half a teaspoonful each of savory herbs and marjoram. Thoroughly mix all the ingredients together, and put into skins. This quantity will make thirty sausages of the usual size.

Mock Fish

Peel an onion, but do not cut it up, and boil it in a pint of milk for ten or twelve minutes, until the milk is nicely flavored. Make two ounces of ground rice into a smooth paste with two tablespoonfuls of cold milk; take the onion out of the boiling milk, add the rice and boil for ten minutes. Have ready four large potatoes, boiled; mash these, and mix with the thickened rice; stir in half an ounce of butter, pepper and salt to staste, and a dust of nutmeg. Mix all well together, and turn out on to a plate to get cold. Then form into shapes like fillets of fish; lay them in a greased pan, covered with buttered paper, and put into the oven to get quite hot. Serve with parsley sauce.

White spots on furniture can be removed by rubbing well with alcohol or spirits of camphor.

The Home Rule Bill argument has been postponed. It should be postponed "sine die."

Eggs are twelve cents a dozen cheaper in Chicago than in Peterborough. Our local farmers seem to have a full and perennial harvest.

The course of lectures on agriculture that has awakened much interest in Norwood, was completed on March 1st.

The editor of an "esteemed contemporary" received here in exchange strongly advocates the elimination of the word "obey" from the marriage service. We'll bet a lead quarter that the editor is loving a strong minded lady, with fixed ideas!

Hastings, Ont., is mad at Norwood Ont. It seems that the village council of Norwood asked Provincial Secretary Hanna to cut off the liquor store license in Hastings. The latter town thinks it is possibly not 21 years old, but still able to conduct its own affairs.

The Suffragettes in England still seem to be raising H—— Harpicords and other kinds of music. Why don't they emigrate to Peterborough and marry? By the new legislation to be introduced by the Ontario Legislature, they could vote and still be respected!

Even the poor old Canadian Churchman is pleased with the Charbonneau decision! The shadow of 'Andsome 'Arry still hangs heavy on the Anglican horizon.

Father Phelan believes that Catholic editors after death will have a place amongst the martyrs. They will have the satisfaction, too, of knowing that they have been instrumental in showing up some would-be martyrs, who were halted by the custodians of the outer gate. Having a few on our list we know whereof we speak.

Mrs. or Miss Lillian Russell, the much-married stage beauty, who is about to embark on her sixth matrimonial venture, can come to Ontario and find dozens of preachers ready to tie another nuptial knot for her without asking any embarrassing questions. London has a special attraction for foolish people; and people who are not foolish at home may become foolish while in London.—E. R. Dibdin.

At the back of men's unjust judgments lie two evil tendencies—a readiness to believe the worst and an eagerness to hear the worst.—Rev. H. F. B. Mackay.

Dog Poisoners at Work.

Whilst it is generally said that Peterborough has too many dogs running at large, there are a few good dogs worth the price of their license and worth much more than a dose of poison costs to get rid of them. A few days ago, Mr. V. Eastwood's fox terrier, "Laddie," died as a result of poisoning. On Thursday, three other dogs in the same section of the city, received doses of poison, at the corner of Antrim and George streets, two succumbed. The other dog, a fox terrier, the property of Mr. J. B. Pentland, Benson Avenue, is suffering severely.

PLENTY OF SOAP AND FRESH AIR

An English Borough Proposes to Make People Healthy — Suggestions Added by Correspondent

The Paddington Borough Council are considering the enactment of a new set of by-laws, to provide that every lodger in a tenement house shall, except in special circumstances, cause his bedroom windows to be opened for at least one hour in the morning and one hour in the afternoon; and to have the floor of his bedroom or bedrooms swept daily, and washed at least once a week.

"As one who is all for fresh air and plenty of soap and water, I welcome with joy this step on the part of the Paddington Fathers," says a correspondent, who thereupon proposes that the additional by-laws be adopted:—

Any person or persons doing anything prohibited by or otherwise offending against any of the following by-laws shall be liable for every such offence to a penalty not exceeding forty shillings for a first offence, and not exceeding five pounds for any subsequent offence.

All plates, dishes, cups, glasses, knives, forks, spoons, saucepans, frying pans and other utensils, implements and instruments used in the preparation and consumption of supper shall be washed, scoured, dried, and otherwise made clean overnight, and not left to be washed up with the breakfast things in the morning.

All chimneys, flues, and other passages, holes, and recesses to which smoke has regular access shall be swept once in every three months, and the resultant soot preserved for the cultivation of Coronation Sweet Peas.

All grates, ranges, and stoves shall be blackleaded, and all stone and concrete hearths, whether cracked or sound, as well as all doorsteps and window-sills shall be whitened, once every seven days.

No cobwebs shall be allowed to hang suspended from any ceiling in any room, passage, closet, or cupboard for a longer period than one calendar month.

All beds that have been slept in overnight shall be stripped, and the mattress or mattresses turned back, immediately upon the occupant arising in the morning, and allowed thus to remain airing for a period of at least one hour from such time.

All beds shall be re-made by 10 o'clock a.m.

Once every seven days the bottom sheet of each bed in every bedroom in every house in the Borough shall be removed, and the top sheet substituted for it, and a clean sheet substituted for the top sheet thus transferred.

Every occupant of every house shall wash or cause to be washed, his or her [illegible] and no less than three inches of neck, at least once every twenty-four hours.

Every [illegible] house shall [illegible] shaved, his chin, cheeks, neck, and top lip, at least once every three days, provided always that such male occupant does not grow a beard and moustache (which is to be deprecated), or has not reached such age as is favorable to the production or growth of face moss.

Every female occupant of every house shall have her hair out of curling pins or curl papers by midday at the latest each day (Saturdays excepted), and all hooks and eyes securely fastened.

Every child occupant of every house shall have his or her nose duly wiped by some qualified person at least three times a day, and four times on Sundays.

THE NEED OF MEN

Work in Every Field Not Only Remains But Increases

More men are needed in the world to-day than ever before, because there is more to do—more different things to make, more actual people to support. Fifteen years ago the bicycle makers would have been frightened into bankruptcy if you had told them that in 1910 their trade would have almost disappeared. But what do we see now? The coming of automobiles has given work to all the bicycle men and thousands more. And it is so in other businesses and professions. The point to remember is that, while the form of work changes, the work in every field remains, and even increases. The real claims are not all taken up. Alexander the Great was only a fool when he wept because there were no more worlds to conquer. He didn't use his eyes to see with, but only to weep with.

POPULAR THOUGH POOR

"Be forgetful of self; think, and think kindly, of others."

"Say a kind rather than a smart thing."

"Be ready to help whenever you can."

"Give others credit for doing and knowing something."

"Be courteous to all, in or out of business."

"Don't talk scandal."

"Pay what you owe, and never borrow money."

Old Age Pensions

Following the removal of the pauperism disqualification, 10,938 persons in London alone received old-age pensions.

New Streets

One hundred miles of new streets for the Metropolis are proposed by the London Traffic Branch of the Board of Trade.

Priests as Cab-Drivers

Since the disestablishment of the Church in France, many former priests have taken up the occupation of cab-drivers in Paris.

Good Work of the Poultry Men.

Peterborough Poultry men seem bound to keep at the top of the heap. At their monthly meeting with President Fred Holmes in the chair, much enthusiasm was displayed. As an evidence of how the poultrymen are advertising Peterborough, many of the members of the Association reported having received numerous enquiries for stock and eggs from all points in Canada, and many from the United States.

FLESH FLIES

Can Do No Damage If Given No Place to Lay Their Eggs

When the sheep's wool becomes filthy and the skin irritated, an ideal condition is made for the work of the maggot fly. And when the maggots get a start they create a more and more friendly harbor for their kind as they work and increase in numbers under the wool. A sheep infected with maggots is a most pitiful sight, helpless against the parasites eating out its flesh until the sheep dies, its flesh gnawed out in a most cruel manner. For the sake of humanity, if for no other reason, sheep should be saved from much suffering.

These flies can do no damage if not given a suitable place to lay their eggs. Sheep should be watched carefully, especially in warm damp weather, and dirty tag-locks or other filth clipped off and a little tar dabbed on if the skin is chafed. These maggots also get in their work under rams' horns. Indeed, a ram with heavy horns lying close to his head will hardly pass through a summer without infection unless the flies are kept away by putting some tar on the ram's head.

An infected sheep can be told by the fact that it refuses to eat, stands with its head down and most often by itself, and stamps its feet or jerks its head exactly as irritation by maggots would lead one to expect. The remedy is simple. Cut away the wool close. Clean out all maggots, using turpentine to wash them out. Smear the place thoroughly with tar. Then watch the sheep to see that the flies do not again start in the same place. Thoroughness in cleaning out the parasites is essential, for one left in will start the damage all over.

GOOD CHICKENS

Something to Keep them Busy—The Ideal Pen

Chickens that are penned up should have their houses cleaned out twice a week at least, and their runs dug up (to loosen the earth) once a week, which enables them to have a little exercise in the way of scratching. Their morning meal should consist of potato peelings and all scraps from the table, boiled down and thickened, after draining well, with barley meal, with a dash of pepper in, and when cooled down, given; their water vessels washed and filled. For mid-day meal, a good size cabbage, hung to allow them to get round it, and high enough for them to peck at, which keeps them busy for some considerable time, and, for a change, a swede hung is very good, too. For their last meal give barley, a little wheat, or dari, and occasionally, small Indian corn. A box kept in the run, with all fine ashes saved from the house on washing days, if sifted well, gives them a bath. A handful of [illegible] thrown in [illegible] them about once a month helps to keep them in good condition, and their houses should be [illegible] occasionally.

CLEANING MEN'S CLOTHES

The Best Mixture for the Removal of Grease Spots

The cleaning of a dust-laden old coat reduces the average woman to despair, as it is hard work, and the easiest way to clean a coat or pair of pants is to pin them to the clothes-line and beat the dust out with a cane or limber switch. Then lay them out on a table and brush with a stiff brush. A coat, vest or pair of pants that is not much soiled will come out of a good gasoline bath looking like new. First brush and shake the garment until it seems perfectly free of dust, then remove the spots and put the garment in a wash bowl or a large bucket and pour enough gasoline over the garment to saturate it thoroughly, then cover the bucket to keep the fluid from evaporating and leave it for two hours. The safest way to use the gasoline is in the open air. Clean the garments by pressing and squeezing between the hands, and hang over the line.

There is nothing better for removing grease spots from the cloth than a fluid composed of four parts of alcohol to one part of ammonia. When the garments are soiled enough to be washed, remove the buttons and baste the buttonholes together; then put them in a strong gasoline suds and let them remain for half an hour; then wash clean through this suds and put them through a lighter suds and rinse through clear water. There is nothing better than this suds for washing garments of any color, and it leaves the cloth soft and clean, and then it is much easier to wash a garment that is much soiled than to try to remove the spots from the fabric, and, after they are washed and pressed, the buttons can be sewed in place and the buttonholes washed over again if necessary.

When pants are beginning to get baggy at the knees, turn them wrong side out, lay one leg at a time on the ironing table, lay a wet cloth all over the knee portions and press until the cloth is dry, then turn right side out, fold in the centre and press from top to bottom over the damp cloth.

FISH PONDS ON THE FARM

That relief from the high prices of meats might be found in having fish ponds on farms, is the opinion expressed by an Omaha, Neb., paper. "Years ago," it says, "when times were not so good and when people were not enjoying the degree of prosperity that now seems to prevail throughout the land, there was great interest taken in stocking the small and larger streams with fish from the state and government fisheries. Thousands of farm fish ponds were built all over the country, in all states, and the commercial idea prevailed in the construction and stocking of these ponds. This was when the fish pond on the farm was viewed as an asset in the advertising and sale of the farm."

Local Operators Get a Raise.

The telegraph operators of the G. T.R. at this city are wearing the smile that won't come off. The Grand Trunk has decided to raise wages in that department at once. The reason is that many operators that work on Sunday do not receive any extra pay but in the future they will receive the regular day's remuneration for Sunday as well as the other six days of the week.

SAFER!

"You seem to have had a good deal of experience of different kinds," said the hotel guest, as he sipped his nightcap, to the landlord of the little country hotel. "What were you before you took to this sort of life?"

"Well, sir," was the reply, "in me young days I was a lion-tamer in a circus. But then I got married, and me wife she was a knife-thrower in the same show, and she having, what some people might have thought, a nasty temper, I thought I'd had enough of living a risky life—which ain't too long at the best, as you know, sir—so I took on a safe job, and became a steeplejack!"

FORCE IN THE BLOW

It isn't enough to hit the nail on the head—there must be some force behind the blow.

A SURE THING

Replying on a sure thing is a good description to teach a man to be prepared for the unexpected.

"Not much. I gave it to you because I am tired of lending you mine."

Protestant Home Asks for Funds.

The directors of the Peterborough Protestant Home would be much obliged if all those who have so kindly promised donations to the building fund of the new home would send in their cheques, at their earliest possible convenience.

Communication Road Good.

Mr. P. Y. Crowley, one of Ennismore's best known residents, whilst in the Times office on Saturday, paying his subscription to the paper, remarked that the roads between that fine township and the city were never better. He said he had little trouble with "pitch-holes."

Former Peterborough Girl Noticed.

Referring to a former Peterborough girl, the Kincardine Review, after describing how certain nurses had graduated, says: "All the young ladies passed with first class honors, thus reflecting credit in their own ability and that of their instructor, Miss Hopkins, who has proved the most capable superintendent the Hospital has yet had."

A Bogus Telephone Inspector.

Here is a "tip," or pointer for those having telephones in their private houses. It seems that in other towns a well dressed stranger is going from house to house representing himself as a telephone inspector. When he gains admission presumably to inspect the telephone service his fingers come in contact with, and stick to any article of value in sight. "Nuff sed."

City Fire Losses for February.

During the month of February there were nine fires in the city with the total damage amounting to $1,410. Of this amount $1,300 was lost in the fire on Harvey street, during the severe cold snap, with the thermometer registering 25 below zero. During the corresponding month of last year the chief reported eleven fires with a total loss of $25.

Lost Two Fingers in Accident.

An employee of the C.G.E. Co., named Christopher Jay, met with a painful accident while operating a punch machine, at the works. He allowed his right hand to come between the hammer and the head of the press, with the result that it was badly crushed. Dr. Young was summoned. The sufferer was removed to Nicholls Hospital in the Dan Spence ambulance, where it was found necessary to amputate the first two finger.

Youth Hesitates to Give Evidence.

A young lad, only 17 years of age was before the Cadi on Saturday morning charged with being "D. & D." The boy was reluctant about answering questions put by Chief Thompson. Upon learning that he had to "cough up," the boy said he got his liquor at the Grand Hotel. He and his friends started on lager and wound up on whiskey. The final wind-up was a $2.00 fine, which he paid.

Axe Caught on Clothes Line.

A local citizen residing on George street north, has a sore shoulder and considers he is lucky not to have a broken skull. The old story, Saturday afternoon, a tough piece of wood a dull axe, lots of muscle, an overhanging clothes-line, a collision between the two and an axe helve hurled back at the wielder. The axe fortunately missed the citizen's head, but the handle struck his shoulder a blow that left a very visible bruise.

Rochester Wedding of Local Interest.

A very pretty wedding was solemnized in the Central Baptist Church Rochester, on Thursday evening last, when Miss Carrie Noyes of East City was united in marriage to Mr. Harry Orchard, of Rochester. The Rev. Mr. Russ performed the ceremony. The happy couple arrived in Peterborough on Saturday morning on a visit to the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Orchard were the recipients of many costly and beautiful presents.

Coal Is Dear Outside the City.

As a proof that Peterborough is not the only place in Canada where coal is expensive, see what the Ottawa Citizen says, viz.: "Coal sleighs in Ottawa should be accompanied by an armed guard, like any other valuable mineral in transit. Dealers who fail to take this precaution cannot escape a charge of criminal negligence if loads arrive at the unfortunate consumer's house a couple of hundred weight shy."

Fined for Obstructing Officer.

It seems that Peterborough is not the only place in Ontario where illegal winter fishing is indulged in. A day or two ago a case of considerable interest was decided by Police Magistrate Moore, of Lindsay. The charge preferred against the McGill Bros., of Omemee, was that of delaying the Fishery Inspector whilst in discharge of his duty. A fine of $10.00 with $13.90 costs was imposed.

Lindsay Players in Raw Deal.

Lindsay Post has the following complaint: "The Olympia hockey team has returned from the tournament at Fenelon Falls and feel pretty sore. The manager of the Olympias was assured that the team would get fair treatment and would meet teams of their own rank. However, the boys were pitted against a Fenelon Falls team of seasoned players with a member of the Peterborough T.A. S. team on the lineup. The locals were pretty roughly used, and are bearing bruises and cuts.

A Bright Foresters' Paper.

The Canadian Forestry Journal of last issue has reached The Times. This issue, the organ of the S.O.F., is neatly gotten up and cleverly edited. It contains a good report of the 13th annual convention held in Ottawa, where Mr. G. Y. Chown, B.A., Registrar of Queen's University, Kingston, introduced the Premier, Right Hon. R. L. Borden, to the convention. As the Foresters are one of Peterborough's strongest fraternal societies, this issue of the Journal will be of general interest.

A Political Appointment Approved.

Lindsay, not to be outdone by Peterborough, has a brand new Postmaster, Mr. A. F. Palen, who was recently installed by the Assistant P. O. Inspector of Toronto. This new official of Scugogville, has had long experience in Post Office work, having been employed on the staff of that department in Lindsay for fully twenty years. The Post, a Reform newspaper, expresses its satisfaction over the appointment, and, in a double column article, commends the choice of the government.

Miss Horsfield's Funeral To-day.

In addition to her parents, she is survived by four sisters and two brothers, namely, Alice, Agnes, Jane, Emily, Charles and Arthur. The funeral will take place this afternoon at 2 o'clock to St. John's church and thence to the Little Lake cemetery.

Axe Falls on Welland Canal Employes.

The Trent Valley Canal is not the only Dominion Government institution from which employes are being discharged. A St. Catherines dispatch says: The political axe has at last fallen on the Welland Canal and when that waterway opens this spring it will be manned with an almost entirely new staff. There is much jubilation in some Conservative quarters as a consequence, because it was feared no changes were to be made, but in other quarters those who have been disappointed in their applications are anything but happy. Practically every man from the lighthouse keeper's at Port Dalhousie to Lock 16, who could be fired, has been.

Proven Oil Lands Consisting of 240 Acres, King's County, Coalinga, California, U. S. A.

The Company's property consists of 240 acres of patented and proven OIL-BEARING LAND, situated in King's County, California, east of the croppings.

In this particular location there are no dry holes. Many companies in Coalinga have the same capitalization or greater than that of the Dominion Oil Company, have control of only 20, 40 or 80 acres, and even these companies are making big money for their shareholders. Compared with them, the holdings of the Dominion Oil Company are immense, and when developed and producing oil, should be worth Millions of Dollars. The Company's well has been drilled to a depth of 2480 feet.

Thousands of clerks, struggling lawyers and business men have become rich through their interests in oil, and they are still putting their money in larger and more extensive oil investments. Many of our friends and clients ask about the chances of investments in California oil as compared with mining. There is really no comparison. 90 per cent. of the legitimate oil companies operating anywhere near the proven fields have been successful beyond the dreams of the most sanguine. Oil stock values have doubled, quadrupled, and in many instances advanced from a few cents per share to as many dollars, and there is scarcely a legitimate oil proposition two years old that is not paying a large rate of interest on the par value of its shares. Investors generally in mining shares have realized very little on their investments, and we believe that it is safe to say that not more than one mining company in a hundred makes good. If you are interested in mining we believe you will agree with us that our estimate is not far out.

California stands at the head of the oil-producing territories of the world and her oil industry is a small empire in itself. The resources of the state have been but scratched, and the earth has yielded only a tithe of its great wealth. The market for oil is being constantly enlarged, and so long as heat and light are needed in the world's business, so long will California oil find a ready market at remunerative prices.

In conclusion, we particularly wish to draw your attention to the calibre of the Directors of the Dominion Oil Company. They are well known, wealthy, Canadian business men, men of sterling integrity and highest business principles, men who may be trusted to the very limit in any and all business transactions. One has the assurance, therefore, that the affairs of the company will be handled to the very best possible advantage. A purchase of shares in the Dominion Oil Company is sure to turn out profitable to you.

There are now being offered for public subscription 100,000 shares of the Treasury Stock at 50c per share, which will leave 400,000 shares still in the treasury. It will be the aim of the directors to maintain and keep as large a treasury balance as possible in both money and stock available to meet at all times any and all contingencies that may arise, and thus effectually safeguarding the interests of all shareholders.

This is your opportunity to make good in the great oil industry of California. We are fully acquainted with the situation and feel that we can advise you to purchase at least 100 shares of this stock and as much more as you can afford. Write us at once for Illustrated Prospectus, which will give you full particulars of this sterling investment.

- CALGARY -

The City Of Opportunity

Capitol Hill

One of Calgary's close in residential sub-divisions. City water is now in the adjoining divisions and sewer system is to be installed this spring. We expect these improvements in Capitol Hill this summer. Street car service is at present within two or three blocks of Capitol Hill. The City of Calgary has purchased Block 68, Capitol Hill, on which to build a large public school. A number of nice homes have already been built in Capitol Hill, and many more are in course of construction.

Lots in this sub-division are selling in pairs at $250 to $350 per lot. We offer you one block of forty lots, close to Block 68 at $210 per lot, on terms of Third Cash and Balance four, eight and twelve months, with interest at 8 per cent. on deferred payments. This block will readily sell for $300 per lot, or more, within the next six months. The block is high and level, and every lot is perfect. This is a gilt-edged investment. If you cannot handle it alone have some friend join you.

2,000,000 NOW OUT OF WORK—FAMILIES ARE STARVING IN ENGLAND—WORLD COAL STRIKE IS FEARED

HOME RULE BILL PROMISED BY MR. ASQUITH BY APRIL 10

British Premier Says it Was Always the Plan of the Government and Most Important

London, Mar 11.—The Home Rule Bill for Ireland is to be introduced into the House of Commons on 9th or 10th April.

Premier Asquith made this definite promise in the House of Commons this afternoon, adding:

"This is the date when it has always been intended and contemplated by the Government to introduce the Home Rule Bill.

"I have always thought this bill, having regard to its magnitude and complexity, is by far the most important to be brought in this session and that it ought to be produced under conditions which will secure adequate parliamentary discussion."

BRITISH AGENTS HIRING MEN FOR CANADIAN COAL MINES

SHORTAGE OF COAL IN ENGLAND A MATTER OF HALF A YEAR.

Over One Hundred and Fifty Thousand German Miners May Go Out Any Time.

New York, Mar. 11.—A world-wide strike of coal miners is regarded by the coal trade as more than a likelihood if the present negotiations now in progress between the anthracite and bituminous workers and their employers in this country do not result in a settlement of working conditions.

With more than a million coal miners on strike in Great Britain and 150,000 miners in Germany voting to quit work to force higher wages a severe shortage in Europe is faced.

The anthracite coal operators draft their reply to the hard coal workers here to-day for presentation to the miners Wednesday, while next week at Cleveland the bituminous operators and their employes confer for the purpose of trying to bring about an adjustment of conditions in the soft coal fields.

Meanwhile coal is being loaded on the Atlantic Seaboard for South American and European ports usually supplied by English firms.

TWO MILLION IDLE IN BRITAIN.

London, Mar. 11.—The British coal strike which began on March 1st, when nearly one million men employed in the colleries of England, Scotland and Wales laid down their tools at a given signal shows little sign of being settled.

Besides the miners another million workers, men and women employed in factories and mills in all parts of Great Britain have been thrown out of employment owing to the impossibility of obtaining fuel to run the machinery.

Prices of provisions and all the necessaries of life have gone up to such an extent that deep distress has been occasioned among the poorer classes.

OCEAN LINERS NOT RUNNING.

Railroads have had to restrict the train services, river steamers have had to cease running, the gas and electric supply works have been compelled to restrict their delivery of illuminants. The mail services have been retarded and many ocean steamers have had to be laid up in harbor.

The British Government has been trying to bring the miners and the coal owners together, but has not yet succeeded, and it is thought probable that as a final measure a minimum wage bill [illegible] will have to be introduced in the House of Commons.

Many of the mine owners have expressed their sympathy with the principle of a fixed minimum wage, but others decline even to consider the idea

ADDING TO OUR PLANT.

The Times last week placed an order for two additional machines, of the most modern type. These machines will enable us to produce a better and more up-to-date newspaper. One effect will be that the paper will be in the hands of the carriers half an hour to an hour earlier than heretofore each morning and thus a complete daily delivery will be made throughout the city before 7 o'clock a.m. The new rural mail routes recently established enables The Times to reach its patrons served by these routes the afternoon of each day of publication. This affords the paper a most important and practically exclusive field of activity and development possessed by no other daily paper, as afternoon papers are a day old when they reach their destination on these routes. The new machines will be in operation in about two weeks' time.

BRIDE AND BRIDEGROOM FLEW ON THEIR HONEYMOON TRIP

Paris, Mar. 11.—The first authentic aeroplane wedding is told of to-day in a dispatch from Avignon. The bridegroom, a well known aviator named Voisier, flew to a field next to the church where the wedding took place.

Directly after the ceremony the airman and his bride, who was Mlle. Bremond, mounted the two-seated Bleriot, and flew the hundred and more miles separating Avignon from Nice, where the first part of the honeymoon is to be passed.

Voisier hopes to fly on to Genoa, and home to Paris, with his wife.

COMMITS A MURDER AND KILLS HIMSELF

Georgetown, Tex., Mar. 11.—Geo. T. Sneed, father of Beal Sneed, the principal in the Snead-Boyce case, which closed in a mistrial in Fort Worth last week, was shot and killed here yesterday by one of his farm tenants, R. O. Hillard. The assailant then killed himself. He left a note stating that his act was caused by a desire for revenge.

Hillard met Sneed at the postoffice and opened fire on him with a 45-calibre pistol. Sneed ran several steps. With two bullets through his body, he fell to the sidewalk, after which Hillard shot him twice more. Then the slayer turned the pistol on his own breast, almost tearing his heart to pieces with the first shot.

Sneed's death removes the heads of both the families concerned in the Sneed-Boyce trouble.

What $1,000 Has Done Invested in Oil Stock.

$1,000 invested in Lucile Stock a few years ago is returning $8,000 per year in dividends, and the shares can now be sold for $73,326. $1,000 invested in the stock of the Fullerton Oil Company will this year earn $5,000 and the shares can now be sold for $60,800. $1,000 invested in Pinal at 60 cents per share has paid dividends as much as $2,986 per year, and the shares could then have been sold for $44,800. That $1,000 is now earning $1,090 per year in dividends. $1,000 invested in the stock of the Claremont, only a comparatively short time ago is returning $1,598 in dividends, and the shares can now be sold for $13,653. $1,000 invested in the shares of the Monte Cristo Oil Company has paid in dividends as much as $3,600 per year, and the shares can now be sold for $15,000. The Palmer Oil Company is capitalized for $2,000,000 and is paying one per cent share each month. It has only one producing well on the property. The stock is selling in the open market around $1.35, or at the rate of $2,700,000. One expert estimates the value of the property at $12,000,000 and another values it at $18,000,000. These are not only a few illustrations that come readily to mind. There are many more. See advertisement of Dominion Oil Company in to-day's issue.

BARRIE HAS RABIES SCARE BOARD OF HEALTH ARE BUSY

Toronto, Mar. 11.—The rabies scare has not yet died out in the Province. The latest case appears in Barrie. A boy, 16 years of age, who was bitten in the face by a fox terrier on March 4, arrived in Toronto this morning for special treatment.

The dog at the time of the accident showed no signs of rabies, but at a later date symptoms appeared and the head was sent to Toronto.

The examination showed a positive result and the boy hastily came to the city.

Hereafter all cases of rabies will be treated by the Provincial Board of Health at the new laboratory, 5 Queen's Park, which has been specially fitted up for the purpose.

"If the disease of rabies continues to spread as it is doing at present, the muzzling law will again come into force, and it will be thoroughly enforced," stated the Provincial Health Officer, Dr. McCullough, this morning.

THE SCHOOL QUESTION.

A debate on Separate Schools was raised in Parliament during the session of 1875, because New Brunswick had established a Public School system without providing for Separate Schools. Mr. Costigan moved that a humble address be presented to Her Majesty praying for an amendment to the British North America Act to provide that the Roman Catholic minority in New Brunswick should have the same rights to Separate Schools as those enjoyed by the minorities in Ontario and Quebec. Mr. Mackenzie, as Premier, amended the motion to say that legislation by the British Parliament encroaching on the powers reserved to any one of the Provinces, would be inadvisable, and that it would be inexpedient and fraught with danger to the autonomy of the Provinces for the Dominion Parliament to ask for such legislation. It was understood perfectly in 1875 that any interference in educational affairs either by the Federal House or the British House would be improper.

A NEW WAY TO CONSIDER HOW THE WIND WILL BLOW

Chicago, Mar. 11—"The discovery of the South Pole besides being a geographical achievement, will enable scientists to make long time weather predictions, which has been an object of work for centuries," said Prof. T. C. Chamberlain, head of the Department of Geology of the University of Chicago, last night.

"Heretofore we have been unable to trace the winds and storms up until the time they entered the Antarctic Circle. At this point we lose trace of them absolutely, and do not know where to watch for these re-appearance. It now becomes possible to make a complete map of the wind movements over the face of the Globe."

PEKIN IS NOW TO BE CAPITAL OF CHINA

Nanking, China, March 9.—In an effort to restore order and inaugurate a stable government as soon as possible, it is understood that Dr. Sun Yat Sen and his advisors have decided to go to Pekin and make that city for the present at least the capital of the new republic. This step is regarded as advisable on account of the mutinous spirit evidenced by the troops in the vicinity of Pekin and the general unrest there.

The plans which are now being prepared, provide for the early removal of the entire official machinery in the republic. It is believed that the removal of the seat of government to Pekin will of itself restore order there.

FIRE BRIGADE DOES GOOD WORK

At about 4 a.m. yesterday, an alarm came in from box 15, situated at the corner of Perry and George streets. Chief Howard's live brigade answered the call in their usual prompt manner, just as The Times had gone to press. A fire had broken out at 188 Perry street, in a frame dwelling house between George and Aylmer streets. The upper portion of the building was blazing furiously. The Department, however, were able to confine the conflagration to the building in which it started. The quick work of the brigade prevented the building being burned down; only the roof was destroyed. The damage to the building will not succeed six hundred dollars, and the damage to the contents will be very slight, as the occupants of the house had only recently taken temporary possession. The building, it is understood, is owned by Mr. Osias Laplante, and was occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Hughes who, it is learned, only recently returned from the Northwest. The cause of the fire is unknown, but is thought due to a defective chimney.

A SECOND CALL.

The second call came from 344 Aylmer street at 8.15 a.m. This was a chimney fire, with no damage.

ANOTHER CHIMNEY FIRE.

At 9.50 there came the third call. This time to 192 Dublin street, where another chimney was the cause of alarm. The chemicals quickly put an end to the danger.

QUEBEC PRIESTS DEMAND ONTARIO SEPARATE SCHOOLS

WHOLLY UNWARRANTABLE

The school clauses in the Alberta and Saskatchewan Acts were such laws of instruction, wholly out of accord with the spirit of our constitution and an unwarrantable infringement upon the rights of the Provinces. The Dominion Government relinquishes its proprietorship over Keewatin and allows it to be added to the Province of Manitoba. It has not a shred of authority over the schools of that new territory unless and until the Provincial laws should bear too hardly upon the minority. Then the minority might appeal to Ottawa. But even in that case the Federal authority is not bound to heed the appeal. The making of a remedial law is not imperative but permissive. "The Parliament of Canada may (not shall) make remedial laws." "Guarantees," such as Mr. Bourassa demands, are useless, ultra vires. They would guarantee nothing. The French members of the Cabinet understand this and do right in telling the minority to talk to Premier Roblin.

PUBLIC OPINION

The Times does not hold itself responsible for opinions of its correspondents

THE LONG AND SHORT TON.

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—I was informed the other day that the coal dealers of Peterborough buy their coal wholesale and get 2240 pounds to the ton, whilst, when selling they only allow 2000 pounds to the ton. Is this true? If the coal Barons can make 244 pounds on every ton they sell, it's no wonder that living is dear in this city.

Enquirer.

Reply—We understand the enquirer's contention is correct. The local dealers, we are informed buy the "long" ton and sell the "short" ton. Still this is the basis on which all hard coal is sold to Canadian dealers by the U.S. coal companies. The United States' Companies, however, charge their Canadian customers correspondingly high prices, so that, as far as the individual customer is concerned, it makes no difference in price.—Ed. Times.

WANTS GOOD MARKSMANSHIP.

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—I hope it will not be thought that I am trying to tell the local regiment what the soldiers should do. Still I would like to see more interest taken in marksmanship. In Canada, we have rifle ranges where, at stated measured distances our soldiers shoot at a fixed target. In actual warfare, and that is what rifle practice is mainly held to provide for., what a soldier must naturally shoot at is not a fixed target, with measured distances, but a moving figure or figures at an unknown distance. The little Japanese, who won victory from the mighty arms of Russia, do not train their soldiers to shoot at a fixed target at a known distance. They, I understand, train their marksmen to shoot at moving figures at varying, and to the soldier unknown distances. Battles, in these days, are not won by charges of troops as was the case fifty years ago. Strategy, artillery and marksmanship is what wins now. Troops do not, as a rule, in modern warfare meet the enemy in a hand to hand tussle. Shots are exchanged at a distance of anywhere from half to three-quarters of a mile. Consequently the good shot is worth ten men whose bullets, costing money, are wasted. Let us have the best means of procuring good marksmanship available and Canada's troops will be worth ten times their respective number.

Marksman.

C. P. R. BRIDGE CAUSED VERY LITTLE TROUBLE

A slang expression says "a kicker is born every minute!" It has been rumored that the splendid new bridge across the Scugog river, just above the town of Lindsay, had interferred with traffic, during the winter, between the adjoining townships and that town. With the usual enterprise and care for public convenience, the C.P.R. authorities recently took soundings to ascertain the thickness of the ice there. It was 16 inches thick and absolutely safe for traffic. The farmers of [illegible] township are using the ice track and say that the reports were greatly exaggerated and that they suffer little or no inconvenience.

A TIMELY WARNING.

The News says that in 1875 the Government of the day passed legislation permitting the establishment of Separate Schools in territories under Federal control. Mr. George Brown warned Parliament against such action, saying that it would cause abundant trouble in the future. But there is no reason why it should cause trouble if we stick to the letter and the spirit of the constitution. Keewatin in becoming a part of Manitoba becomes subject to the Manitoba Legislature, and will be represented in that Legislature. Education is under the exclusive jurisdiction of the Province.

STANDARD LOAN CO HAS SUCCESSFUL YEAR

Special attention is hereby drawn to the large annual report of the Standard Loan Co., which appears in this issue. The shareholders of this strong financial institution held their twelfth annual meeting in their head office, Toronto, on February 28th, ult. President Kammerer very ably occupied the chair, whilst Mr. W. S. Dinnick acted as secretary, pro tem. The report and balance sheet presented by the directors was of a most satisfactory character. During the fiscal the year the Standard Loan Co. not only paid a six per cent. annual dividend, but carried $50,000.00 to the Reserve Fund, which now amounts to the handsome, and safety impelling sum of $160,000. $1,840.00 was placed to the credit of profit and loss account, and a considerable sum applied towards office furniture account. As an instance of the soundness and perfect credit of the company, it might be noted that both interest and instalments of principal on Mortgages and securities of the company were met promptly. The assets of the company amount to $2,800,900, and of a most safe and conservative nature. The auditors of the company, in their report, note that the Standard's affairs are in a most flourishing condition and their books well kept. An important item of their report is contained in the words "The loans are in good condition, etc." Mr. Kammerer was re-elected president.

Petitions Presented in City Catholic Churches all But the Irish St. Patricks Church to the People of Montreal by Clergy

Anti Boundary Movement May Assume Surprising Dimensions in the Province of Quebec—Faithfut to Sign Petitions

It May Result in Bourassa and Gouin Retiring From Action and Strenuous Political Life

Montreal, Mar. 11.—The anti-boundary bill movement is assuming sweeping dimensions in the Province. In all the Catholic churches of Quebec city Sunday, except the Irish church of St. Patrick's, the priests asked the faithful to sign petitions urging the Borden Government to have a special clause inserted in the Manitoba boundary bill providing that the Keewatin minority should have Separate Schools. "We have been instructed to ask you to sign these petitions," was the formula used by many curates to make this announcement to their parishioners, but in popular centres there were strong appeals made to the Catholic community to agitate the Separate School question as long as the Government refuses to surrender.

Hundreds of signatures were given and these petitions will be forwarded at once to Ottawa. The same petitions are deposited to-day in some stores, where more signatures are gathered.

The signing of these is being done mainly by Nationalists.

LAVERGNE FOR QUEBEC PREMIERSHIP.

While strenuous denials were forthcoming from Le Devoir officials in the absence of their chief this morning of the report that Henri Bourassa, the Nationalist leader, would give up politics and back his young lieutenant, Armand Lavergne, for the Premiership of the Province, local politicians were inclined to regard the story as not improbable.

It was only a few months ago that Mr. Bourassa intimated not with any degree of emphasis, but giving assent to the possibility that he would resign from active participation in the political arena, so far as his membership in Quebec Legislature was concerned, and devote himself to forwarding his Nationalistic ideals through the editorial columns of his newspaper Le Devoir.

GOUIN MAY ALSO RETIRE.

Then there is also the rumor that Sir Lomer Gouin, the Liberal leader of the Province, will retire from politics at the end of the present session and the Nationalist forces may see in his absence a chance to jump into the Provincial ascendancy.

"Stranger things have happened" said a well known politician this morning.

OIL OIL OIL

Oil is King--King of Fuel for all purposes

Without it the automobile could not exist. Just as soon as a supply can be depended on, ships on every ocean, sea, lake, and river, will be propelled by it. The British Admirality are building warships to be propelled by it. The great railway transportation companies are altering their locomotives to be driven by it. The cooking stoves and heating plants in every district where it can be secured are being made to use it—in fact the whole civilized world is crying out for it.

And we have it—have the piece of the earth's crust where it is bursting out and spilling over in such quantities that we are able to collect it from the surface of the pools, put it in bottles, and have it analyzed, and here is what the analytical chemist has to say of it:

THE HINDU IMMIGRANT.

The decision of the federal government not to relax the regulations against the immigration of Hindus into British Columbia appears to have caused great satisfaction in Vancouver, where the Hindus in Canada most do congregate. All the more so because the decision was based on official investigation by the department of the interior into the whole question, including the conditions of Hindu life in British Columbia, and was not merely a concession to public opinion in Vancouver. "The conclusion arrived at," remarks the Vancouver Province, "is a direct rebuff to those people in the east, and especially in Toronto, who made such a determined effort to open the door to this class of immigration."

CLEANING HINTS

If you have some shabby leather chairs that want renovating, boil half a pound of linseed oil, and, when cold, mix it with half a pint of vinegar. Pour a little of this on to a clean flannel, and rub well into the leather, and polish with a soft silk duster.

Rusty curtain hooks and rings should be soaked in water that has a lump of rock ammonia dissolved in it. The dirt and rust will soon come off, and a final polish with whiting will make them quite bright again.

AN ARTIST'S DEATH.

A Detroit newspaper recently announced the death in a charitable institution for old men of a portrait painter of "some fame" at the advanced age of 80 years. Ill health and grief at the loss of his wife and two children at sea when he was still, comparatively, a young man had, it was said, robbed his right hand of its cunning. His patrons slipped away, and at 60 he was both homeless and penniless. As is not always the case under similar circumstances, a number of his old friends stuck to him in his adversity, and agreed that if his admission into some institution could be managed, as being the only open course, they would pay for his maintenance. This was arranged, and the offer communicated to him, only however to be received with scorn. Later he was told that he had been appointed assistant of the home without salary, a position (?) which he occupied for 20 long years and he died innocent of the deception and rejoicing in the belief that he had finished his days without becoming an object of charity. Cases such as this should be startling enough to awaken the most indifferent to a realization of the terrible condition of an old age of want and penury, and to an immediate determination to adopt some absolutely sure means of safeguarding against such a calamity. The Government of Canada has supplied its people with this means, and by the payment at any Postal Money Order Office of a small amount weekly, monthly or as may be otherwise arranged, protection against an old age of dependence and humiliation may be made with absolute certainty. For example, the payment of $1 a week by a man of 25 until he is 55 would give him an Annuity from the latter age of $258.28, payable quarterly; while if he continued paying until he was 60, his Annuity would be $397.36. In either case, if he died before the date fixed for the Annuity to begin all his payments with compound interest at 3 per cent. would be refunded to his legal representatives.

Literature descriptive of the features of the Annuities System, and tables showing the cost of Annuities on different plans, may be obtained at the Post Office or on application to the Superintendent of Annuities, Ottawa, to whom letters go free of postage.

KEEP THE PIGS DRY

Guard Against Dampness From the Very Beginning

Pigs are animals that, as a class, are subject to rheumatism and similar troubles, and if you are going to be a successful pig-keeper you must guard against dampness from the very start, especially with the bedding arrangements.

Straw—barley straw in particular—makes capital bedding; and dry bracken, dried grass from the hedges, and similar material may be used. I will assume, of course, that the floor of the sleeping apartment of your sty is of brick, sloped for drainage, and that a warm bed of some kind is provided for the animals. From time to time as it is dirtied this bedding must be changed, and it is a good plan to place it in the fore-court of the sty—if any—till it has become part of the muck, which you will remove for manurial purposes as necessary.

And if dry quarters are necessary with adult sows and pigs, how much more so is this the case with the youngsters! At birth they should have clean, sweet straw provided, not in great quantities, or they may be unwittingly lain upon by their mother, or else smothered, but sufficient for dryness and warmth. Then, during their infancy, the quantity may be gradually increased till the usual allowance is arrived at. Needless to say, the straw bedding should be changed almost daily at first, and this is especially the case with a large litter in a somewhat cramped sty.

Watch for the birds' nests before you remove a dead tree. If you can save a nest of young birds spare the tree awhile. Birds destroy thousands of noxious weed seeds every year. They do much good in keeping down insect pests and noxious [illegible]

Coal Is Dear Outside the City.

As a proof that Peterborough is not the only place in Canada where coal is expensive, see what the Ottawa Citizen says, viz.: "Coal sleighs in Ottawa should be accompanied by an armed guard, like any other valuable mineral in transit. Dealers who fail to take this precaution cannot escape a charge of criminal negligence if loads arrive at the unfortunate consumer's house a couple of hundred weight shy."

2,000,000 NOW OUT OF WORK—FAMILIES ARE STARVING IN ENGLAND—WORLD COAL STRIKE IS FEARED

HOME RULE BILL PROMISED BY MR. ASQUITH BY APRIL 10

British Premier Says it Was Always the Plan of the Government and Most Important

London, Mar. 11.—The Home Rule Bill for Ireland is to be introduced into the House of Commons on 9th or 10th April.

Premier Asquith made this definite promise in the House of Commons this afternoon, adding:

"This is the date when it has always been intended and contemplated by the Government to introduce the Home Rule Bill.

"I have always thought this bill, having regard to its magnitude and complexity, is by far the most important to be brought in this session and that it ought to be produced under conditions which will secure adequate parliamentary discussion."

BRITISH AGENTS HIRING MEN FOR CANADIAN COAL MINES

SHORTAGE OF COAL IN ENGLAND A MATTER OF HALF A YEAR.

Over One Hundred and Fifty Thousand German Miners May Go Out Any Time.

New York, Mar. 11.—A world-wide strike of coal miners is regarded by the coal trade as more than a likelihood if the present negotiations now in progress between the anthracite and bituminous workers and their employers in this country do not result in a settlement of working conditions.

With more than a million coal miners on strike in Great Britain and 150,000 miners in Germany voting to quit work to force higher wages a severe shortage in Europe is faced.

The anthracite coal operators draft their reply to the hard coal workers here to-day for presentation to the miners Wednesday, while next week at Cleveland the bituminous operators and their employes confer for the purpose of trying to bring about an adjustment of conditions in the soft coal fields.

Meanwhile coal is being loaded on the Atlantic Seaboard for South [illegible] ports [illegible] ly supplied by English firms.

TWO MILLION IDLE IN BRITAIN

London, Mar. 11.—The British coal strike which began on March 1st, when nearly one million men employed in the collieries of England, Scotland and Wales laid down their tools at a given signal shows little sign of being settled.

Besides the miners another million workers, men and women employed in factories and mills in all parts of Great Britain have been thrown out of employment owing to the impossibility of obtaining fuel to run the machinery.

Prices of provisions and all the necessaries of life have gone up to such an extent that deep distress has been occasioned among the poorer classes.

OCEAN LINERS NOT RUNNING.

Railroads have had to restrict the train services, river steamers have had to cease running, the gas and electric supply works have been compelled to restrict their delivery of illuminants. The mail services have been retarded and many ocean steamers have had to be laid up in harbor.

The British Government has been trying to bring the miners and the coal owners together, but has not yet succeeded, and it is thought probable that as a final measure a minimum wage bill for miners will have to be introduced in the House of Commons.

Many of the coal owners have expressed their sympathy with the principle of a fixed minimum wage, but others decline even to consider the idea.

ADDING TO OUR PLANT.

The Times last week placed an order for two additional machines, of the most modern type. These machines will enable us to produce a better and more up-to-date newspaper. One effect will be that the paper will be in the hands of the carriers half an hour to an hour earlier than heretofore each morning and thus a complete daily delivery will be made throughout the city before 7 o'clock a.m. The new rural mail routes recently established enables The Times to reach its patrons served by these routes the afternoon of each day of publication. This affords the paper a most important and practically exclusive field of activity and development possessed by no other daily paper, as afternoon papers are a day old when they reach their destination on these routes. The new machines will be in operation in about two weeks' time.

BRIDE AND BRIDEGROOM FLEW ON THEIR HONEYMOON TRIP

Paris, Mar. 11.—The first authentic aeroplane wedding is told of to-day in a dispatch from Avignon. The bridegroom, a well known aviator named Voisier, flew to a field next to the church where the wedding took place.

Directly after the ceremony the airman and his bride, who was Mlle. Bremond, mounted the two seated Bleriot, and flew the hundred and more miles separating Avignon from Nice, where the first part of the honeymoon is to be passed.

Voisier hopes to fly on to Genoa, and home to Paris, with his wife.

COMMITS A MURDER AND KILLS HIMSELF

Georgetown, Tex., Mar. 11.—Geo. T. Sneed, father of Beal Sneed, the principal in the Snead-Boyce case, which closed in a mistrial in Fort Worth last week, was shot and killed here yesterday by one of his farm tenants, R. O. Hillard. The assailant then killed himself. He left a note stating that his act was caused by a desire for revenge.

Hillard met Sneed at the postoffice and opened fire on him with a 45 calibre pistol. Sneed ran several steps. With two bullets through his body, he fell to the sidewalk, after which Hillard shot him twice more. Then the slayer turned the pistol on his own breast, almost tearing his heart to pieces with the first shot.

Sneed's death removes the heads of both the families concerned in the Sneed-Boyce trouble.

What $1,000 Has Done Invested in Oil Stock.

$1,000 invested in Lucile Stock a few years ago is returning $8,000 per year in dividends, and the shares can now be sold for $73,330. $1,000 invested in the stock of the Fullerton Oil Company will this year earn $5,000 and the shares can now be sold for $60,000. $1,000 invested in Pinal at 60 cents per share has paid dividends as much as $2,766 per year, and the shares could then have been sold for $44,800. That $1,000 is now earning $1,000 per year in dividends. $1,000 invested in the stock of the Claremont, only a comparatively short time ago is returning $1,598 in dividends, and the shares can now be sold for $13,653. $1,000 invested in the shares of the Monte Cristo Oil Company has paid in dividends as much as $3,600 per year, and the shares can now be sold for $15,000. The Palmer Oil Company is capitalized for $2,000,000 and is paying one per cent share each month. It has only one producing well on the property. The stock is selling in the open market around $1.35, or at the rate of $2,700,000. One expert estimates the value of the property at $12,000,000 and another values it at $18,000,000. BARRIE HAS RABIES SCARE BOARD OF HEALTH ARE BUSY

Toronto, Mar. 11.—The rabies scare has not yet died out in the Province. The latest case appears in Barrie. A boy, 16 years of age, who was bitten in the face by a fox terrier on March 4, arrived in Toronto this morning for special treatment.

The dog at the time of the accident showed no signs of rabies, but at a later date symptoms appeared and the head was sent to Toronto.

The examination showed a positive result and the boy hastily came to the city.

Hereafter all cases of rabies will be treated by the Provincial Board of Health at the new laboratory, 5 Queen's Park, which has been specially fitted up for the purpose.

"If the disease of rabies continues to spread as it is doing at present, the muzzling law will again come into force, and it will be thoroughly enforced," stated the Provincial Health Officer, Dr. McCullough this morning.

THE SCHOOL QUESTION.

A debate on Separate Schools was raised in Parliament during the session of 1875, because New Brunswick had established a Public School system without providing for Separate Schools. Mr. Costigan moved that a humble address be presented to Her Majesty praying for an amendment to the British North America Act to provide that the Roman Catholic minority in New Brunswick should have the same rights to Separate Schools as those enjoyed by the minorities in Ontario and Quebec. Mr. Mackenzie, as Premier, amended the motion to say that legislation by the British Parliament encroaching on the powers reserved to any one of the Provinces, would be inadvisable, and that it would be inexpedient and fraught with danger to the autonomy of the Provinces for the Dominion Parliament to ask for such legislation. It was understood perfectly in 1875 that any interference in educational affairs either by the Federal House or the British House would be improper.

PEKIN IS NOW TO BE CAPITAL OF CHINA

Nanking, China, March 9.—In an effort to restore order and inaugurate a stable government as soon as possible, it is understood that Dr. Sun Yat Sen and his advisors have decided to go to Pekin and make that city for the present at least—the capital of the new republic. This step is regarded as advisable on account of the mutinous spirit evidenced by the troops in the vicinity of Pekin and the general unrest there.

The plans which are now being prepared, provide for the early removal of the entire official machinery in the republic. It is believed that the removal of the seat of government to Pekin will of itself restore order there.

FIRE BRIGADE DOES GOOD WORK

At about 4 a.m. yesterday, an alarm came in from box 15, situated at the corner of Perry and George streets. Chief Howard's live brigade answered the call in their usual prompt manner, just as The Times had gone to press. A fire had broken out at 188 Perry street, in a frame dwelling house between George and Aylmer streets. The upper portion of the building was blazing furiously. The Department, however, were able to confine the conflagration to the building in which it started. The quick work of the brigade prevented the building being burned down; only the roof was destroyed. The damage to the building will not succeed six hundred dollars, and the damage to the contents will be very slight, as the occupants of the house had only recently taken temporary possession. The building, it is understood, is owned by Mr. Osias Laplante, and was occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Hughes who, it is learned, only recently returned from the Northwest. The cause of the fire is unknown, but is thought due to a defective chimney.

A SECOND CALL.

The second call came from 344 Aylmer street at 8.15 a.m. This was a chimney fire, with no damage.

ANOTHER CHIMNEY FIRE.

At 9.50 there came the third call. This time to 192 Dublin street, where another chimney was the cause of alarm. The chemicals quickly put an end to the danger.

QUEBEC PRIESTS DEMAND ONTARIO SEPARATE SCHOOLS

Petitions Presented in City Catholic Churches all But the Irish St. Patricks Church to the People of Montreal by Clergy

Anti Boundary Movement May Assume Surprising Dimensions in the Province of Quebec— Faithfut to Sign Petitions

It May Result in Bourassa and Gouin Retiring From Action and Strenuous Political Life

Montreal, Mar. 11.—The anti-boundary bill movement is assuming sweeping dimensions in the Province. In all the Catholic churches of Quebec city Sunday, except the Irish church of St. Patrick's, the priests asked the faithful to sign petitions urging the Borden Government to have a special clause inserted in the Manitoba boundary bill providing that the Keewatin minority should have Separate Schools. "We have been instructed to ask you to sign these petitions," was the formula used by many curates to make this announcement to their parishioners, but in popular centres there were strong appeals made to the Catholic community to agitate the Separate School question as long as the Government refuses to surrender [illegible] and these petitions will be forwarded at once to Ottawa." The same petitions are deposited to-day in some stores, where more signatures are gathered.

The signing of these is being done mainly by Nationalists.

LAVERGNE FOR QUEBEC PREMIERSHIP.

While strenuous denials were forthcoming from Le Devoir officials in the absence of their chief this morning of the report that Henri Bourassa, the Nationalist leader, would give up politics and back his young lieutenant Armand Lavergne, for the Premiership of the Province, local politicians were inclined to regard the story as not improbable.

It was only a few months ago that Mr. Bourassa intimated, not with any degree of emphasis but giving assent to the possibility, that he would resign from active participation in the political arena so far as his membership in Quebec Legislature was concerned, and devote himself to forwarding his Nationalistic ideals through the editorial columns of his newspaper Le Devoir.

GOUIN MAY ALSO RETIRE.

Then there is also the rumor that Sir Lomer Gouin, the Liberal leader of the Province, will retire from politics at the end of the present session and the Nationalist forces may see in his absence a chance to jump into the Provincial ascendancy.

"Stranger things have happened" said a well known politician this morning.

WHOLLY UNWARRANTABLE

The school clauses in the Alberta and Saskatchewan Acts were such laws of instruction, wholly out of accord with the spirit of our constitution and an unwarrantable infringement upon the rights of the Provinces. The Dominion Government relinquishes its proprietorship over Keewatin and allows it to be added to the Province of Manitoba. It has not a shred of authority over the schools of that new territory unless and until the Provincial laws should bear too hardly upon the minority. Then the minority might appeal to Ottawa. But even in that case the Federal authority is not bound to heed the appeal. The making of a remedial law is not imperative but permissive. "The Parliament of Canada may (not shall) make remedial laws." "Guarantees," such as Mr. Bourassa demands, are useless, ultra vires. They would guarantee nothing. The French members of the Cabinet understand this and do right in telling the minority to talk to Premier Roblin.

THE LONG AND SHORT TON.

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—I was informed the other day that the coal dealers of Peterborough buy their coal wholesale and get 2240 pounds to the ton, whilst, when selling they only allow 2000 pounds to the ton. Is this true? If the coal Barons can make 244 pounds on every ton they sell, it's no wonder that living is dear in this city.

Enquirer.

Reply—We understand that enquirer's contention is correct. The local dealers, we are informed buy the "long" ton and sell the "short" ton. Still this is the basis on which all hard coal is sold to Canadian dealers by the [illegible] coal companies. The United States' Companies, however, charge their Canadian customers correspondingly high prices, so that, as far as the individual customer is concerned, it makes no difference in price.—Ed. Times.

WANTS GOOD MARKSMANSHIP.

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—I hope it will not be thought that I am trying to tell the local regiment what the soldiers should do. Still I would like to see more interest taken in marksmanship. In Canada, we have rifle ranges where, at stated measured distances our soldiers shoot at a fixed target. In actual warfare, and that is what rifle practice is mainly held to provide for, what a soldier must naturally shoot at is not a fixed target with measured distances, but a moving figure or figures at an unknown distance. The little Japanese, who won victory from the mighty arms of Russia, do not train their soldiers to shoot at a fixed target at a known distance. They, I understand, train their marksmen to shoot at moving figures at varying, and to the soldier unknown distances. Battles in these days are not won by charges of troops as was the case fifty years ago. Strategy, artillery and marksmanship is what wins now. Troops do not, as a rule, in modern warfare meet the enemy in a hand to hand tussle. Shots are exchanged at a distance of anywhere from half to three-quarters of a mile. Consequently the good shot is worth ten men whose bullets, costing money, are wasted. Let us have the best means of procuring good marksmanship available and Canada's troops will be worth ten times their respective number.

Marksman.

C. P. R. BRIDGE CAUSED VERY LITTLE TROUBLE

A slang expression says "a kicker is born every minute." It has been rumored that the splendid new bridge across the Scugog river, just above the town of Lindsay, had interferred with traffic, during the winter, between the adjoining townships and that town. With the usual enterprise and care for public convenience, the C.P.R. authorities recently took soundings to ascertain the thickness of the ice there. It was 16 inches thick and absolutely safe for traffic. The farmers of Ops township are using the ice track and say that the reports were greatly exaggerated and that they suffer little or no inconvenience.

A TIMELY WARNING.

The News says that in 1875 the Government of the day passed legislation permitting the establishment of Separate Schools in territories under Federal control. Mr. George Brown warned Parliament against such action, saying that it would cause abundant trouble in the future. But there is no reason why it should cause trouble if we stick to the letter and the spirit of the constitution. Keewatin in becoming a part of Manitoba becomes subject to the Manitoba Legislature, and will be represented in that Legislature. Education is under the exclusive jurisdiction of the Province.

STANDARD LOAN CO HAS SUCCESSFUL YEAR

Special attention is hereby drawn to the large annual report of the Standard Loan Co., which appears in this issue. The shareholders of this strong financial institution held their twelfth annual meeting in their head office, Toronto, on February 28th, ult. President Kammerer very ably occupied the chair, whilst Mr. W. S. Dinnick acted as secretary, pro tem. The report and balance sheet presented by the directors was of a most satisfactory character. During the fiscal the year the Standard Loan Co. not only paid a six per cent. annual dividend, but carried $50,000.00 to the Reserve Fund, which now amounts to the handsome, and safety impelling sum of $100,000. $2,840.00 was placed to the credit of profit and loss account, and a considerable sum applied towards office furniture account. As an instance of the soundness and perfect credit of the company, it might be noted that both interest and instalments of principal on Mortgages and securities of the company were met promptly. The assets of the company amount to $2,500,000, and of a most safe and conservative nature. The auditors of the company, in their report, note that the Standard's assets are in a most flourishing condition and their books well kept. An important item of their report is contained in the words "The loans are in good condition, etc." Mr. Kammerer was re-elected president.

OIL OIL OIL

Oil is King--King of Fuel for all purposes

Without it the automobile could not exist. Just as soon as a supply can be depended on, ships on every ocean, sea, lake, and river, will be propelled by it. The British Admiralty are building warships to be propelled by it. The great railway transportation companies are altering their locomotives to be driven by it. The cooking stoves and heating plants in every district where it can be secured are being made to use it—in fact the whole civilized world is crying out for it.

And we have it—have the piece of the earth where it is bursting out and spilling over in such quantities that we are able to collect it from the surface of the pools, put it in bottles, and have it analyzed, and here is what the analytical chemist has to say of it:

The Government of Canada has supplied its people with this means, and by the payment at any Postal Money Order Office of a small amount weekly, monthly or as may be otherwise arranged, protection against an old age of dependence and humiliation may be made with absolute certainty. For example, the payment of $1 a week by a man of 25 until he is 55 would give him an Annuity from the latter age of $259.28, payable quarterly; while if he continued paying until he was 60, his Annuity would be $397.36. In either case, if he died before the date fixed for the Annuity to begin all his payments with compound interest at 3 per cent. would be refunded to his legal representatives.

Literature descriptive of the features of the Annuities System, and tables showing the cost of Annuities on different plans, may be obtained at the Post Office or on application to the Superintendent of Annuities, Ottawa, to whom letters go free of postage.

KEEP THE PIGS DRY

Guard Against Dampness From the Very Beginning

Pigs are animals that, as a class, are subject to rheumatism and similar troubles, and if you are going to be a successful pig-keeper you must guard against dampness from the very start, especially with the bedding arrangements.

Straw—barley straw in particular—makes capital bedding; and dry bracken, dried grass from the hedges, and similar material may be used. I will assume, of course, that the floor of the sleeping apartment of your sty is of brick, sloped for drainage, and that a warm bed of some kind is provided for the animals. From time to time as it is dirtied this bedding must be changed, and it is a good plan to place it in the fore court of the sty—if any—till it has become part of the muck, which you will remove for manurial purposes as necessary.

And if dry quarters are necessary with adult sows and pigs, how much more so is this the case with the youngsters! At birth they should have clean, sweet straw provided, not in great quantities, or they may be unwittingly lain upon by their mother, or else smothered, but sufficient for dryness and warmth. Then, during their infancy the quantity may be gradually increased till the usual allowance is arrived at. Needless to say, the straw bedding should be changed almost daily at first, and this is especially the case with a large litter in a somewhat cramped sty.

Watch [illegible] the birds' nests before you remove a dead tree. If you can save a nest of young birds spare the tree awhile. Birds [illegible] every year of noxious weeds [illegible] keeping down [illegible]. They do much good [illegible] weeds, insect pests and noxious [illegible]

Coal Is Dear Outside the City.

As a proof that Peterborough is not the only place in Canada where coal is expensive, see what the Ottawa Citizen says, viz.: "Coal sleighs in Ottawa should be accompanied by an armed guard, like any other valuable mineral in transit. Dealers who fail to take this precaution cannot escape a charge of criminal negligence if loads arrive at the unfortunate consumer's house a couple of hundred weight shy."

THE HINDU IMMIGRANT.

The decision of the federal government not to relax the regulations against the immigration of Hindus into British Columbia appears to have caused great satisfaction in Vancouver, where the Hindus in Canada most do congregate. All the more so because the decision was based on official investigation by the department of the interior into the whole question, including the conditions of Hindu life in British Columbia, and was not merely a concession to public opinion in Vancouver. "The conclusion arrived at," remarks the Vancouver Province, "is a direct rebuff to those people in the east, and especially in Toronto, who made such a determined effort to open the door to this class of immigration."

The Times is in receipt of a very prettily gotten up booklet issued to inaugurate a Semi-Centennial of Confederation. This will, of course, be held in 1917. As the booklet says: "Let the idea of unity prevail among us. Let 1917 deepen and widen this. Let the confidence of Canadians in Canada increase, and the good will and harmony of our people grow abundantly. Let us realize that "faith is better than distrust, and concord than disagreement. Let us prepare ourselves for this great national and imperial event by designating ourselves everywhere in Canada as Canadians, not as provincialists."

The Dominion Government has issued a Blue Book of Express Statistics for the Dominion of Canada. According to this report the capitalization of distinctly Canadian Companies was reported at $4,005,200, divided as follows: Canadian Express Company, $1,705,200; Canadian Northern Express Company, $300,000; Dominion Express Company, $2,000,000; total, $4,005,200. The amount realized in cash for the foregoing stock issue was reported to have been $3,165,200, thus leaving $840,000 of what seems "water". This, however, does not prevent the three Canadian Express Companies from doing splendid work and giving a most satisfactory service.

WHALING OFF NEW ZEALAND

Graphic Description of the Work of the Whalers with Their Deadly Harpoons

At the cry of "There she blows!" out go the steam launches to replace the nets, three in number, that suffice to close the narrow channel. These, unanchored, are allowed to float loose, the ends of each slightly overlapping. Kept taut by their own weight, they hang stretched on the float line, an invisible curtain of wire mesh barring the water run.

No human fastening, says the Wide World, has yet been invented that would stop the rush of a charging whale. The principal of the detached floating net is not to stop, but so to hamper the monster with a gossamer of wire rope that he falls an easy prey to the hunters. For this reason also the nets are so placed that on striking an entangled whale may race seaward or sound downward, carrying the enveloping net, without fear of disturbing the remaining two.

When the nets are in position the launches and attendant whaleboats, with their crews, take up their stations at some distance to watch for an unheaval and dancing floating line that marks the striking of a whale.

Often a whale's presence is first indicated by great masses of broken barnacles and torn seagrass that come floating upward to the surface as the whale, floundering among the rocks of the sea floor, eases himself with delighted scratchings in the depths.

In the boats all is tense expectancy and ordered preparation. Harpoon guns are loaded and made ready, lines are carefully flaked down in the tubs, lances are looked to, and everyone is on the qui vive. Suddenly a sort of shudder runs through the sea. There are tossing billows and wild commotion made by the bobbing float lines "Hurrah! she's struck!" is the cry.

Away go the boats, each racing to be the first fast to the struggling fish and so earn the bonus that rewards the winning crew. A mighty, grey black head, entangled in a clinging web of wire, rears from out the water. Up, up, it goes, till a huge bulk of body towers a good fifty feet in the air, its side fins thrashing wildly in a smother of foam. It curves in an arch, and then, like an arrow, down go whale and net together for the sound.

Not for long though. The upward drag of bunched net floats, and its necessity for breath brings the animal quickly to the surface—a spouting, snorting, wallowing mass; mad with rage, wild with terror of the unknown clinging horror that envelops it.

Bang! bang! go the guns from each boat in quick succession. Both irons are home and well placed. A wild quiver of flukes and fins, and the whale either sounds again or races along the surface, towing the boats after it at express speed. But the net holds fast, and at [illegible] freedom the victim becomes more helplessly wound up than before.

Soon exhausted with futile struggling, the whale comes to rest, and there is a momentary cessation of the mad fight, as the leviathan pauses for breath. Huge panting air gasps are plainly audible at a distance of half a mile.

The crews are quick to seize the opportunity. With the lancemen ready in the bow the boats sweep in, one on either side. "Steady with the lance." "Now!" Eight-foot steel blades drive deep for the heart behind the pectoral fins.

A shiver, a hissing spout of [illegible] and blood, a wallow and roll of huge [illegible] carcass, flashes of red and white foam in the sunlight and the black heave of a twentyfoot fin that for one dread instant, scimitar-shaped, a falling wall of bone and sinew, hangs over the boat and its occupants. The boat's crew back out like lightning just in time. Down crashes the mighty flail, missing its blow by a bare foot. There is a roar and clap of many thunders, and jetting spurts of spray leap high into the blue.

The boats backed clear, still hang to the lines, the crews watching events and waiting the end. It may be that the dying whale will sound again or race in a final effort. But the lances have got home. A few more wallows of despair, the great tail flukes thrash the water with lessening force, and presently the huge body, inert, lifeless, lies quietly on the surface. Hawsers are made [illegible] the dead whale, and while the [illegible] return to their stations to [illegible] remaining nets, it is towed by the launch to the jetty ashore.

Largest Dry Dock

Begun eight years ago, the largest dry dock in the world, which measures 886 feet by 100 feet, has just been completed at Belfast.

It is understood that before passing a new naval act the Ottawa Government will submit the question to the people. This seems the proper course. In so important a matter the consent of the people should be obtained. It is a new question in Dominion politics and involves an expenditure so great that it should not be entered upon rashly.

A FINE SPORT

A Tribute to the Late Dean David Ward of Hanlan Days

The late David Ward, Toronto, was easily the best and most trustworthy friend Ned Hanlan had. He was head and front of the Hanlan Club which financed the champion and secured for him thousands of dollars that would have otherwise most probably have eluded him. But, after the fashion of mankind, "the world's famous," was not as grateful as he might have been and got it into his head that David Ward and his associates were reaping more than glory and riches out of his efforts than they were entitled to. Dave Ward was ever the wise and generous sagacious friend and counsellor. He had been commissioned so to be by the champion's father, to whom he was warmly attached, and he was true to his trust. But Hanlan bolted, took affairs into his own hands, and still went on successfully but hardly with the substantial rewards that wiser management might have produced. Dave Ward was not one to talk. He was eminently a silent man and withal a kindly man. Consequently he had little to say about the trouble that arose between him and Hanlan. That he felt it keenly was very evident. And the champion was no easy man to manage. In England, when he rowed Hawdon and Elliott, and againn when he rowed Trickett, he several times exhibited a tendency to kick over the traces, but Dave Ward bore everything with exemplary patience and brought him out triumphant in every instance. After his defeat of Trickett, the split occured, and Hanlan went to Australia and twice suffered defeat from Beach. At Barrie he succumbed to Ryley, although the decision of six feet against him, was disputed and afterwards on Toronto Bay to Teemer, on this occasion undoubtedly owing to lack of wise counsel and management. But it is all over now and both men have gone to their last account.

WOLGAST IS THE RICHEST

He Leads all Light Weights in the Coin Retained

Ad Wolgast is the world's richest lightweight, having earned and saved more money during his "term of office" than any other man who ever pranced along under the 133-pound title.

Battling Nelson "hogged" the lion's share of many big purses and was never a spendthrift and has a bunch of it well invested.

Poor old Joe Gans earned several fortunes in the time that intervened between his victory over Frank Erne at Fort Erie on May 12, 1902, and his second defeat at the hands of Nelson in the Colma ring on September 9, 1908, but the money ran through the wonderful mulatto's fingers like water and when his untimely end came in Arizona the scant hotel holdings of Joe represented his total assets.

Bill Rothwell, "Young Corbett," [illegible] 1904, and [illegible] of Britt, Nelson and Hanlon the [illegible] man continued to grab off the coin. The primrose path was never really blistered until Rothwell started to travel. Billy's speed singed the buds and scorched the bushes. He left nothing in his trail but cinders. Several "benefit performances" have been staged for Rothwell, and, according to the latest reports from New York, he is now ripe for another life-sized "benefit."

Packey McFarland is a clean living and frugal youngster, but the stock yard lad has never had a chance to box for what could really be considered "big" money. McFarland has saved and wisely invested his money and, according to Harry Gilmore, Jr., could to-day write his check for $50,000, the same being as good as gold, but compared to Wolgast the Chicagoan is a pauper.

It wouldn't be exactly fair to Wolgast to reveal the exact amount of his fortune, but the same would stagger even those who realize the earning capacity of a world's champion.

IN YE OLDEN TIMES

Skating must have been a difficult art before the introduction of steel blades, yet Londoners used to go in for it as early as the twelfth century. Fitzstephen, in his "Description of London," published in 1180, records that "when the great fenne or moore (which watereth the walls of the city on the North side) is frozen over many young men play on the yce. . . some striding as wide as they doo slide swiftlie; some tye bones to their feete and under their heels, and shoving themselves with a little picked staffe do slide as swiftlie as a bird flyeth in the aire or an arrow out of a cross-bow."

EODIE ST. PIERRE, the Montreal newspaper man who has been chosen secretary treasurer of the Dominion Lacrosse Association, other wise known as the "Big Four."

11,000 milk bottles have been seized in Toronto because their contents were between "wine" measure and "Imperial" measure. In this city, a good many people would not kick if there was only that slight difference in capacity if the price of milk would only come down and purchasers could be certain that the extract de cow and the farm pump were not, at least, third cousins.

ARMY'S LATEST RECRUIT

Laura, the Coldstreams' Pet Pelican, Returns from Egypt

One of the latest recruits which the British Army has secured is Laura, the pet pelican of the Coldstream Guards. Laura has been brought home from Egypt by the famous regiment, and is now a favorite with all, except—and an important exception—Chinko, a pert little monkey, which is another pet of the Coldstreams'.

However, breaches of the peace are now uncommon between them, as Laura and Chinko do not often meet. The pelican is quite expert in the duties of a soldier. She occasionally wears the uniform, and does "sentry-go" in front of a box in quite the approved style.

A long, narrow beak of sword-like dimensions is an excellent substitute for the real thing, and more than one member of the regiment, not excepting Chinko, has felt its keen edge.

It is reported that Laura found England very depressing after the sunshine of Egypt, but is now getting more acclimatized and contented with her life in the regiment.

THE SQUIRREL'S CUNNING

Storing Its Winter Supply—Why It Is a Game Bird Guard

Although the common red squirrel is one of the liveliest and most attractive of our wild creatures, a knowledge of its habits is more casual than intimate.

The past winter gave forest lovers an opportunity for studying squirrels to an extent seldom possible, as the mildness of the weather made neither for long nor deep hibernation. I was surprised at the number and variety of places where the little animal had stored its winter hoards. The smallness of these, too, was noteworthy, as they seldom contained more than a handful of foodstuff.

The larders were in hollow trees, old birds' nests, but most often in the ground a little below the surface, and although many of the hoards were at the foot of trees, the favorite place was in a field bordering a wood and about twenty or thirty yards from the edge. The latter is probably the safest larder of all, as marauding rats and mice do not venture so far outside the wood in winter.

After watching the squirrel going from one hoard to another, I have little doubt that its ability to find these is not a matter of memory or of instinct, but of smell. It is the same highly-developed sense, too, that makes the squirrel an accomplished truffle hunter (for truffles are a great squirrel dainty), and I think that it must have been their smelling abilities that brought squirrels to a peach house in which they did a lot of damage.

Squirrel cunning defeated the most cleverly laid traps and other attempts at capture, and to save the fruit the unwelcome visitors had ultimately to be shot. The squirrel is one of the best game bird guards, and its winter stores have led many a famished pheasant. [illegible] squirrel does not pay much attention to a mere man, but immediately it espies a fox or stoat on the prowl it chatters loudly in the greatest excitement, and game birds never fail to profit by their sentinel's warnings, apparently knowing that the squirrel is no idle alarmist.

Pheasants scratch up and devour the squirrel's winter stores when other food is scarce, and as "pug" always wastes ten times the quantity of food he consumes, and scatters nuts, acorns, wild fruits and hedge berries which the game birds would not other wise get, and which they thoroughly enjoy, it thus benefits them all the year round.

One of the prettiest sights is that of young squirrels taking their first lessons in climbing and jumping. Like most wild animals the squirrel can swim well when the occasion demands, but it does not love damp, and when passing through wet grass its tail is carried high and not towwise, as it usually is when the squirrel is in motion.—From the Scotsman.

MARRIAGE RESOLUTIONS

When Theodore Parker, the great American preacher, was married, he entered in his journal on his wedding-day the following resolutions:

First—Never, except for the best reasons, to oppose my wife's will.

Second—To discharge all duties for her sake freely.

Third—Never to scold.

Fourth—Never to look cross at her.

Fifth—Never to worry her with commands.

Sixth—To promote her piety.

Seventh—To bear her burdens.

Eighth—To overlook her foibles.

Ninth—To save, cherish, and for ever defend her.

Tenth—To remember her always in my prayers. Thus, God willing, we shall be blessed.

The commandments which Parker put upon himself are like the old decalogue, all comprehended in one word—love.

WHY HE FOUGHT

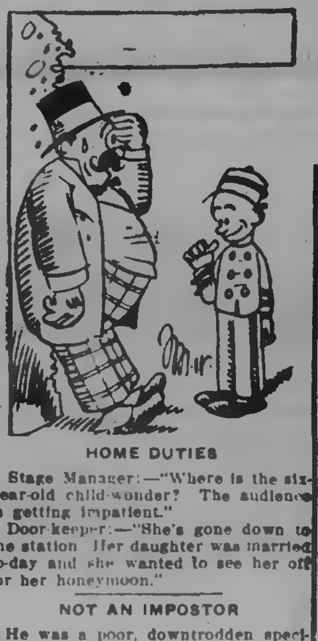
A defendant at Enfield the other day made the following answer to the accusation against him: "His little boy came to my house and said, 'Father sends kind regards, and he's waiting to do it on you.' I said, 'I don't fight in the street,; but he came and knocked the door; and I went out and had a go with him, and the ginger beer man was referee."

A Foolish Fish

A curious angling story comes from Cornhill. An enthusiastic disciple of Isaak Walton was sitting musingly on the river's side, when he felt a tug at his line. He pulled suddenly, and the line gave way, the fish making off with the hook, worm and cast. Putting on a new cast, what was the angler's surprise to find on hooking a trout that it was the same one that had run off with his hook and line.

City Fire Losses for February.

During the month of February there were nine fires in the city with the total damage amounting to $1,410. Of this amount $1,300 was lost in the fire on Harvey street, during the severe cold snap, with the thermometer registering 25 below zero. During the corresponding month of last year the chief reported eleven fires with a total loss of $25.



HOME DUTIES

Stage Manager:—"Where is the six-year-old child-wonder? The audience is getting impatient."

Door-keeper:—"She's gone down to the station. Her daughter was married to-day and she wanted to see her off for her honeymoon."

NOT AN IMPOSTOR

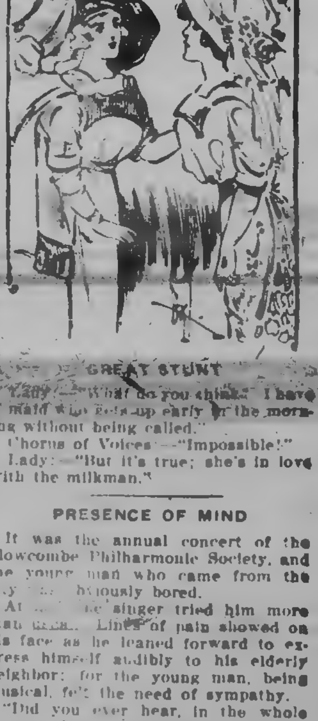
He was a poor, downtrodden specimen of humanity, and the heart of the millionaire merchant was touched. He stopped for a moment to listen to the beggar's plea.

"I'm starving, sir," wailed the unfortunate one, and tears stood in his eyes. "And this is the last thing we have in the world—my poor wife's wedding-ring!"

Then the merchant remembered. He looked more closely into the man's face, and, all of a sudden, became exceedingly mad.

"You—you scoundrel!" he spluttered. "Why, it was only last week I bought your wife's wedding-ring from you to save you from starvation! You're an impostor, sir! Get—"

"An impostor!" cried the weary one indignantly. "Oh, no, sir! You're quite mistaken! This ring belongs to my second wife—I was married again last Monday!"



GREAT STUNT

Lady:—"What do you think? I have a maid who gets up early in the morning without being called."

Chorus of Voices:—"Impossible!"

Lady:—"But it's true; she's in love with the milkman."

PRESENCE OF MIND

It was the annual concert of the Slowcombe Philharmonic Society, and the young man who came from the city [illegible] hideously bored.

At [illegible] the singer tried him more than [illegible]. Lines of pain showed on his face as he leaned forward to express himself audibly to his elderly neighbor; for the young man, being musical, felt the need of sympathy.

"Did you ever hear, in the whole course of your existence," he whispered, in disgust, "such horribly discordant, ear-splitting—"

The old gentleman frowned.

"That's my daughter, sir, and if—"

But the young man waved aside the interruption, and, with scarcely a tremor, went on:

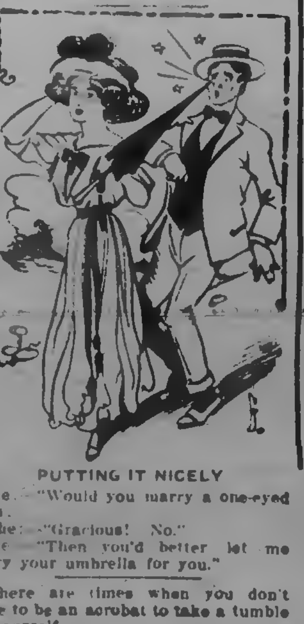
"Such ear-splitting chatter as these idiots behind us are making? Really, I can scarcely catch one word of the song!"

TOO MANY TRAINS

A railway guard busily engaged in getting his train ready to start accidentally trod on a lady's dress as she swept by.

"Oh, you clumsy man!" she exclaimed, the sudden weight from behind bringing her to a standstill. "Please be a little more careful."

"Beg pardon, madam," replied the guard, "but I can't possibly attend to two trains at once."



PUTTING IT NICELY

He:—"Would you marry a one-eyed man."

She:—"Gracious! No."

He:—"Then you'd better let me carry your umbrella for you."

There are times when you don't have to be an acrobat to take a tumble to yourself.

A Bogus Telephone Inspector.

Here is a "tip," or pointer for those having telephones in their private houses. It seems that in other towns a well dressed stranger is going from house to house representing himself as a telephone inspector. When he gains admission presumably to inspect the telephone service his fingers come in contact with, and stick to any article of value in sight. "Nuff sed."

Dizzy Headaches Cured in One Night

IF TROUBLED WITH HEAD-FULLNESS, RINGING NOISES, SPECS BEFORE THE EYES, THE STOMACH IS AT FAULT.

"I had terrible pains in my head. My appetite faded away and when I did eat anything it disagreed and made me very sick for hours after each meal. The active pains in my stomach and the dizzy headaches I had to endure almost set one wild. Sometimes attacks came on so severely that I had to go to bed. I would feel so worn, depressed and utterly miserable that for hours I wouldn't speak to my family. My system was poisoned with wastes and nothing helped me till I used Dr. Hamilton's Pills. Without this grand system-cleaning remedy I would be sick, but each day brought me better health and spirits. I was cured and made strong, ruddy and healthy looking as one could wish and will always use and recommend Dr. Hamilton's Pills.

THE MORNING TIMES

TUESDAY, MARCH 12, 1912.

ONE TELEPHONE SERVICE ONLY.

Current talk of the government taking over the Express Companies, reminds one of when, some twenty years ago, some local citizens took stock in an Express Company to run in opposition to the companies then in operation. It's death was just a little more rapid than that of the Ontario Telephone Co. organized and promoted here, which undertook to give a $15.00 a year service in competition with the established Bell Co. Whilst every one naturally wants the cheapest of everything he can get, any intelligent man realizes that to give good value in any walk of life, or line of business, to supply good goods takes money.

INDEPENDENT ON CHURCH UNITY.

Bobcaygeon Independent: A strong disposition is being manifested for unity among the Protestant religion throughout Ontario, more particularly among the Presbyterian and Methodist. From a religious point of view it would no doubt be a happy consummation to have all the protestant sections united, but apart entirely from the religious view, such a union would be of incalculable value from the ordinary social view. At present every little community is divided into as many clans as there are churches, and as a rule every little community down to the smallest village has at least four branches of the church. These [illegible] separate and distinct from each other, as any tribes or clans that ever existed. Each are engrossed in their own church affairs, to the exclusion of all others. They have their meetings and entertainments which are open to the public, but the public usually consists of about half a dozen who feel that they are called upon to return some similar compliment. Each clan meets together on Sunday, they assemble at prayer meeting, and every day they have some fund or subsidiary organization to attract their attention. Naturally the clanishness is carried into all public affairs, and unity of aim, of purpose, and endeavor, which should exist in all communities for the public good, is a rareity almost unknown. Occasionally a spasm of public spirit may be aroused for a brief period but ultimately the old clanish jealousies are bound to prevail, and the combination falls to pieces again. Any reduction of these religious clans will be a tendency towards the production of a healthy public spirit, a spirit that will make for greater communal advantage and material advancement.

Editorial Notes

The police of Ogdensburg, N. Y., [illegible] searching for two Chinamen who walked across the ice from Kingston, and are now at large in the United States. If all the Chinks of Peterborough would, or could, walk across the ice to Charlotte, the people of Peterborough would cheerfully subscribe towards skates or snowshoes to speed them on their way.

Every reporter in every small town or city is anxious to procure personals. The reporters of Kingston, however, have a steady source for such news, and still they do not seem to use it. Strangers are going almost daily to the Limestone City to take up residence for long periods, and, still their respective arrivals are not noted in the press of that city. The visitors referred to reside at the Penitentiary.

It is very evident that a certain section of the far Western press is not in love with Sir Wilfrid Laurier's action on the Manitoba Boundary Bill. The Winnipeg Telegram says: "The speech of Sir Wilfrid Laurier on the boundary bill will go down in Canadian history as the most unfair made by a Canadian statesman, and as betraying he [illegible] undying hostility to this province. It is difficult to be seen how any man of his intellectual capacity could descend to any such despicable [illegible] as he adopted."

Two boys in Kingston have been arrested for stealing coal. This was a most reprehensible act! Still, with the price of coal now-a-days, and diamonds only being worth about $200 a karat, there might have been great temptation. The boys had manufactured a home-made sleigh to draw away the hundred pounds of coal they stole. Thus the act was premeditated. The article from which this information was gleaned did not say whether the boys were going to have the coal made into jewellery or just put it in the kitchen stove.

It covers the wound with a layer of protective balm, kills all poison germs already in the wound, and prevents others entering. Its rich [illegible] then builds up from the bottom, fresh tissues and in a wonderfully short time [illegible] healed!

SEEKING AN HONEST MAN

"Who was that guy that went around with a lantern hunting for an honest man?"

MOSQUITOES THAT BARK

"When I was on the West Coast," said the old sailor, "the mosquitoes used to stand on the stones and bark."

"Great heavens!" ejaculated Pilcher. "You don't mean it!"

"Yes, I do," replied the sailor. "They often get on the stones and bark—of the trees!"

[illegible] ON THE EAST

A famous impresario of Italian opera had arranged to open at Covent Garden about the middle of May; but, after having made his intention public, something caused him to alter his arrangements, and he announced the opening for the beginning of May.

The day his advertisement appeared he met the proprietor of a well-known "gaff" then situated in Whitechapel, who exclaimed:

"You have done a nice thing for me, making your season a fortnight earlier!"

"What difference can it make to you?" cried the West-ender. "Your audience won't patronise my theatre."

"No," replied the "gaffer"; "but they'll be outside it picking pockets!"

CONCERNING THE MOON

An Interesting Bit of Canadian Folklore by E. McCulloch

Evelin[illegible], Ridgetown, Ontario, [illegible] the following bit of interesting [illegible]:

A [illegible] high in the north sky portends a [illegible] month.

A new moon low in the south sky portends a hot month.

A new moon straight up so that the hunter may not hang his powder horn on it denotes a dry moon, for he may safely hunt that month.

Vice versa, a moon lying flat, on whose corner the hunter may hang his powder horn is a wet moon, and rain can be counted upon.

A red moon denotes heat and drouth.

A yellow moon, storms, especially wind.

A clear, white moon, clear weather.

When the moon changes from one quarter to another, a change of weather is looked for.

A large circle around the moon denotes a storm as many days off as there are visible stars inside the circle.

A far-off circle denotes a near-by storm.

If you catch the first glimpse of a new moon over your right shoulder and wish without looking away you will have good fortune all that moon and obtain your wish; also, vice versa, seeing the moon over your left shoulder is not good luck.

All signs fail in a drouth.

A harvest moon stays full two nights.

A hunter's moon follows the harvest moon.

The moon shining on one's face sleeping causes insanity. This is carefully observed among old nurses.

Certain phases of the moon affect our moods and dispositions.

Insane people are perceptibly worse in certain phases of the moon.

Pork killed in the advance of the moon will not shrink in the frying, while that killed in the waning of the moon will shrink while cooking.

Potatoes should be planted in the full of the moon when stems are hollow.

To cut or burn the ends of one's hair in new moon systematically for some months will insure a heavy, luxurious growth of hair.

The ancients reckoned time and events by the phases of the moon and the moons in succession.

The moon and the phase of the moon we are born under determine not only our characteristics, disposition, etc., but our capabilities and achievements. These are determined with the signs of the zodiac corresponding.

People born under certain moon conditions are susceptible to those conditions as they reoccur.

Many sailors and fishermen guide their expeditions by the moon.

If you cut Canada thistles in the full of the moon. No other time. Now, it succeeds in killing them outright.

LONG DISTANCE EXPERIMENT

A very successful experiment in long distance telephoning was carried out the other day between Paris and Aberdeen. Communication between the two cities was established by way of London, Dover, and Calais, says the Daily Chronicle Paris correspondent. The Paris international exchange called up the local office of the Daily Chronicle, and switched it one to Aberdeen. Despite the long distance—a matter of 1,000 miles or so—it was possible to hear quite distinctly and without any buzzing.

GLASS FROM SLAG

Slag obtained from various ironworks in England is being made into glass by a concern in Liverpool. Proportions of sand and sulphate of soda, and in some instances a little lime, are put into the blast furnace, converting the ordinary slag into a glass that is available for slates, paving-blocks, bricks, and tiles. It is said that slates can be manufactured at less than half the expense of Welsh slate. They have a polished appearance, and can be made in any size and shape, and in many colors.

STOP STREET CRIES

In fulfilment of a promise to a dying patient, Dr. C. Fenwick, of Thornton Heath, recently called the attention of the Croydon Council to the nuisance of street cries to persons ill in bed. In consequence a new by-law has been adopted [illegible] a penalty of $25 where any [illegible] refuses to desist.

LIGHTS OF THE OCEAN

The number of lighthouses and lightships in the world, not including the inland bodies of water, such as the Great Lakes, is 15,224. Of this number, 12,171 are on the Atlantic, 2,258 on the P[illegible], 477 on the Indian Ocean, and [illegible] Polar seas.

TRINIDAD'S BUTTER TRADE

France Has a Large Percentage of the Trade

Trinidad imported $165,[illegible] worth of butter last year, of which trade Canada furnished less than 2.5 per cent., while France furnishes over 60 per cent. of the total trade. This is explained by the fact that years ago a French butter manufacturer took the trouble to find out the class of butter most suited for general trade in the tropics, and [illegible] was most essential, the best package to put it in. Some time ago an attempt to compete was made from Canada, but it failed, solely for want of compliance with the conditions experience had taught the French exporters. The firkins were made of inferior wood. They were insufficiently hooped—four iron hoops, against about fifteen, wood and iron, in the French packages—and the butter melted and leaked. This is a trade that should go to the Dominion, and that it would do if any of our manufacturers make it worth while to fall in with local requirements. It should not be omitted, however, that one or two brands of tinned Canadian butter are in very favorable demand, and are appreciated as being pure and good.

PREFER BIG CLOTHES

The male portion of our United States visitors (says the Tailor and Cutter) might generally pass as native-born subjects of this country if it were not for their obtrusively easy-fitting garments. The United States is a big country, and many of her subjects seem to prefer looking a few sizes larger than Nature intended them to be. Their coats are usually cut about four inches larger than they ought to be, and then built up with wadding and haircloth until there is a semblance of outline agreeable to the American idea of largeness.

Proven Oil Lands Consisting of 240 Acres, King's County, Coalinga, California, U. S. A.

The Company's property consists of 240 acres of patented and proven OIL-BEARING LAND, situated in King's County, California, east of the croppings.

In this particular location there are no dry holes. Many companies in Coalinga have the same capitalization or greater than that of the Dominion Oil Company, have control of only 20, 40 or 80 acres, and even these companies are making big money for their shareholders. Compared with them, the holdings of the Dominion Oil Company are immense, and when developed and producing oil, should be worth Millions of Dollars. The Company's well has been drilled to a depth of 2180 feet.

Thousands of clerks, struggling lawyers and business men have become [illegible] through their interests in oil, and they are still putting their money in larger and more extensive oil investments. Many of our friends and clients ask about the chances of investments in California oil as compared with mining. There is really no comparison. 90 per cent. of the legitimate oil companies operating anywhere near the proven fields have been successful beyond the dreams of the most sanguine. Oil stock values have doubled, quadrupled, and in many instances advanced from a few cents per share to as many dollars, and there is scarcely a legitimate oil proposition two years old that is not paying a large rate of interest on the par value of its shares. Investors generally in mining shares have realized very little on their investments, and we believe that it is safe to say that not more than one mining company in a hundred makes good. If you are interested in mining we believe you will agree with us that our estimate is not far out.

California stands at the head of the oil-producing territories of the world and her oil industry is a small empire in itself. The resources of the state have been but scratched, and the earth has yielded only a tithe of its great wealth. The market for oil is being constantly enlarged, and so long as heat and light are needed in the world's business, so long will California oil find a ready market at remunerative prices.

In conclusion, we particularly wish to draw your attention to the calibre of the Directors of the Dominion Oil Company. They are well known, wealthy, Canadian business men, men of sterling integrity and highest business principles, men who may be trusted to the very limit in any and all business transactions. One has the assurance, therefore, that the affairs of the company will be handled to the very best possible advantage. A purchase of shares in the Dominion Oil Company is sure to turn out profitable to you.

There are now being offered for public subscription 100,000 shares of the Treasury Stock at 50c per share, which will leave 400,000 shares still in the treasury. It will be the aim of the directors to maintain and keep as large a treasury balance as possible in both money and stock available to meet at all times any and all contingencies that may arise, and thus effectually safeguarding the interests of all shareholders.

This is your opportunity to make good in the great oil industry of California. We are fully acquainted with the situation and feel that we can advise you to purchase at least 100 shares of this stock and as much more as you can afford. Write us at once for Illustrated Prospectus, which will give you full particulars of this sterling investment.

HEATING THE HOUSE

The Importance of Having Humidity in the Air

As far back as you can remember the use of the heating stove in your father's or grandfather's house, you will be able to recall the fact that a pan or kettle of water was always steaming on the stove. It kept the air in the room moistened or humidized and in effect made the warmth at once satisfying and agreeable.

Then the day of the warm air furnace came, and since then, with the exception of a few instances in which people have appreciated the value of humidity and have kept their furnace water pans supplied with hot water, we have been content with a hot, dry, enervating heat, which is destructive to both comfort and health.

Dry air will absorb moisture from every possible source, and when, by furnace heating, the humidity is almost entirely eliminated, the furniture and other wood fittings, the house plants, and even your own body, are levied upon to supply the deficiency, and, as a result, the furniture warps, the plants wither and die, and you lay yourself open to contract one of those severe colds, or worse, which you wonder how and where you caught. The average furnace water-pan is rather on the small side to supply the necessary moisture, but a new form of pan in the shape of a complete circle has been recently introduced with much success and promises to again give us the health-giving and agreeable humidized heat which our parents appreciated and enjoyed.

The Times is in receipt of a very prettily gotten up booklet issued to inaugurate a Semi-Centennial of Confederation. This will, of course, be held in 1917. As the booklet says, "Let the idea of unity prevail among us. Let 1917 deepen and widen this. Let the confidence of Canadians in Canada increase, and the good will and harmony of our people grow abundantly. Let us realize that "faith is better than distrust, and concord than disagreement. Let us prepare ourselves for this great national and imperial event by designating ourselves everywhere in Canada as Canadians, not as provincialists."

The Dominion Government has issued a Blue Book of Express Statistics for the Dominion of Canada. According to this report the capitalization of distinctly Canadian Companies was reported at $4,005,200, divided as follows:—Canadian Express Company, $1,705,200; Canadian Northern Express Company, $300,000; Dominion Express Company, $2,000,000; total, $4,005,200. The amount realized in cash for the foregoing stock issue was reported to have been $3,165,200, thus leaving $840,000 of what seems "water". This, however, does not prevent the three Canadian Express Companies from doing splendid work and giving a most satisfactory service.

WHALING OFF NEW ZEALAND

Graphic Description of the Work of the Whalers with Their Deadly Harpoons

At the cry of "There she blows!" out go the steam launches to replace the nets, three in number, that suffice to close the narrow channel. These, unanchored, are allowed to float loose, the ends of each slightly overlapping. Kept taut by their own weight, they hang stretched on the float line, an invisible curtain of wire mesh barring the water run.

No human fastening, says the Wide World, has yet been invented that would stop the rush of a charging whale. The principal of the detached floating net is not to stop, but so to hamper the monster with a gossamer of wire rope that he falls an easy prey to the hunters. For this reason also the nets are so placed that on striking an entangled whale may race seaward or sound downward, carrying the enveloping net, without fear of disturbing the remaining two.

When the nets are in position the launches and attendant whaleboats, with their crews, take up their stations at some distance to watch for an unheaval and dancing floating line that marks the striking of a whale.

Often a whale's presence is first indicated by great masses of broken barnacles and torn sea-grass that come floating upward to the surface as the whale, floundering among the rocks of the sea-floor, eases himself with delighted scratchings in the depths.

In the boats all is tense expectancy and ordered preparation. Harpoon guns are loaded and made ready, lines are carefully flaked down in the tubs, lances are looked to, and everyone is on the qui vive. Suddenly a sort of shudder runs through the sea. There are tossing billows and wild commotion made by the bobbing float lines. "Hurrah! she's struck!" is the cry.

Away go the boats, each racing to be the first fast to the struggling fish and so earn the bonus that rewards the winning crew. A mighty, grey black head, entangled in a clinging web of wire, rears from out the water. Up, up, it goes, till a huge bulk of body towers a good fifty feet in the air, its side fins thrashing wildly in a smother of foam. It curves in an arch, and then, like an arrow, down go whale and net together for the sound.

Not for long though. The upward drag of bunched net floats, and its necessity for breath brings the animal quickly to the surface—a spouting, snorting, wallowing mass; mad with rage, wild with terror of the unknown clinging horror that envelops it.

Bang! bang! go the guns from each boat in quick succession. Both irons are home and well placed. A wild quiver of flukes and fins, and the whale either sounds again or races along the surface, towing the boats after it at express speed. But the net holds fast, and at each new effort for freedom the victim becomes more helplessly wound up than before.

Soon exhausted with futile struggling, the whale comes to rest, and there is a momentary cessation of the mad fight, as the leviathan pauses for breath. Huge panting air gasps are plainly audible at a distance of half a mile.

The crews are quick to seize the opportunity. With the lancemen ready in the bow the boats sweep in, one on either side. "Steady with the lance." "Now!" Eight-foot steel blades drive deep for the heart behind the pectoral fins.

A shiver, a hissing spout of [illegible] and blood, a wallow and roll of huge wire-tangled carcass, flashes of red and white foam in the sunlight, and the black heave of a twentyfoot fin that for one dread instant, scimitar-shaped, a falling wall of bone and sinew, hangs over the boat and its occupants. The boat's crew back out like lightning just in time. Down crashes the mighty flail, missing its blow by a bare foot. There is a roar and clap of many thunders, and jetting spurts of spray leap high into the blue.

The boats, backed clear, still hang to the lines, the crews watching events and waiting the end. It may be that the dying whale will sound again or race in a final effort. But the lances have got home. A few more wallows of despair, the great tail flukes thrash the water with lessening force, and presently the huge body, inert, lifeless, lies quietly on the surface. Hawsers are made fast to the dead whale, and while the boats return to their stations to watch the remaining nets, it is towed by the launch to the jetty ashore.

Largest Dry Dock

Begun eight years ago the largest dry dock in the world, which measures 886 feet by 100 feet, has just been completed at Belfast.

It is understood that before passing a new naval act the Ottawa Government will submit the question to the people. This seems the proper course. In so important a matter the consent of the people should be obtained. It is a new question in Dominion politics and involves an expenditure so great that it should not be entered upon rashly.

A FINE SPORT

A Tribute to the Late Dean David Ward of Hanlan Days

The late David Ward, Toronto, was easily the best and most trustworthy friend Ned Hanlan had. He was head and front of the Hanlan Club which financed the champion and secured for him thousands of dollars that would have otherwise most probably have eluded him. But, after the fashion of mankind, "the world's famous," was not as grateful as he might have been and got it into his head that David Ward and his associates were reaping more than glory and riches out of his efforts than they were entitled to. Dave Ward was ever the wise and generous sagacious friend and counsellor. He had been commissioned so to be by the champion's father, to whom he was warmly attached, and he was true to his trust. But Hanlan bolted, took affairs into his own hands, and still went on successfully but hardly with the substantial rewards that wiser management might have produced. Dave Ward was not one to talk. He was eminently a silent man and withal a kindly man. Consequently he had little to say about the trouble that arose between him and Hanlan. That he felt it keenly was very evident. And the champion was no easy man to manage. In England, when he rowed Hawdon and Elliott, and againn when he rowed Trickett, he several times exhibited a tendency to kick over the traces, but Dave Ward bore everything with exemplary patience and brought him out triumphant in every instance. After his defeat of Trickett, the split occured, and Hanlan went to Australia and twice suffered defeat from Beach. At Barrie he succumbed to Ryley, although the decision of six feet against him, was disputed and afterwards on Toronto Bay to Teemer, on this occasion undoubtedly owing to lack of wise counsel and management. But it is all over now and both men have gone to their last account.

WOLGAST IS THE RICHEST

He Leads all Light Weights in the Coin Retained

Ad Wolgast is the world's richest lightweight, having earned and saved more money during his "term of office" than any other man who ever pranced along under the 133-pound title.

Battling Nelson "hogged" the lion's share of many big purses and was never a spendthrift and has a bunch of it well invested.

Poor old Joe Gans earned several fortunes in the time that intervened between his victory over Frank Erne at Fort Erie on May 12, 1902, and his second defeat at the hands of Nelson in the Colma ring on September 9, 1908, but the money ran through the wonderful mulatto's fingers like water and when his untimely end came in Arizona the scant hotel holdings of Joe represented his total assets.

Bill Rothwell, "Young Corbett," ruled the roost from 1901 to 1904, and even after his defeats at the hands of Britt, Nelson and Hanlon the Denver man continued to grab off the coin. The primrose path was never really blistered until Rothwell started to travel. Billy's speed singed the buds and scorched the bushes. He left nothing in his trail but cinders. Several "benefit performances" have been staged for Rothwell, and, according to the latest reports from New York, he is now ripe for another life-sized "benefit."

Packey McFarland is a clean living and frugal youngster, but the stockyard lad has never had a chance to box for what could really be considered "big" money. McFarland has saved and wisely invested his money and, according to Harry Gilmore, Jr., could to-day write his check for $60,000, the same being as good as gold, but compared to Wolgast the Chicagoan is a pauper.

It wouldn't be exactly fair to Wolgast to reveal the exact amount of his fortune, but the same would stagger even those who realize the earning capacity of a world's champion.

IN YE OLDEN TIMES

Skating must have been a difficult art before the introduction of steel blades, yet Londoners used to go in for it as early as the twelfth century. Fitzstephen, in his "Description of London," published in 1180, records that "when the great fenne or moore (which watereth the walls of the city on the North side) is frozen over many young men play on the yce. . . some striding as wide as they doe slide swiftlie: some tye bones to their feete and under their heels, and shoving themselves with a little picked staffe do slide as swiftlie as a bird flyeth in the aire or an arrow out of a cross-bow."

EDDIE ST. PIERRE, the Montreal newspaper man who has been chosen secretary treasurer of the Dominion Lacrosse Association, other wise known as the "Big Four."

11,000 milk bottles have been seized in Toronto because their contents were between "wine" measure and "Imperial" measure. In this city, a good many people would not kick if there was only that slight difference in capacity if the price of milk would only come down and people could be certain that the extract de cow and the farm pump were not, at least, third cousins.

ARMY'S LATEST RECRUIT

Laura, the Coldstreams' Pet Pelican, Returns from Egypt

One of the latest recruits which the British Army has secured is Laura, the pet pelican of the Coldstream Guards. Laura has been brought home from Egypt by the famous regiment, and is now a favorite with all, except—and an important exception—Chinko, a pert little monkey, which is another pet of the Coldstreams'.

However, breaches of the peace are now uncommon between them, as Laura and Chinko do not often meet. The pelican is quite expert in the duties of a soldier. She occasionally wears the uniform, and does "sentry-go" in front of a box in quite the approved style.

A long, narrow beak of sword-like dimensions is an excellent substitute for the real thing, and more than one member of the regiment, not excepting Chinko, has felt its keen edge.

It is reported that Laura found England very depressing after the sunshine of Egypt, but is now getting more acclimatized and contented with her life in the regiment.

THE SQUIRREL'S CUNNING

Storing Its Winter Supply—Why It is a Game Bird Guard

Although the common red squirrel is one of the liveliest and most attractive of our wild creatures, a knowledge of its habits is more casual than intimate.

The past winter gave forest lovers an opportunity for studying squirrels to an extent seldom possible, as the mildness of the weather made neither for long nor deep hibernation. I was surprised at the number and variety of places where the little animal had stored its winter hoards. The smallness of these, too, was noteworthy, as they seldom contained more than a handful of foodstuff.

The larders were in hollow trees, old birds' nests, but most often in the ground a little below the surface, and although many of the hoards were at the foot of trees, the favorite place was in a field bordering a wood and about twenty or thirty yards from the edge. The latter is probably the safest larder of all, as marauding rats and mice do not venture so far outside the wood in winter.

After watching the squirrel going from one hoard to another, I have little doubt that its ability to find these is not a matter of memory or of instinct, but of smell. It is the same highly-developed sense, too, that makes the squirrel an accomplished truffle hunter (for truffles are a great squirrel dainty), and I think that it must have been their smelling abilities that brought squirrels to a peach house in which they did a lot of damage.

Squirrel cunning defeated the most cleverly laid traps and other attempts at capture, and to save the fruit the unwelcome visitors had ultimately to be shot. The squirrel is one of the best game bird guards, and its winter stores have fed many a famished pheasant.

Beyond an occasional "chuck!" the squirrel does not pay much attention to a mere man, but immediately it espies a fox or stoat on the prowl it chatters loudly in the greatest excitement, and game birds never fail to profit by their sentinel's warnings, apparently knowing that the squirrel is no idle alarmist.

Pheasants scratch up and devour the squirrel's winter stores when other food is scarce, and as "pug" always wastes ten times the quantity of food he consumes, and scatters nuts, acorns, wild fruits and hedge berries which the game birds would not otherwise get, and which they thoroughly enjoy, it thus benefits them all the year round.

One of the prettiest sights is that of young squirrels taking their first lessons in climbing and jumping. Like most wild animals the squirrel can swim well when the occasion demands, but it does not love damp, and when passing through wet grass its tail is carried high and not lowwise, as it usually is when the squirrel is in motion.—From the Scotsman.

MARRIAGE RESOLUTIONS

When Theodore Parker, the great American preacher, was married, he entered in his journal on his wedding-day the following resolutions:

First—Never, except for the best reasons, to oppose my wife's will.

Second—To discharge all duties for her sake freely.

Third—Never to scold.

Fourth—Never to look cross at her.

Fifth—Never to worry her with commands.

Sixth—To promote her piety.

Seventh—To bear her burdens.

Eighth—To overlook her foibles.

Ninth—To save, cherish, and for ever defend her.

Tenth—To remember her always in my prayers. Thus, God willing, we shall be blessed.

The commandments which Parker put upon himself are like the old decalogue, all comprehended in one word—love.

WHY HE FOUGHT

A defendant at Enfield the other day made the following answer to the accusation against him: "His little boy came to my house and said, 'Father sends kind regards, and he's waiting to do it on you.' I said, 'I don't fight in the street,; but he came and knocked the door; and I went out and had a go with him, and the ginger-beer man was referee."

A Foolish Fish

A curious angling story comes from Cornhill. An enthusiastic disciple of Isaak Walton was sitting musingly on the river's side, when he felt a tug at his line. He pulled suddenly, and the line gave way, the fish making off with the hook, worm and cast. Putting on a new cast, what was the angler's surprise to find on hooking a trout that it was the same one that had run off with his hook and line.

City Fire Losses for February.

During the month of February there were nine fires in the city with the total damage amounting to $1,410. Of this amount $1,300 was lost in the fire on Harvey street, during the severe cold snap, with the thermometer registering 25 below zero. During the corresponding month of last year the chief reported eleven fires with a total loss of $25.

HOME DUTIES

Stage Manager:—"Where is the six-year-old child-wonder? The audience is getting impatient."

Door-keeper.—"She's gone down to the station. Her daughter was married to-day and she wanted to see her off for her honeymoon."

NOT AN IMPOSTOR

He was a poor, downtrodden specimen of humanity, and the heart of the millionaire merchant was touched. He stopped for a moment to listen to the beggar's plea.

"I'm starving, sir," wailed the unfortunate one, and tears stood in his eyes. "And this is the last thing we have in the world—my poor wife's wedding-ring!"

Then the merchant remembered. He looked more closely into the man's face, and, all of a sudden, became exceedingly mad.

"You—you scoundrel!" he spluttered. "Why, it was only last week I bought your wife's wedding-ring from you to save you from starvation! You're an impostor, sir! Get—"

"An impostor!" cried the weary one indignantly. "Oh, no, sir! You're quite mistaken! This ring belongs to my second wife—I was married again last Monday!"

Lady:—"What do you think? I have a maid who gets up early in the morning without being called."

Chorus of Voices:—"Impossible!"

Lady:—"But it's true; she's in love with the milkman."

PRESENCE OF MIND

It was the annual concert of the Slowcombe Philharmonic Society, and the young man who came from the city was obviously bored.

At [illegible] the singer tried him more than [illegible]. Lines of pain showed on his face as he leaned forward to express himself audibly to his elderly neighbor; for the young man, being musical, felt the need of sympathy.

"Did you ever hear, in the whole course of your existence," he whispered, in disgust, "such horribly discordant, ear-splitting—"

The old gentleman frowned.

"That's my daughter, sir, and if—"

But the young man waved aside the interruption, and, with scarcely a tremor, went on:

"Such ear-splitting chatter as these idiots behind us are making! Really, I can scarcely catch one word of the song!"

TOO MANY TRAINS

A railway guard busily engaged in getting his train ready to start accidentally trod on a lady's dress as she swept by.

"Oh, you clumsy man!" she exclaimed, the sudden weight from behind bringing her to a standstill. "Please be a little more careful."

"Beg pardon, madam," replied the guard; "but I can't possibly attend to two trains at once."

PUTTING IT NICELY

He:—"Would you marry a one-eyed man."

She:—"Gracious! No."

He:—"Then you'd better let me carry your umbrella for you."

There are times when you don't have to be an acrobat to take a tumble to yourself.

A Bogus Telephone Inspector.

Here is a "tip," or pointer for those having telephones in their private houses. It seems that in other towns a well dressed stranger is going from house to house representing himself as a telephone inspector. When he gains admission presumably to inspect the telephone service his fingers come in contact with, and stick to any article of value in sight. 'Nuff sed.

Dizzy Headaches Cured in One Night

IF TROUBLED WITH HEAD-FULLNESS, RINGING NOISES, SPECS BEFORE THE EYES, THE STOMACH IS AT FAULT.

"I had terrible pains in my head. My appetite faded away and when I did eat anything it disagreed and made me very sick for hours after each meal. The active pains in my stomach and the dizzy headaches I had to endure almost set one wild. Sometimes attacks came on so severely that I had to go to bed. I would feel so worn, depressed and utterly miserable that for hours I wouldn't speak to my family. My system was poisoned with wastes and nothing helped me till I used Dr. Hamilton's Pills. Without this grand system-cleaning remedy I would be sick, but each day brought me better health and spirits. Current talk of the government taking over the Express Companies, reminds one of when, some twenty years ago, some local citizens took stock in an Express Company to run in opposition to the companies then in operation. INDEPENDENT ON CHURCH UNITY.

Bobcaygeon Independent: A strong disposition is being manifested for unity among the Protestant religion throughout Ontario, more particularly among the Presbyterian and Methodist. From a religious point of view it would no doubt be a happy consummation to have all the protestant sections united, but apart entirely from the religious view, such a union would be of incalculable value from the ordinary social view. At present every little community is divided into as many clans as there are churches, and as a rule every little community down to the smallest village has at least four branches of the church. Those clans are as separate and distinct from each other, as any tribes or clans that ever existed. Each are engrossed in their own church affairs, to the exclusion of all others. They have their meetings and entertainments which are open to the public, but the public usually consists of about half a dozen who feel that they are called upon to return some similar compliment. Each clan meets together on Sunday, they assemble at prayer meeting, and every day they have some fund or subsidiary organization to attract their attention. Naturally the clanishness is carried into all public affairs, and unity of aim, of purpose, and endeavor, which should exist in all communities for the public good is a rareity almost unknown. Occasionally a spasm of public spirit may be aroused for a brief period but ultimately the old clanish jealousies are bound to prevail, and the combination falls to pieces again. Any reduction of these religious clans will be a tendency towards the production of a healthy public spirit, a spirit that will make for greater communal advantage and material advancement.

Editorial Notes

The police of Ogdensburg, N. Y., are searching for two Chinamen who walked across the ice from Kingston, and are now at large in the United States. If all the Chinks of Peterborough would, or could, walk across the ice to Charlotte, the people of Peterboro would cheerfully subscribe towards skates or snowshoes to speed them on their way.

Every reporter in every small town or city is anxious to procure personals. The reporters of Kingston, however, have a steady source for such news, and still they do not seem to use it. Strangers are going almost daily to the Limestone City to take up residence for long periods, and, still their respective arrivals are not noted in the press of that city. The visitors referred to reside at the Penitentiary.

It is very evident that a certain section of the far Western press is not in love with Sir Wilfrid Laurier's action on the Manitoba Boundary Bill. The Winnipeg Telegram says: "The speech of Sir Wilfrid Laurier on the boundary bill will go down in Canadian history as the most unfair made by a Canadian statesman, and as betraying besides his undying hostility to this province. It is difficult to be seen how any man of his intellectual capacity could descend to any such despicable argument as he adopted."

Two boys in Kingston have been arrested for stealing coal. This was a most reprehensible act! Still, with the price of coal now-a-days, and [illegible] worth about $300 a karat, there might have been great temptation. The boys had manufactured a home-made sleigh to draw away the hundred pounds of coal they stole. Thus the act was premeditated. The article from which this information was gleaned did not say whether the boys were going to have the coal made into jewellery or just put it in the kitchen stove.

Apply Zam-Buk to all wounds and sores and you will be surprised how quickly it stops the smarting and brings ease. It covers the wound with a layer of protective balm, kills all poison germs already in the wound, and prevents others entering. Its rich healing essences then build up from the bottom, fresh tissue, and in a wonderfully short time the wound is healed!

MOSQUITOES THAT BARK

"When I was on the West Coast," said the old sailor, "the mosquitoes used to stand on the stones and bark."

[illegible] ON THE EAST

A famous impresario of Italian opera had arranged to open at Covent Garden about the middle of May; but, after having made his intention public, something caused him to alter his arrangements, and he announced the opening for the beginning of May.

The day his advertisement appeared he met the proprietor of a well-known "gaff" then situated in Whitechapel, who exclaimed:

"You have done a nice thing for me, making your season a fortnight earlier!"

"What difference can it make to you?" cried the West-ender. "Your audience won't patronize my theatre."

"No," replied the "gaffer"; "but they'll be outside it picking pockets!"

CONCERNING THE MOON

An Interesting Bit of Canadian Folklore by E. McCulloch

Eveline McCulloch, Ridgetown, Ontario, contributes the following bit of interesting folk-lore.

A new moon high in the north sky portends a [illegible] month.

A new moon low in the south sky portends a hot month.

A new moon straight up so that the hunter may not hang his powder horn on it denotes a dry moon, for he may safely hunt that month.

Vice versa, a moon lying flat, on whose corner the hunter may hang his powder horn is a wet moon, and rain can be counted upon.

A red moon denotes heat and drouth.

A yellow moon, storms, especially wind.

A clear, white moon, clear weather.

When the moon changes from one quarter to another, a change of weather is looked for.

A large circle around the moon denotes a storm as many days off as there are visible stars inside the circle.

A far-off circle denotes a near-by storm.

If you catch the first glimpse of a new moon over your right shoulder and wish without looking away you will have good fortune all that moon and obtain your wish; also, vice versa, seeing the moon over your left shoulder is not good luck.

All signs fail in a drouth.

A harvest moon stays full two nights.

A hunter's moon follows the harvest moon.

The moon shining on one's face sleeping causes insanity. This is carefully observed among old nurses.

Certain phases of the moon affect our moods and dispositions.

Insane people are perceptibly worse in certain phases of the moon.

Pork killed in the advance of the moon will not shrink in the frying, while that killed in the waning of the moon will shrink while cooking.

Potatoes should be planted in the full of the moon when stems are hol-

To cut or burn the ends of one's hair in new moon systematically for some months will insure a heavy, luxurious growth of hair.

The ancients reckoned time and events by the phases of the moon and the moons in succession.

The moon and the phase of the moon we are born under determine not only our characteristics, disposition, etc., but our capabilities and achievements. These are determined with the signs of the zodiac corresponding.

People born under certain moon conditions are susceptible to those conditions as they reoccur.

Many sailors and fishermen guide their expeditions by the moon.

LONG DISTANCE EXPERIMENT

A very successful experiment in long-distance telephoning was carried out the other day between Paris and Aberdeen. Communication between the two cities was established by way of London, Dover and Calais, says the Daily Chronicle Paris correspondent. The Paris International exchange called up the local office of the Daily Chronicle, and switched it on to Aberdeen. Despite the long distance—a matter of 1,000 miles or so—it was possible to hear quite distinctly and without any buzzing.

GLASS FROM SLAG

Slag obtained from various ironworks in England is being made into glass by a concern in Liverpool. Proportions of sand and sulphate of soda, and in some instances a little lime, are put into the blast furnace, converting the ordinary slag into a glass that is available for slates, paving-blocks, bricks, and tiles. It is said that slates can be manufactured at less than half the expense of Welsh slate. They have a polished appearance, and can be made in any size and shape, and in many colors.

STOP STREET CRIES

In fulfilment of a promise to a dying patient, Dr. C. Fenwick, of Thornton Heath, recently called the attention of the Croydon Council to the nuisance of street cries to persons ill in bed. In consequence a new by-law has been adopted imposing a penalty of $25 where any offender refuses to desist.

LIGHTS OF THE OCEAN

The number of lighthouses and lightships in the world, not including the inland bodies of water, such as the Great Lakes, is 15,224. Of this number, 12,171 are on the Atlantic, 2,288 on the Pacific, 677 on the Indian Ocean, and 88 in the Polar seas.

TRINIDAD'S BUTTER TRADE

France Has a Large Percentage of the Trade

Trinidad imported $165,000 worth of butter last year, of which trade Canada furnishes less than 2.5 per cent., while France furnishes over 60 per cent. of the total trade. This is explained by the fact that years ago a French butter manufacturer took the trouble to find out the class of butter most suited for general trade in the tropics, and, what was most essential, the best package to put it in. Some time ago an attempt to compete was made from Canada, but it failed, solely for want of compliance with the conditions experience had taught the French exporters. The firkins were made of inferior wood. They were insufficiently hooped, four iron hoops, against about fifteen, wood and iron, in the French package—and the butter melted and leaked. This is a trade that should go to the Dominion, and that it would do if any of our manufacturers make it worth while to fall in with local requirements. It should not be omitted, however, that one or two brands of tinned Canadian butter are in very favorable demand, and are appreciated as being pure and good.

PREFER BIG CLOTHES

The male portion of our United States visitors (says the Tailor and Cutter) might generally pass as native-born subjects of this country if it were not for their obtrusively easy-fitting garments. The United States is a big country, and many of her subjects seem to prefer looking a few sizes larger than Nature intended them to be. Their coats are usually cut about four inches larger than they ought to be, and then built up with wadding and haircloth until there is a semblance of outline agreeable to the American idea of bigness.

DOMINION OIL COMPANY

Authorized Capital - - $1,000,000

VICE-PRESIDENT—G[illegible] D. Forbes, Hespeler, Ont.
SECRETARY—Robt. C. Lind, Toronto, Ont.

Proven Oil Lands Consisting of 240 Acres, King's County, Coalinga, California, U. S. A.

The Company's property consists of 240 acres of patented and proven OIL-BEARING LAND, situated in King's County, California, east of the croppings.

In this particular location there are no dry holes. Many companies in Coalinga have the same capitalization or greater than that of the Dominion Oil Company, have control of only 20, 40 or 80 acres, and even these companies are making big money for their shareholders. Compared with them, the holdings of the Dominion Oil Company are immense, and when developed and producing oil, should be worth Millions of Dollars. The Company's well has been drilled to a depth of 2480 feet.

Thousands of clerks, struggling lawyers and business men have become rich through their interests in oil, and they are still putting their money in larger and more extensive oil investments. Many of our friends and clients ask about the chances of investments in California oil as compared with mining. There is really no comparison. 90 per cent. of the legitimate oil companies operating anywhere near the proven fields have been successful beyond the dreams of the most sanguine. Oil stock values have doubled, quadrupled, and in many instances advanced from a few cents per share to as many dollars, and there is scarcely a legitimate oil proposition two years old that is not paying a large rate of interest on the par value of its shares. Investors generally in mining shares have realized very little on their investments, and we believe that it is safe to say that not more than one mining company in a hundred makes good. If you are interested in mining we believe you will agree with us that our estimate is not far out.

California stands at the head of the oil-producing territories of the world and her oil industry is a small empire in itself. The resources of the state have been but scratched, and the earth has yielded only a tithe of its great wealth. The market for oil is being constantly enlarged, and so long as heat and light are needed in the world's business, so long will California oil find a ready market at remunerative prices.

In conclusion, we particularly wish to draw your attention to the calibre of the Directors of the Dominion Oil Company. They are well known, wealthy, Canadian business men, men of sterling integrity and highest business principles, men who may be trusted to the very limit in any and all business transactions. One has the assurance, therefore, that the affairs of the company will be handled to the very best possible advantage. A purchase of shares in the Dominion Oil Company is sure to turn out profitable to you.

There are now being offered for public subscription 100,000 shares of the Treasury Stock at 50c per share, which will leave 400,000 shares still in the treasury. It will be the aim of the directors to maintain and keep as large a treasury balance as possible in both money and stock available to meet at all times any and all contingencies that may arise, and thus effectually safeguarding the interests of all shareholders.

This is your opportunity to make good in the great oil industry of California. We are fully acquainted with the situation and feel that we can advise you to purchase at least 100 shares of this stock and as much more as you can afford. Write us at once for Illustrated Prospectus, which will give you full particulars of this sterling investment.

HEATING THE HOUSE

The Importance of Having Humidity in the Air

As far back as you can remember the use of the heating stove in your father's or grandfather's house, you will be able to recall the fact that a pan or kettle of water was always steaming on the stove. It kept the air in the room moistened or humidized and in effect made the warmth at once satisfying and agreeable.

Then the day of the warm air furnace came, and since then, with the exception of a few instances in which people have appreciated the value of humidity and have kept their furnace water pans supplied with hot water, we have been content with a hot, dry, enervating heat, which is destructive to both comfort and health.

Dry air will absorb moisture from every possible source, and when, by furnace heating, the humidity is almost entirely eliminated, the furniture and other wood fittings, the house plants, and even your own body, are levied upon to supply the deficiency, and, as a result, the furniture warps, the plants wither and die, and you lay yourself open to contract one of those severe colds, or worse, which you wonder how and where you caught. The average furnace water-pan is rather on the small side to supply the necessary moisture, but a new form of pan in the shape of a complete circle has been recently introduced with much success and promises to again give us the health-giving and agreeable humidized heat which our parents appreciated and enjoyed.

BOY MUSICIANS BEFORE KINGS

Children Who Earn More Than Cabinet Ministers—A Genius of Five Years

This can certainly be termed the age of baby prodigies, for the number of boys and girls of tender years who perform on the stage at the present time runs well over a score. A few Sarasates and Paderewski's in sashes and pinafores gain Royal recognition almost before the public has heard of them, and during the last week or two the inhabitants of a street in Maida Vale have been surprised, if not exactly pleased, by brilliant five-o'clock-in-the-morning performances on a grand piano of rhapsodies by Liszt and Chopin waltzes.

At first it was imagined that an old professor had taken up his abode in the neighborhood, but it has just come to light that the pianist is Master Erwin Nyiregyhazi, of Budapest, who is only five years of age. Erwin has apparently been practising for a Royal performance, for soon he will play before King George and Queen Mary.

Although the boy will not become a public artiste before he reaches the age of fifteen, it is understood that he will give a series of drawing-room concerts. He appeared at the Duchess of Rutland's house in Arlington Street, Piccadilly, and gave a wonderful exhibition of technique and memory. He played with perfect fluency works by Bach, Handel, Chopin, Rachmaninoff, Mozart, Greig, and Liszt.

After the unveiling of Queen Victoria's Memorial the German Emperor and Empress drove to St. Dunstan's, Regent Park, where they were present at a garden-party given by Lord and Lady Londesborough. The Kaiser took a great deal of interest in David Paget, the "boy fiddler," who played a couple of selections, appearing before the Royal party in the clothes which he wore during the latter days of his street peregrinations, for some time ago he was found playing to a theatre queue in a London thoroughfare. Paget, who is ten years old, was awarded first prize in a recent competition held for street-players. He performed the Intermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusticana" before the German monarch with remarkable skill.

His Majesty of Potsdam quite recently instructed Hans von Garnier, a boy musician, to write him an opera. It was six years ago when the Kaiser first became interested in the boy, who is now sixteen years of age. Garnier had composed a Grenadier March, which his Majesty thought so well of that he ordered its inclusion in the list of the so-called German Army marches for infantry and cavalry. A little while ago Garnier composed a Review March, to be played during the "Present," when the Emperor passes down the front of his troops, and this was played, by Royal orders, at a banquet of the Territorial battalions.

Moritz Lutzen, who commenced to play the piano when three years of age, has acquired considerable distinction as a composer of music. He has conducted an orchestra of 150 players in some of his own compositions before the German Emperor, and conducted the Garde Républicaine, the famous Parisian band, in a concert consisting exclusively of his own pieces. He also won prominence in this country by giving a concert of his compositions to his own conducting with Mr. Dan Godfrey's band at Bournemouth, on the outskirts of which city, by the way, he was born.

Mischa Elman, is another wonderful boy musician. He was thought good enough to play a concerto at the Birmingham Triennial Festival in 1906. Young Mischa was a pupil of Professor Auer, of St. Petersburg, who described him as the future Joseph Joachim.—Tit-Bits.

AND STILL SOME VACANCIES

George W. Perkins Recalls a Humorous Western Advertisement

George W. Perkins, who has withdrawn from the banking house of J. P. Morgan & Co. to devote himself to the great public questions of the day, said at a recent dinner in New York:

"Ours is a country of phenomenal prosperity. There is no such prosperity anywhere else on earth. Here we have work for all."

Mr. Perkins smiled.

"In fact," he said, "we have such a scarcity of labor here that the Western farmer was hardly joking when he inserted in the newspapers this 'want ad.':

"'Wanted—Harvest hands. Hired girl blonde and pleasant. Phonograph music during meals. Pie three times a day. Six lumps of sugar to each cup of coffee. Hammocks, leather divans, cosy corners, feather-beds. Rising-hour, 10 a.m. Organ concert every evening. Free chewing and smoking. Come one, come all.'"

OPPOSED TO POLYGAMY

In connection with the application of a Mohammedan woman, Sir J. Wessels at Johannesburg recently decided that no person could bring into the Transvaal more than one wife. A protest has now been made by the Indian community to the Minister of the Interior, in which it is pointed out that polygamy is a recognized institution in India.

Prefers Indian Dress

A growing number of Indians are adopting European dress. For our own part we think this is very much to be regretted in itself. We wish Indians would retain their own easy and dignified dress, and spare their money for something more worth having than cheap and ugly imitations of European clothes.—Madras Weekly Mail.

NO DOUBT ABOUT IT

Miss Blinkington was not, strictly, beautiful. Indeed, she had rather that cast of face which suggests descent from a gargoyle, and the idea of kissing that face made the strongest men shudder.

"When I marry, it will be a strong, brave hero!" she said to young Franks, with what was meant to be an amiable smile.

But Franks wasn't going to be caught that way.

"I'm sure it will!" he breathed fervently.

And somehow she didn't like it.

The City Of Opportunity

Capitol Hill

One of Calgary's close in residential sub-divisions. City water is now in the adjoining divisions and sewer system is to be installed this spring. We expect these improvements in Capitol Hill this summer. Street car service is at present within two or three blocks of Capitol Hill. The City of Calgary has purchased Block 68, Capitol Hill, on which to build a large public school. A number of nice homes have already been built in Capitol Hill, and many more are in course of construction.

Lots in this sub-division are selling in pairs at $250 to $350 per lot. We offer you one block of forty lots, close to Block 68 at $210 per lot, on terms of Third Cash and Balance four, eight and twelve months, with interest at 8 per cent. on deferred payments. This block will readily sell for $300 per lot, or more, within the next six months. The block is high and level, and every lot is perfect. This is a gilt-edged investment. If you cannot handle it alone have some friend join you.

A BABY SUPERSTITION

In the annual report of the Medical Officer of Health for Stepney it is stated that there is a curious objection on the part of some women to weigh their babies. It is often their firm belief that if a baby is weighed it will die before it is a year old.

A VETERAN COMPOSITOR

One of the oldest compositors in Scotland, Mr. John White, has retired from the service of The Glasgow Herald. Mr. White, though in his eightieth year, is a man of remarkable vigor. He was 61 years at the "case."

A Millinery Contrivance

A French milliner has hit on the idea of fitting the headgear of her clients with little, round spy-glasses. The spy-glass is placed inside the brim of the hat, and is a tiny reflector which forms the heart of a giant rose, and more often it nestles in a choux of ribbon. It is visible, of course, only to its wearer, who by its aid can see exactly what kind of impression she has succeeded in creating upon those behind her.

THE CLIMBING ROSE

Points to be Observed in the Cultivation of This Flower

There are climbing roses that will bloom continuously from June until the end of October. But it is just the past score years that have witnessed this remarkable development of climbing roses. Before that, the varieties most common were not at all hardy, their flowers were not nearly so large nor so beautiful as those of to-day. But twenty years ago someone introduced the memorial rose, and about the same time the crimson rambler, a hardy, showy, climbing rose, with flowers in clusters, came over from China and aroused great interest among horticulturists. The question arose whether it could not be combined with the memorial, for the crimson rambler, though strong and bearing beautiful flowers, had nevertheless many defects which were absent in the memorial. The grafting was done and successfully. New hybrids were produced, which combined hardiness, abundance of bloom, rapid growth and grace of form, with great resistance to disease and insects. It was the beginning of a new era in climbing roses. The new roses spread everywhere, and rose-growers were enthusiastic over the results of the experiment. Other combinations were attempted with success, and we have the results to-day in the multiplicity of lovely climbing rose vines that make beautiful so many gardens.

There are three groups of the climbing roses: the multiflora, which bloom early in June only; the prairie roses, heavy in flower and with gray-green foliage, and, most important of all, the memorial group, which flowers all summer and often until the frost has come. Nearly everyone knows one variety of the memorial group, the Dorothy Perkins. It is much like the crimson rambler, save that its flowers are pink; its foliage is thick and glossy, and it is altogether a very desirable variety to cultivate.

In growing climbing roses the secret of success is simply good soil. The earth can hardly be too rich nor the trench too deep. If strong plants are bought at the outset, and they are planted in good soil and well watered, success is almost absolutely certain. The only harm possible might come from insects, but these may be guarded against by judicious spraying.

ONE TO THE PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Asquith, the Prime Minister, is in these days regarded as such a particularly solemn gentleman that the following anecdote is interesting.

Long years ago he attended a small preparatory school for boys, the principal of which was a learned clergyman, and a strict grammarian.

One night, after ten o'clock, when all the boys should have been in bed, he was passing silently along the corridor when he heard sounds of revelry from a dark dormitory.

He rapped on the door. Silence within. Then:

"Who's there?" called out the future Premier.

"It's me—the principal. Open the door!"

"Ha, ha, ha!" answered young Asquith. "If it were the principal he would say, 'It is I.'"

Seeing the force of this argument the schoolmaster passed on.

SAMUEL H. THOMSON,

QUITE IMPOSSIBLE

"You claim to be a great clairvoyant," said the sad-faced man, as he entered the thought-reader's rooms. "They say you can tell the past, present and future. Nothing is hidden from you."

"That is true," answered the medium. "For two dollars I will tell you—"

"I'll give you ten dollars if you can tell me one thing of the past," interrupted the sad-faced one quickly, and put the money promptly on the counter. "What was it that my wife told me to bring home for supper to-night?"

And the thought-reader shook her head sadly and handed back the money, but not very cheerfully, as the advertisement promised.

In a Gilmour street home a few nights ago, the seven-year-old hope of the family was reciting how "The cow jumped over the moon." The father, who had just paid a butcher's bill, interjected, "Johnny, please get some other rhyme, I don't like to hear of how high beef and dairy products can go!"

SALT FOR MANGOLDS

Best Results Obtained From Use of 10 Per Cent. Per Acre

That application of salt in addition to other fertilizers is useful for the mangold crop is generally acknowledged, but what is the most suitable quantity to apply is a question upon which there is considerable difference of opinion.

To obtain definite information on this point, the Harper-Adams Agricultural College has been conducting experiments for three years with quantities per acre of 2½ cwt., 5 cwt., 10 cwt. and 15 cwt. respectively.

The salt was applied in the middle of April and thoroughly worked into the soil by cultivating, harrowing and rolling three times before rowing up, the ridges being again split before sowing.

Special care has to be taken to ensure the salt being completely mixed with the soil, otherwise the seed is liable to be damaged.

The dressings were made across all the manurial and variety trial plots, and the weights are the average of the different plots. The result was the following:—The application of—

2½ cwt. produced an average increase, about 4 tons roots;

5 cwt. produced an average increase, about 5½ tons roots;

10 cwt. produced an average increase, about 6½ tons roots;

15 cwt. produced an average increase, about 4 tons roots.

The heavy application of 15 cwt. was [illegible] the first time last year, just [illegible] what the effect would be.

[illegible] seems to demonstrate [illegible] quantity of salt that [illegible] the best result is 10 [illegible] per [illegible]

HORSES IN WINTER

Can be Kept on Straw as Well as on Hay

Professor J. H. Shepperd, of the North Dakota Agricultural College, answering a question recently about wintering horses on straw, says:

The North Dakota station did a considerable amount of work in horse feeding a number of years ago and made extensive trials with oat straw, compared with hay, for roughage. In the trial it was found that some horses did about as well on it as they did on hay. While others were very much harder to carry, chiefly because their appetites for roughage were too light to cause them to eat enough of it. Aside from those dainty animals there was little trouble in keeping them up on oat straw as roughage.

The oat straw used was that of a [illegible] which was coarser and [illegible] than that which had been [illegible] this year. The trial consisted of a period of sixty days' feeding with oats as the grain ration against a similar period with oats and hay, and sixty days' feeding with a mixture of half and half bran and shorts by weight with hay compared with sixty days' feeding bran and shorts with oat straw.

During the first thirty days winter conditions were present and the horses were used only about enough for good exercise. During the second thirty days they were worked at harrowing, discing and seeding and had nearly all of that work the last half of the month. The horses receiving oats and hay as a ration required nine and one-third pounds of oats with hay to carry them, while those on oats and straw consumed eleven and one-half pounds of oats per day. During the thirty days that they had light work, the horses on hay gained 176 pounds and the three on straw 169 pounds. During the thirty days when they had heavy work one-half of the time, those on hay lost 340 pounds and those on straw 345 pounds.

The similar lots of horses fed on bran and shorts, half and half by weight, gained during the winter conditions, 88 pounds when fed hay, and 53 pounds when fed straw. When they were on the straw ration with heavy work for one-half of the month they lost 225 pounds, and on the hay ration 235 pounds.

These results indicate that horses can be carried almost as successfully on straw as roughage as they can on hay, provided enough aditional grain is given them to supply them with sufficient nourishment. The additional grain required is about one-fifth. If the feeder has facilities for chaffing the straw and will moisten it and mix the grain fed with it during the season when the animals are required to do very little work, a smaller amount of grain will carry them.

SUCKERS ON CORN

In the past suckers on corn were regarded as very undesirable, and oftentimes the small boy had to go through the cornfield and pull them off. Recent experiments show that suckering of the corn plant is merely a response to its surroundings. When the stand is thin there will always be plenty of suckers. The corn plants simply try to remedy the thin stand by suckering.

In an experiment several years ago where there were four plants in a hill eight suckers developed to each one hundred plants; where there were three in a hill, twenty-five suckers developed; where there were two in a hill seventy-six suckers, and where there was only one plant in the hill, 198 suckers developed to each one hundred plants. It was noticed that a large number of the suckers produced ears.

Another cause for suckering is the richness of the land. Rich, new land has been found to produce nearly twice the number of suckers as old, worn-out land. To some extent the tendency to suckers is no doubt inherited, but the main causes of suckering are the thinness of the ground and the weather conditions.

Experiments conducted for two years indicated that it paid to leave the suckers on. The average yield for two years of corn with the suckers left on was eighty-one bushels, while for corn with suckers pulled off it was sixty-four bushels.

MONEY AFFAIRS OF YOUR CHILD

The Advisability of Giving Them a Definite Allowance and Cultivating Thrift

One day last summer a mother took her children to a popular picnic park. After the fashion of children, they came to her at frequent intervals throughout the day with requests for money for pony rides, merry-go-round trips, ice-cream, and all the things that children think essential to their pleasure on such occasions. When the mother counted up at night, she was astonished to find how much money had been spent.

"I think," she said to her husband, "that our present method with the children will make spendthrifts of them. They have no idea of the value of money."

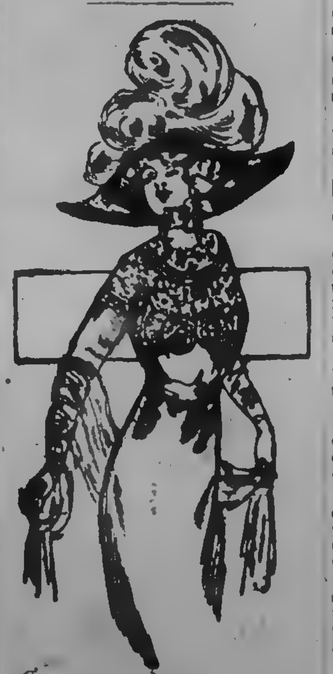
[illegible] they were going to the park the mother gave to each child a [illegible] in his own pocketbook. [illegible] that this money was [illegible] and when it was spent [illegible] have more. They considered the spending of money carefully, consulting with their mother. [illegible] different things, and decided which they would rather have, and, when the money was gone, [illegible] teasing or whining.

The mother decided, too, that each child should have a weekly allowance, instead of coming to her with their wants. The children were five and six years old, and they were given five cents a week each. The first week the money was all spent the first afternoon. They bought some marbles, and the rest went for candy. On Sunday they were sadly distressed because they had no coppers for Sunday school. Mother did not supply any, and they never forgot again. In a very short time they wanted things that cost more than five cents, and so they learned to deny themselves and save for a definite object. After that, at mother's suggestion, they put a nickel in the bank each week—that bank that was to take them through college by and by. Of course they made many mistakes, but the parents argued that it was better to make the mistakes with the coppers than with the dollars after awhile. When the other children first learned that they had money, they used to coax them into foolish expenditures, but after a few disappointments in getting things that they had planned, they learned to resist this temptation.

By the suggestion that can always be given in stories, the mother gradually trained them to buy less candy and satisfy their appetites with some harmless indulgence. When the children were a year older, their allowance was increased.

In one of the recent magazines, a writer argued against giving children an allowance, saying that it gave them the feeling that the world owed them a living. In my experience I would draw an inference exactly opposite. The child who is accustomed to receive whatever sum he asks for from his parents would be very likely to get this irresponsible feeling, but one who has a definite sum to depend upon, and knows that he must use it wisely, develops a sense of thrift. The child in a well-conducted home always has some little duties, and, while he should regard them as a labor of love and not feel that he is specifically paid for them, yet they make him, to the extent of his ability, a part of the working household, and thus give him a share of its earnings.

One mother wisely phrased it, "This is your salary, because you are our dear little boy." —Zella Margaret Walters.



A HANDSOME BLOUSE

The semi-made kimona blouse is a boon to the woman who desires handsome effects but cannot afford the finished garments. All-over lace is one of the favorite materials for the separate blouse, as well as chiffon, and an unusually dainty design which brings out the beauty of the lace is shown in the sketch. The bolero effect is very smart and the arrangement of the band trimmings new and effective.

AN ORANGE PLANT

A lovely plant, suitable for window portable decoration, can be raised from the pips of a sweet orange. The pips should be taken out when the orange is very ripe, and sown in an ordinary flower-pot, filled with light soil. In a few weeks shoots will appear above the surface and develop into a fine hardy plant, which will remain green both summer and winter.

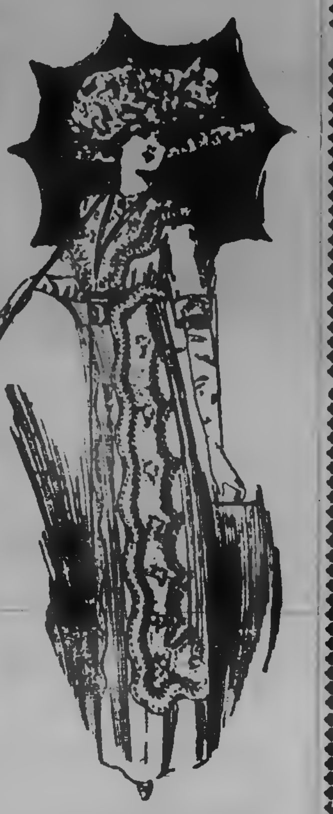
THE QUEEN AND DRESS

Her Majesty Dislikes the Collarless Blouse and Elbow Sleeve

It is a well-known fact that Queen Mary, although always beautifully dressed, is extremely strict on the subject of what she considers the correct garments to be worn by the ladies of her court. The latest freaks of Dame Fashion—viz., the collarless blouse and elbow sleeve, have incurred her displeasure to a great extent, and she has intimated that she would prefer her ladies to discard them.



STUNNING LINEN GOWN

Plain and embroidered linens are put together in the manner shown in above sketch, which introduces the short waist line and surplice collar on bodice. The latter when becoming is most effective, but one must be sure of one's figure to wear it satisfactorily. The tunic arrangement of embroidered linen is new and opens over the plain linen in panel effect.

The hat worn with this frock is all-over embroidery, trimmed with rose leaves.

CLEANING HINTS

Removing Grease Marks From a Wall—How to Make Boards White

To Clean Finger Marks from a painted wall damp a clean cloth and dip it in whiting, apply, and the stains will disappear.

Grease on a Wall can generally be eradicated by covering with clean blotting paper, and then passing a warm iron over it.

To Clean Enamelled Dishes when burned, dip a flannel cloth in fine ashes and rub with it, when all the stains will, without any further trouble, disappear.

Remove Ink Spots from furniture with a solution of nitre, white spots with spirits of camphor or hot milk and turpentine, and stains on mahogany with a cork dipped in oxalic acid diluted with water.

Before Washing new lace curtains, calico, or anything containing lime, soak overnight in water to which a penny packet of salt has been added. This takes out all the lime, and consequently saves much work, annoyance, and soap.

In Order to Make boards white they should not be washed with soap and water. Instead of soap use one part of newly-slaked lime and three parts of common white sand, and the boards will become beautifully white and clean.

When White Patches occur on the dining-table, caused by hot plates and dishes being placed on it, touch them up with a brush that has been dipped in spirits of nitre, and directly afterwards rub with a cloth moistened with sweet oil.

If your Cellar is Damp, break up a lump of lime in a box, and place it on the floor, when all dampness and smell will quickly disappear. The same method can be followed with damp cupboards, but the lime must be changed from time to time, or it will cause dry rot in the woodwork.

The Wire Foundation of the modern bedstead soon ruins a hair or wool mattress unless some steps are taken to prevent the mischief. Either the wire portion must be covered over with coarse canvas or holland, or with sheets of strong brown paper. In the former case the material must be attached to the wire by tapes; in the latter, fasten with safety-pins.

An Easily-Made and effective cement for broken china is made by mixing a thick solution of gum arabic to a paste with plaster of Paris. Dissolve a pennyworth of gum arabic in a little boiling water; when cold mix with sufficient plaster of Paris, and apply to edges of article immediately. Press firmly together, and a strong joint will result.

Where Carpets are dispensed with in favor of rugs, a floor may be enamelled either in ebony or a nice rich brown shade. This makes a pleasing change to the ordinary staining and varnishing, and, moreover, an enamelled floor is easily washed and kept bright and new. Before painting the boards see that they are as clean and smooth as possible. Coarse emery paper will help to remove rough places, and if paraffin is used in the water, the washing of the floor will be an easy job, for there is nothing like paraffin for getting out the dirt quickly.

The farmers from the surrounding townships, were well represented in the city on Saturday. Every hotel yard was crowded with sleighs and every farmer's pocket with money, paid for chickens, butter, eggs, etc.

Get in line. Be a booster. Help send the good news abroad. Think on these things. Act on them. Boost Peterborough by telling the world its advantage and why people ought to come here to live.

A Millinery Contrivance

A French milliner has hit on the idea of fitting the headgear of her clients with little, round spy-glasses. The spy-glass is placed inside the brim of the hat, and is a tiny reflector which forms the heart of a giant rose, and more often it nestles in a choux of ribbon. It is visible, of course, only to its wearer, who by its aid can see exactly what kind of impression she has succeeded in creating upon those behind her.

THE CLIMBING ROSE

Points to be Observed in the Cultivation of This Flower

There are climbing roses that will bloom continuously from June until the end of October. But it is just the past score years that have witnessed this remarkable development of climbing roses. Before that, the varieties most common were not at all hardy, their flowers were not nearly so large nor so beautiful as those of to-day. But twenty years ago someone introduced the memorial rose, and about the same time the crimson rambler, a hardy, glossy, climbing rose, with flowers in clusters, came over from China and aroused great interest among horticulturists. The question arose whether it could not be combined with the memorial, for the crimson rambler, though strong and bearing beautiful flowers, had nevertheless many defects which were absent in the memorial. The grafting was done and successfully. New hybrids were produced, which combined hardiness, abundance of bloom, rapid growth and grace of form, with great resistance to disease and insects. It was the beginning of a new era in climbing roses. The new roses spread everywhere, and rose-growers were enthusiastic over the results of the experiment. Other combinations were attempted with success, and we have the results to-day in the multiplicity of lovely climbing rose vines that make beautiful so many gardens.

There are three groups of the climbing roses: the multiflora, which bloom early in June only; the prairie roses, heavy in flower and with grey green foliage, and, most important of all, the memorial group, which flowers all summer and often until the frost has come. Nearly everyone knows one variety of the memorial group, the Dorothy Perkins. It is much like the crimson rambler, save that its flowers are pink; its foliage is thick and glossy, and it is altogether a very desirable variety to cultivate.

In growing climbing roses the secret of success is simply good soil. The earth can hardly be too rich nor the trench too deep. If strong plants are bought at the outset, and they are planted in good soil and well watered, success is almost absolutely certain. The only harm possible might come from insects, but these may be guarded against by judicious spraying.

ONE TO THE PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Asquith, the Prime Minister, is in these days regarded as such a particularly solemn gentleman that the following anecdote is interesting.

Long years ago he attended a small preparatory school for boys, the principal of which was a learned clergyman, and a strict grammarian.

One night, after ten o'clock, when all the boys should have been in bed, he was passing silently along the corridor when he heard sounds of revelry from a darkened dormitory.

He rapped on the door. Silence within. Then:

"Who's there?" called out the future Premier.

"It's me—the principal. Open the door!"

"Ha, ha, ha-a!" answered young Asquith. "If it were the principal he would say, 'It is I.'"

Seeing the force of this argument the schoolmaster passed on.

BOY-MUSICIANS BEFORE KINGS

Children Who Earn More Than Cabinet Ministers—A Genius of Five Years

This can certainly be termed the age of baby prodigies, for the number of boys and girls of tender years who perform on the stage at the present time runs well over a score. A few Sarasates and Paderewski's in sashes and pinafores gain Royal recognition almost before the public has heard of them, and during the last week or two the inhabitants of a street in Maida Vale have been surprised, if not exactly pleased, by brilliant five-o'clock-in-the-morning performances on a grand piano of rhapsodies by Liszt and Chopin waltzes.

At first it was imagined that an old professor had taken up his abode in the neighborhood, but it has just come to light that the pianist is Master Erwin Nyiregyhazi, of Budapest, who is only five years of age. Erwin has apparently been practising for a Royal performance, for soon he will play before King George and Queen Mary.

Although the boy will not become a public artiste before he reaches the age of fifteen, it is understood that he will give a series of drawing-room concerts. He appeared at the Duchess of Rutland's house in Arlington Street, Piccadilly, and gave a wonderful exhibition of technique and memory. He played with perfect fluency works by Bach, Handel, Chopin, Rachmaninoff, Mozart, Greig, and Liszt.

After the unveiling of Queen Victoria's Memorial the German Emperor and Empress drove to St. Dunstan's, Regent Park, where they were present at a garden-party given by Lord and Lady Londesborough. The Kaiser took a great deal of interest in David Paget, the "boy fiddler," who played a couple of selections, appearing before the Royal party in the clothes which he wore during the latter days of his street peregrinations, for some time ago he was found playing to a theatre queue in a London thoroughfare. Paget, who is ten years old, was awarded first prize in a recent competition held for street-players. He performed the Intermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusticana" before the German monarch with remarkable skill.

His Majesty of Potsdam quite recently instructed Hans von Garnier, a boy musician, to write him an opera. It was six years ago when the Kaiser first became interested in the boy, who is now sixteen years of age. Garnier had composed a Grenadier March, which his Majesty thought so well of that he ordered its inclusion in the list of the so-called German Army marches for infantry and cavalry. A little while ago Garnier composed a Review March, to be played during the "Present," when the Emperor passes down the front of his troops, and this was played by Royal orders at a banquet of the Territorial battalions.

Moritz Lutzen, who commenced to play the piano when three years of age, has acquired considerable distinction as a composer of music. He has conducted an orchestra of 150 players in some of his own compositions before the German Emperor, and conducted the Garde Républicaine, the famous Parisian band, in a concert consisting exclusively of his own pieces. He also won prominence in this country by giving a concert of his compositions to his own conducting with Mr. Dan Godfrey's band at Bournemouth, on the outskirts of which city, by the way, he was born.

Mischa Elman, is another wonderful boy musician. He was thought good enough to play a concerto at the Birmingham Triennial Festival in 1906. Young Mischa was a pupil of Professor Auer, of St. Petersburg, who described him as the future Joseph Joachim.—Tit-Bits.

AND STILL SOME VACANCIES

George W. Perkins Recalls a Humorous Western Advertisement

George W. Perkins, who has withdrawn from the bankinug-house of J. P. Morgan & Co. to devote himself to the great public questions of the day, said at a recent dinner in New York:

"Ours is a country of phenomenal prosperity. There is no such prosperity anywhere else on earth. Here we have work for all."

Mr. Perkins smiled.

"In fact," he said, "we have such a scarcity of labor here that the Western farmer was hardly joking when he inserted in the newspapers this 'want ad.':

"'Wanted—Harvest hands. Hired girl blonde and pleasant. Phonograph music during meals. Pie three times a day. Six lumps of sugar to each cup of coffee. Hammocks, leather divans, cosy corners, feather-beds. Rising-hour, 10 a.m. Organ concert every evening. Free chewing and smoking. Come one, come all.'"

OPPOSED TO POLYGAMY

In connection with the application of a Mohammedan woman, Sir J. Wessels at Johannesburg recently decided that no person could bring into the Transvaal more than one wife. A protest has now been made by the Indian community to the Minister of the Interior, in which it is pointed out that polygamy is a recognized institution in India.

Prefers Indian Dress

A growing number of Indians are adopting European dress. For our own part we think this is very much to be regretted in itself. We wish Indians would retain their own easy and dignified dress, and spare their money for something more worth having than cheap and ugly imitations of European clothes.—Madras Weekly Mail.

NO DOUBT ABOUT IT

Miss Blinkington was not, strictly, beautiful. Indeed, she had rather that cast of face which suggests descent from a gargoyle, and the idea of kissing that face made the strongest men shudder.

"When I marry, it will be a strong, brave hero!" she said to young Franks, with what was meant to be an amiable smile.

But Franks wasn't going to be caught that way.

"I'm sure it will!" he breathed fervently.

And somehow she didn't like it.

CALGARY

The City Of Opportunity

Capitol Hill

One of Calgary's close in residential sub-divisions. City water is now in the adjoining divisions and sewer system is to be installed this spring. We expect these improvements in Capitol Hill this summer. Street car service is at present within two or three blocks of Capitol Hill. The City of Calgary has purchased Block 68, Capitol Hill, on which to build a large public school. A number of nice homes have already been built in Capitol Hill, and many more are in course of construction.

Lots in this sub-division are selling in pairs at $250 to $350 per lot. We offer you one block of forty lots, close to Block 68 at $210 per lot, on terms of Third Cash and Balance four, eight and twelve months, with interest at 8 per cent. on deferred payments. This block will readily sell for $300 per lot, or more, within the next six months. The block is high and level, and every lot is perfect. This is a gilt-edged investment. If you cannot handle it alone have some friend join you.

SALT FOR MANGOLDS

Best Results Obtained From Use of 10 Per Cent. Per Acre

That application of salt in addition to other fertilizers is useful for the mangold crop is generally acknowledged, but what is the most suitable quantity to apply is a question upon which there is considerable difference of opinion.

To obtain definite information on this point, the Harper-Adams Agricultural College has been conducting experiments for three years with quantities per acre of 2½ cwt., 5 cwt., 10 cwt. and 15 cwt. respectively.

The salt was applied in the middle of April and thoroughly worked into the soil by cultivating, harrowing and roling three times before rowing up, the ridges being again split before sowing.

Special care has to be taken to ensure the salt being completely mixed with the soil, otherwise the seed is liable to be damaged.

The dressings were made across all the manurial and variety trial plots, and the weights are the average of the different plots. The result was the following:—The application of—

2½ cwt. produced an average increase, about 4 tons roots;

5 cwt. produced an average increase, about 5½ tons roots;

10 cwt. produced an average increase, about 8½ tons roots;

15 cwt. produced an average increase, about 4 tons roots.

The big application of 15 cwt. was tried for the first time last year, just to see what the effect would be.

The [illegible] seems to demonstrate [illegible] quantity of salt that [illegible] the best result is 10 [illegible]

HORSES IN WINTER

Can be Kept on Straw as Well as on Hay

Professor J. H. Shepperd, of the North Dakota Agricultural College, answering a question recently about wintering horses on straw, says:

The North Dakota station did a considerable amount of work in horse feeding a number of years ago and made extensive trials with oat straw, as compared with hay, for roughage. In the trial it was found that some horses did about as well on it as they did on hay. While others were very much harder to carry, chiefly because their appetites for roughage were too light to cause them to eat enough of it. Aside from those dainty animals there was little trouble in keeping them up on oat straw as roughage.

The oat straw used was that of a normal season, which was coarser and more woody than that which had been raised this year. The trial consisted of a period of sixty days' feeding with oats as the grain ration against a similar period with oats and hay, and sixty days feeding with a mixture of half and half bran and shorts by weight with hay compared with sixty days' feeding bran and shorts with oat straw.

During the first thirty days winter conditions were present and the horses were used only about enough for good exercise. During the second thirty days they were worked at harrowing, discing and seeding and had nearly all of that work the last half of the month. The horses receiving oats and hay as a ration required nine and one-third pounds of oats with hay to carry them, while those on oats and straw consumed eleven and one-half pounds of oats per day. During the thirty days that they had light work, the horses on hay gained 176 pounds and the three on straw 169 pounds. During the thirty days when they had heavy work one-half of the time, those on hay lost 340 pounds and those on straw 345 pounds.

The similar lots of horses fed on bran and shorts, half and half by weight, gained during the winter conditions, 68 pounds when fed hay, and 83 pounds when fed straw. When they were on the straw ration with heavy work for one-half of the month they lost 225 pounds, and on the hay ration 235 pounds.

These results indicate that horses can be carried almost as successfully on straw as roughage as they can on hay, provided enough aditional grain is given them to supply them with sufficient nourishment. The additional grain required is about one-fifth. If the feeder has facilities for chaffing the straw and will moisten it and mix the grain fed with it during the season when the animals are required to do very little work, a smaller amount of grain will carry them.

SUCKERS ON CORN

In the past suckers on corn were regarded as very undesirable, and oftentimes the small boy had to go through the cornfield and pull them off. Recent experiments show that suckering of the corn plant is merely a response to its surroundings. When the stand is thin there will always be plenty of suckers. The corn plants simply try to remedy the thin stand by suckering.

In an experiment several years ago where there were four plants in a hill eight suckers developed to each one hundred plants; where there were three in a hill, twenty-five suckers developed; where there were two in a hill seventy-six suckers, and where there was only one plant in the hill, 198 suckers developed to each one hundred plants. It was noticed that a large number of the suckers produced ears.

Another cause for suckering is the richness of the land. Rich, new land has been found to produce nearly twice the number of suckers as old, worn-out land. To some extent the tendency to suckers is no doubt inherited, but the main causes of suckering are the thinness of the ground and the poorer conditions.

Experiments conducted for two years indicated that it paid to leave the suckers on. The average yield for two years of corn with the suckers left on was eighty-one bushels, while for corn with suckers pulled off it was sixty-four bushels.

Oh you Marmora ! Your hockey club can certainly go some !

March certainly came in "like a Lion". If April does not come in like a lamb, why an old saying is lion.

Owing to the non-arrival of oats the package department of the Quaker Oats will not resume operations till Wednesday.

Another proof that Spring is on the way ! Three boys were seen playing marbles on a Simcoe street pavement Saturday.

MONEY AFFAIRS OF YOUR CHILD

The Advisability of Giving Them a Definite Allowance and Cultivating Thrift

One day last summer a mother took her children to a popular picnic park. After the fashion of children, they came to her at frequent intervals throughout the day with requests for money for pony rides, merry-go-round trips, ice-cream, and all the things that children think essential to their pleasure on such occasions. When the mother counted up at night, she was astonished to find how much money had been spent.

"I think," she said to her husband, "that our present method with the children will make spendthrifts of them. They have no idea of the value of money."

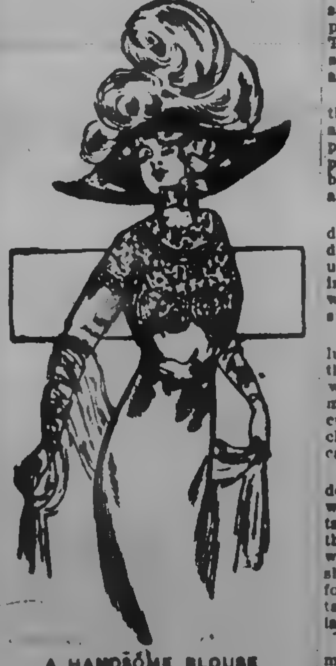
When [illegible] they were going to the park, the mother gave to each child a [illegible] money in his own pocketbook. [illegible] that this money was [illegible], and when it was spent [illegible] have more. They considered the spending of money carefully, consulting with their mother. They weighed different things, and decided which they would rather have, and, when the money was gone, [illegible] teasing or whining.

The mother decided, too, that each child should have a weekly allowance, instead of coming to her with their little wants. The children were five and six years old, and they were given five cents a week each. The first week the money was all spent the first afternoon. They bought some marbles, and the rest went for candy. On Sunday they were sadly distressed because they had no coppers for Sunday school. Mother did not supply any, and they never forgot again. In a very short time they wanted things that cost more than five cents, and so they learned to deny themselves and save for a definite object. After that, at mother's suggestion, they put a nickel in the bank each week—that bank that was to take them through college by and by. Of course they made many mistakes, but the parents argued that it was better to make the mistakes with the coppers than with the dollars after awhile. When the other children first learned that they had money, they used to coax them into foolish expenditures, but after a few disappointments in getting things that they had planned, they learned to resist this temptation.

By the suggestion that can always be given in stories, the mother gradually trained them to buy less candy and satisfy their appetites with some harmless indulgence. When the children were a year older, their allowance was increased.

In one of the recent magazines, a writer argued against giving children an allowance, saying that it gave them the feeling that the world owed them a living. In my experience I would draw an inference exactly opposite. The child who is accustomed to receive everything he asks for from his parents would be very likely to get this irresponsible feeling, but one who has a definite sum to depend upon and knows that he must use it wisely, develops a sense of thrift. The child in a well-conducted home always has some little duties, and, while he should regard them as a labor of love and not feel that he is specifically paid for them, yet they make him, to the extent of his ability, a part of the working household, and thus give him a share of its earnings.

One mother wisely phrased it, "This is your salary, because you are our dear little boy."—Zella Margaret Walters.



A HANDSOME BLOUSE

The semi-made kimona blouse is a boon to the woman who desires handsome effects but cannot afford the finished garments. All-over lace is one of the favorite materials for the separate blouse, as well as chiffon, and an unusually dainty design which brings out the beauty of the lace is shown in the sketch. The bolero effect is very smart and the arrangement of the band trimmings new and affective.

AN ORANGE PLANT

A lovely plant, suitable for window or table decoration, can be raised from the pips of a sweet orange. The pips should be taken out when the orange is very ripe, and sown in an ordinary flower-pot, filled with light soil. In a few weeks shoots will appear above the surface and develop into a fine hardy plant, which will remain green both summer and winter.

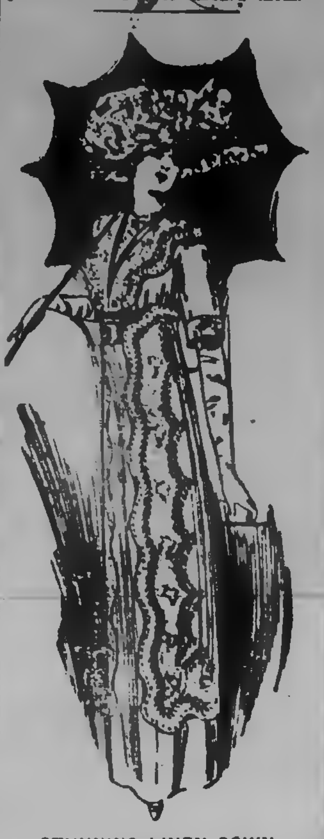
THE QUEEN AND DRESS

Her Majesty Dislikes the Collarless Blouse and Elbow Sleeve

It is a well-known fact that Queen Mary, although always beautifully dressed, is extremely strict on the subject of what she considers the correct garments to be worn by the ladies of her court. The latest freaks of Dame Fashion—viz., the collarless blouse and elbow sleeve, have incurred her displeasure to a great extent, and she has intimated that she would prefer her ladies to discard them.



STUNNING LINEN GOWN

Plain and embroidered linens are put together in the manner shown in above sketch, which introduces the short waist line and surplice collar on bodice. The latter when becoming is most effective, but one must be sure of one's figure to wear it satisfactorily. The tunic arrangement of embroidered linen is new and opens over the plain linen in panel effect.

The hat worn with this frock is allover embroidery, trimmed with rose leaves.

CLEANING HINTS

Removing Grease Marks From a Wall —How to Make Boards White

To Clean Finger Marks from a [illegible] dampen a clean cloth and dip it in whiting, apply, and the stains will disappear.

Grease on a Wall can generally be eradicated by covering with clean blotting paper, and then passing a warm iron over it.

To Clean Enamelled Dishes when burned, dip a flannel cloth in fine ashes and rub with it, when all the stains will, without any further trouble, disappear.

Remove Ink Spots from furniture with a solution of nitre, white spots with spirits of camphor or hot milk and turpentine, and stains on mahogany with a cork dipped in oxalic acid diluted with water.

Before Washing new lace curtains, calico, or anything containing lime, soak overnight in water to which a penny packet of salt has been added. This takes out all the lime, and consequently saves much work, annoyance, and soap.

In Order to Make boards white they should not be washed with soap and water. Instead of soap use one part of newly-slaked lime and three parts of common white sand, and the boards will become beautifully white and clean.

When White Patches occur on the dining-table caused by hot plates and dishes being placed on it, touch them up with a brush that has been dipped in spirits of nitre, and directly afterwards rub with a cloth moistened with sweet oil.

If your Cellar is Damp, break up a lump of lime in a box, and place it on the floor, when all dampness and smell will quickly disappear. The same method can be followed with damp cupboards, but the lime must be changed from time to time, or it will cause dry rot in the woodwork.

The Wire Foundation of the modern bedstead soon ruins a hair or wool mattress unless some steps are taken to prevent the mischief. Either the wire portion must be covered over with coarse canvas or holland, or with sheets of strong brown paper. In the former case the material must be attached to the wire by tapes; in the latter, fasten with safety-pins.

An Easily-Made and effective cement for broken china is made by mixing a thick solution of gum arabic to a paste with plaster of Paris. Dissolve a pennyworth of gum arabic in a little boiling water; when cold mix with sufficient plaster of Paris, and apply to edges of article immediately. Press firmly together, and a strong joint will result.

Where Carpets are dispensed with in favor of rugs, a floor may be enamelled either in ebony or a nice rich brown shade. This makes a pleasing change to the ordinary staining and varnishing, and, moreover, an enamelled floor is easily washed and kept bright and new. Before painting the boards see that they are as clean and smooth as possible. Coarse emery paper will help to remove rough places, and if paraffin is used in the water, the washing of the floor will be an easy job, for there is nothing like paraffin for getting out the dirt quickly.

The farmers from the surrounding townships, were well represented in the city on Saturday. Every hotel yard was crowded with sleighs and every farmer's pocket with money, paid for chickens, butter, eggs, etc.

Get in line. Be a booster. Help send the good news abroad. Think on these things. Act on them. Boost Peterborough by telling the world its advantage and why people ought to come here to live.

LIGHT THAT DOES NOT FAIL

A Volcanic Beacon In San Salvador Republic

The republic of San Salvador is the only government on earth that collects lighthouse fees on account of a volcano that it owns, and without the slightest cost of upkeep.

The volcanic beacon is about eight miles inland from the port of Acajutla, and its pillar of cloud by day and its fire sky by night are visible for many miles out to sea. It bursts forth every seven minutes and is just as accurate as any revolving light that warns mariners of danger in any part of the world.

This volcano has been keeping up this seven minutes' service of eruptions ever since anyone can remember. It is a favorite amusement of visitors to sit by the hour during the lazy afternoons, and, watch in hand, to time the eruptions till they tire of the occupation and fall asleep. No one has ever caught the volcano napping, however.

Every vessel that puts in at Acajutla has to pay its lighthouse fee. There is no other lighthouse than the volcano, but that is a sufficient excuse for the Government of Salvador to make a charge for its services. The explosions that accompany the eruptions sound like detonations of heavy charges of dynamite, but, fortunately, they are not sufficient to shake the ground perceptibly more than about a mile or two from the summit of the crater.

A FUNNY PROPOSITION

The Boston Transcript makes the very pertinent remark that man is a funny proposition, because, when he reads a medical book, he fancies he has every disease described; but when he reads the work of a moralist all the faults that are pointed out he sees, not in himself, but in his neighbor.

THE OLDEST FLAG

The flag of Denmark, a plain red banner bearing on it a white cross, is the oldest flag now in existence. For 300 years both Norway and Sweden were united with Denmark under this flag. In the year 1219 King Waldemar of Denmark, when leading his troops to battle against the Livonians, saw, or thought he saw, a bright light in the form of a cross in the sky. He held this appearance to be a promise of Divine aid, and pressed forward to victory. From this time he had the cross placed on the flag of his country, and called it the Dannebork—that is, strength of Denmark.

Cornelius O'Brien Will Recover.

Mr. Cornelius O'Brien, the Douro resident, who tried to end his life by cutting his throat, will recover, according to a report from St. Joseph's Hospital on Saturday. His condition was very much improved.

SORE SHOLDERS, YOUNG HORSES

[illegible] are Usually the Cause—Colts Should be Gradually Toughened to Work

The care of the shoulders of young horses is one of the most important factors to keep in mind during the first few weeks of the spring work.

A horse can not do satisfactory work with shoulders that pain him every time he takes a step. The horse may be looked upon as a machine that is expected to do so much work, and if some of the mechanism is out of order, then the amount of work is lessened. But, also the animal must be looked upon as a creature with feeling and ambition, taking pride in its work, that is a willing, obedient, and, therefore, valuable servant, and should be properly cared for.

The first thing of importance to consider in the draft horse is the collar. Most injured shoulders are the result of poorly-fitting collars, and the fault usually lies in a collar being too large. It is a good idea to have a harness-maker fit the collars to your horses. He may be able to remove padding, and in other ways make the collar over so that it will fit nicely. Heavy collar pads are to be avoided if possible. They are hot and cause the shoulder to sweat; this keeps the pad and shoulder wet, and the skin becomes soft and blisters easily.

Dirty collars are probably as responsible for sore shoulders as ill-fitting ones. In the spring the horse's hair is long and holds large quantities of dirt and scales from the skin. He is soft from lack of work and sweats profusely. This forms a gummy dirt that adheres to the collar and makes, when dry, a hard, tough surface. The ordinary farm hand feels that his duty is done if he scrapes the dirt from the collar with the back of his jack-knife. This method, however, is not an especially good one for the leather of the collar, and a smooth surface is not left. A damp sponge used in the evening as soon as the collar is taken off will, in one or two minutes, remove the dirt. This may be followed by an oiled rag. If this is done, the collar, in the morning should be soft and smooth.

Careless driving, jerking a horse out of the furrow and into it again, allowing him to work with his head around on one side, all tend to produce sore shoulders.

Of course, the first precaution to take is not to ask the colt to do a full day's work until he learns something about his job and ceases to fret. The shoulders will then gradually become toughened. It is a good idea to sponge the shoulders with cold water—just plain cold water. Alum water has been used to good advantage; also weak solutions of tannic acid. Alcohol tends to toughen the skin.

The injuries to the top of the neck very frequently terminate in fistulas, withers, etc. A blister near the point of the shoulder is likely to become a callous and form what is known as a "cold abscess." Ill-fitting collars and poor drivers are equally responsible for a condition known as "sweeny."

If an accident occurs and in spite of careful attention a horse's shoulder becomes injured, do not wait until a fistula has developed, or an abcess has formed, or the animal is "sweened," but seek the advice of a veterinary while there is still a chance to check the progress of the injury. This is not the proper place to teach the treatment of such conditions after the injury has been done; it takes years of school work to do that, but it is a good opportunity to impress upon the minds of horse owners that such unfortunate things may be entirely avoided.

LIME AND ITS USES

Helps Land to Digest Manure and Other Matter

Expressed simply and as a simile, the application of lime to land assists it to "digest" manure and other animal matter; it prevents the soil from becoming sour and callous; it causes it to yield up readily its full proportion of plant food; and it assists root action.

Although in these days of artificial manure lime is not so highly necessary as it was, an application will work wonders with most soils, particularly with those that have been neglected; and the small holder breaking up old pasturage for the purpose of close cultivation will find an application almost essential.

Generally speaking, it is better to give light dressings frequently rather than a heavy dressing occasionally; and, further, you should buy from a reputable source, or you may obtain mixed with the material a quantity not effectually treated in the kiln. For light soils a ton and a half of lime to the acre should be ample, but heavy soils need more liberal treatment.

SORT OF SOW TO BREED FROM

In considering the efficiency of brood sows, Henry Wallace gives the following advice: Go over those that have had pigs the present year and ask them the following questions: How many pigs did you have this year? Were they all good ones, or did you have two or three choice pigs and were the rest inferior? How did you take care of those pigs? Are you a good suckler? Are you good-natured? Are you a good mother, or are you one of the nervous, fidgety kind, always worrying and fretting for fear somebody will hurt you and your precious piglets? If the brood sow on being interrogated, cannot give satisfactory answers to these questions, it is not worth while to scold her or give her a moral lecture. Just turn her into the fattening pen; for there is where she belongs.

How many hens do you have in your flock that do not pay their board? That may be the reason you do not find poultry profitable. Eliminate the unprofitable hens.

A Bright Foresters' Paper.

The Canadian Forestry Journal of last issue has reached The Times. This issue, the organ of the S.O.F., is neatly gotten up and cleverly edited. It contains a good report of the 13th annual convention held in Ottawa, where Mr. G. Y. Chown, B.A., Registrar of Queen's University, Kingston, introduced the Premier, Right Hon. R. L. Borden, to the convention. As the Foresters are one of Peterborough's strongest fraternal societies, this issue of the Journal will be of general interest.

FLESH FLIES

Can Do No Damage If Given No Place to Lay Their Eggs

When the sheep's wool becomes filthy and the skin irritated, an ideal condition is made for the work of the maggot fly. And when the maggots get a start they create a more and more friendly harbor for their kind as they work and increase in numbers under the wool. A sheep infected with maggots is a most pitiful sight, helpless against the parasites eating out its flesh until the sheep dies, its flesh gnawed out in a most cruel manner. For the sake of humanity, if for no other reason, sheep should be saved from much suffering.

These flies can do no damage if not given a suitable place to lay their eggs. Sheep should be watched carefully, especially in warm damp weather, and dirty tag-locks or other filth clipped off and a little tar dabbed on if the skin is chafed. These maggots also get in their work under rams' horns. Indeed, a ram with heavy horns lying close to his head will hardly pass through a summer without infection unless the flies are kept away by putting some tar on the ram's head.

An infected sheep can be told by the fact that it refuses to eat, stands with its head down and most often by itself, and stamps its feet or jerks its head exactly as irritation by maggots would lead one to expect. The remedy is simple. Cut away the wool close. Clean out all maggots, using turpentine to wash them out. Smear the place thoroughly with tar. Then watch the sheep to see that the flies do not again start in the same place. Thoroughness in cleaning out the parasites is essential, for one left in will start the damage all over.

GOOD CHICKENS

Something to Keep them Busy—The Ideal Pen

Chickens that are penned up should have their houses cleaned out twice a week at least, and their runs dug up (to loosen the earth) once a week, which enables them to have a little exercise in the way of scratching. Their morning meal should consist of potato peelings and all scraps from the table, boiled down and thickened, after draining well, with barley meal, with a dash of pepper in, and when cooled down, given; their water vessels washed and filled. For mid-day meal, a good size cabbage, hung to allow them to get round it, and high enough for them to peck at, which keeps them busy for some considerable time, and, for a change, a swede hung is very good, too. For their last meal give barley, a little wheat, or durry, and occasionally, small Indian corn. A box kept in the run, with all fine ashes saved from the house on washing days, if sifted well, gives them a bath. A handful of peppercorns thrown in to them about once a month helps to keep them in good condition, and their houses should be limewashed occasionally.

CLEANING MEN'S CLOTHES

The Best Mixture for the Removal of Grease Spots

The cleaning of a dust-laden old coat reduces the average woman to despair, as it is hard work, and the easiest way to clean a coat or pair of pants is to pin them to the clothes-line and beat the dust out with a cane or limber switch. Then lay them out on a table and brush with a stiff brush. A coat, vest or pair of pants that is not much soiled will come out of a good gasoline bath looking like new. First brush and shake the garment until it seems perfectly free of dust, then remove the spots and put the garment in a wash-bowl or a large bucket and pour enough gasoline over the garment to saturate it thoroughly, then cover the bucket to keep the fluid from evaporating and leave it for two hours. The safest way to use the gasoline is in the open air. Clean the garments by pressing and squeezing between the hands, and hang over the line.

There is nothing better for removing grease spots from the cloth than a fluid composed of four parts of alcohol to one part of ammonia. When the garments are soiled enough to be washed, remove the buttons and baste the button-holes together; then put them in a strong pearline suds and let them remain for half an hour; then wash clean through this suds and put them through a lighter suds and rinse through clear water. There is nothing better than this suds for washing garments of any color, and it leaves the cloth soft and clean, and then it is much easier to wash a garment that is much soiled than to try to remove the spots from the fabric, and, after they are washed and pressed, the buttons can be sewed in place and the buttonholes washed over again if necessary.

When pants are beginning to get baggy at the knees, turn them wrong side out, lay one leg at a time on the ironing table, lay a wet cloth all over the knee portions and press until the cloth is dry, then turn right side out, fold in the centre and press from top to bottom over the damp cloth.

FISH PONDS ON THE FARM

That relief from the high prices of meats might be found in having fish ponds on farms, is the opinion expressed by an Omaha, Neb., paper. "Years ago," it says, "when times were not so good and when people were not enjoying the degree of prosperity that now seems to prevail throughout the land, there was great interest taken in stocking the small and larger streams with fish from the state and government fisheries. Thousands of farm fish ponds were built all over the country, in all states, and the commercial idea prevailed in the construction and stocking of these ponds." This was when the fish pond on the farm was viewed as an asset in the advertising and sale of the farm."

Lindsay Players in Raw Deal.

Lindsay Post has the following complaint: "The Olympia hockey team has returned from the tournament at Fenelon Falls and feel pretty sore. The manager of the Olympias was assured that the team would get fair treatment and would meet teams of their own rank. However, the boys were pitted against a Fenelon Falls team of seasoned players with a member of the Peterborough T.A.S. team on the lineup. The locals were pretty roughly used, and are bearing bruises and cuts.

STRAINING MILK

The Milk Strainer Does Not Purify the Fluid

Straining milk does not purify it. Milking should be done with such attention given to cleanliness that it would be unnecessary to use the strainer. The utensil is of value chiefly because it removes the visible indications of impurity from milk, not because it really has any purifying effects. Small particles of manure, hairs, pieces of dead cuticle from the cow's udder and body, and dirt from the milker's hands find their way into the milk pail during the first manipulations of the udder, these impurities are churned around in the pail by the force of the streams as the milk is drawn, and by the time the pail is full this filth is all but dissolved, and no strainer yet produced can remove anything but the coarser and more insoluble substances which settle to the bottom of the bucket.

The millions of bacteria carried into the receptacle by these impurities are untouched by the strainer and go on their way rejoicing to carry ill-health and disease, maybe, to all who drink the milk or use the butter made from it. We use the milk strainer because we do not like the looks of small particles of dirt and refuse in the bottoms of the milk can, or perhaps in the drinking cup. It does no harm to remove these, but gives us a sense of relief in thinking that the milk is clean because it looks clean. We seem to have discharged a moral obligation in using the strainer, forgetting that the real harm comes from the dissolved material, the filth that goes into solution and carries its nauseating effect concealed in the pure white fluid.

HOUSEHOLD SUGGESTIONS

A moderate oven is one in which a piece of white paper will become golden brown in 12 minutes.

A convenience and economy for the oil or gasoline stove is a three part cooker which can be used over one burner. The parts are separated so that three articles can be cooked at the same time.

Rinse out the dish cloths frequently and let them bleach on the grass in the sun to keep them sweet. There is nothing like the sun as a purifier. Use it lavishly and your health will be better and the house purer.

To relieve ear ache, irrigate the ear with warm water. Arrange the patient so that the water can run out of the ear into a receptacle or into cloths which will absorb it. Have the water of slightly more than tepid warmth and allow it to run slowly into the ear until relieved. Cover the ear afterwards with warm woollen cloths.

Little chicks require plenty of fresh water in their reach in hot weather. If this is neglected you will be disappointed in the growth and health of your chicks.

Port Hope Has Typhoid Scare.

Port Hope is having a scare from typhoid fever. There are at present twenty-seven cases in the town, but it is not possible yet to form an opinion as to their cause. At the request of a number of citizens, D. Amyot, Provincial Analyst, was sent from Toronto and conferred with the Board of Health.

A Hiawatha Indian on a Spree.

Hanlon Howard, an Indian from Hiawatha, pleaded guilty in the Police Court, to a charge of being intoxicated. He testified to having been served with whiskey at two local hotels. One of his clearest recollections of the spree was that one of the bartenders had Titian hued locks. Judgment was reserved until Thursday.

Citizen Did Not Like Cigars.

A local citizen talking yesterday with a Times reporter remarked "I see that the Inland Revenue Dept. took in $36,50[illegible] for duty on Canadian cigars during January, 1912. The Rev. gentleman informed us that the donations of Peterborough to the cause he represents, amounted to $31.25.

Of Interest to Local Poultry Men.

It is generally known that the Peterborough Poultry Association is a live institution and advancing poultry breeding in this city and county. It will interest the chicken fanciers to learn that last week Mr. P. A. Ferguson, of Lindsay, had his hen house, weighing four tons, removed from his late residence on Kent street to Bond and Albert streets, of that burg. That is some hen house.

Canada Gazette Settles a Bet.

A certain local citizen of sporting tendencies, who will always back his opinion, at the drop of the hat, yesterday paid over $60.00 to a well known travelling man. It seems that the local man had bet that sum against the election of Hon. Geo. P. Graham as member for South Renfrew. The bet was to be decided as soon as the election returns from that county were officially gazetted. The official Canada Gazette, containing Mr. Graham's election was received here yesterday and, as noted the money paid over.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Mr. Wm. Quinn, of East City, left for Vancouver yesterday.

Mrs. E. H. Bartlett, 216 London street, will not receive to-day.

Messrs. F. C. and E. V. Warne were in Toronto yesterday on business.

Dr. R. P. Boucher was last night reported as "about the same. Very little change in his condition."

Mrs. A. Macfarlane, 500 Homewood avenue, will receive this afternoon, and not again this season.

Mr. Herb. Campbell, who is confined to Nicholls Hospital, is recovering as rapidly as possible.

Miss Berta Scott, of Barrie, is visiting Miss Florence Scott, East City.

Mrs. R. F. Downey, 298 Boswell avenue, will not receive to-day nor again this season.

Lindsay Post: Mr. Wm. Rudkins, Peterborough, was in town last evening.

Mr. Miller, the newly appointed Indian Agent, appeared in court yesterday for the first time in his official capacity.

Mr. J. B. Windsor has resigned his position with Mr. J. W. Edwards, and will assume charge of the local agency for the Singer Company.

Mr. and Mrs. Percy Reid, accompanied by Mr. Reid's mother, left last week to spend a few months in California.

Mr. Stirton, of Otonabee, who is going to British Columbia, has disposed of his farm, realizing $9,000 on his transaction.

The Liberals of Lemberg, Sask., have chosen Mr. John McLaughlin of Cupar as Liberal M.P.P. for the Saltcoasts riding. Mr. McLaughlin was born in Victoria County.

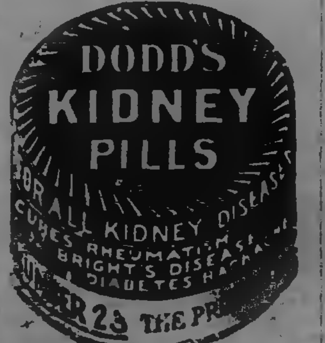
Mr. Jas. Low, of Lindsay, who has many friends in this city, has been offered and has accepted the position of manager and treasurer of the British Columbia Permanent Loan Co., Vancouver. He leaves at the first of the month.



Firemen Had Hard Day.

The fire laddies certainly earned their money yesterday. Three calls to fires in the morning, and then clean up for the greater part of the day. In the Gilbert and Sullivan Opera, Pirates of Penzance, it is said that "the policeman's lot is not a happy one." The average fireman, who risks life and limb at a fire, in pursuance of his duty, and whilst saving property and, often human life, has many long hours later in cleaning up the engines and appliances.

LITTLE LOCAL LINES

"All quiet along the Otonabee," was the report received by the g.l.j last night from police headquarters.

The Bugle Band met for rehearsal at the Opera House yesterday evening.

A "Shamrock Social" will be held in the George street church, under the auspices of the ladies' Aid Society, on the evening of March 15.

A meeting of the Women's Missionary Society of George street church will be held at the home of Mrs. Jas. Kendry, 754 Water street, to-day at 3.30.

Last night was one of those evenings that cause the average local reporters to tear their hair and use language. There was not enough doing in the way of news to, as a local merchant often says, "to make a jacket for a gooseberry."

Health and Beauty Hints

BY MRS. MAE MARTYN.

H.N.R.: To whiten and beautify the complexion you will find nothing better than a simple, inexpensive lotion made by dissolving 4 ounces of spurmax in a half-pint witch hazel (or hot water) then adding two teaspoonfuls of glycerine. This lotion will freshen up and improve any complexion without giving that artificial powdered look. It does not clog the skin pores like powder and lasts much better. It gives to the skin a smooth, velvety tone and takes away that shiny, sallow look. For treating freckles and skin discolorations generally, spurmax lotion is very fine.

D.L.: To quickly get rid of that sallow, pimply look on your face, you should take a good system tonic to remove the impurities from your blood which come from lack of exercise and eating too much solid food in the winter. A good old-fashioned tonic can be made by dissolving an ounce of kardene in ½-pint alcohol, then adding ½-cup sugar and hot water to make a quart. Take a tablespoonful before meals and you will be surprised how quickly the look of perfect health will come into your face and your energy and ambition be restored.

Nadie: To strengthen your weak eyes and rid them of that dull, overworked look, put in each eye daily, two or three drops of a fine, strengthening tonic, made by dissolving an ounce of crystos in a pint of water. This eye tonic is very soothing and strengthening, and will make your eyes strong, clear and sparkling. I find it unequalled as a tonic for treating weak, inflamed, expressionless eyes.

Reader: There is one remedy above all others that I take pleasure in recommending for fat reduction. It is harmless and so very effective in regaining a shapely figure. Just dissolve four ounces of parnotis in 1½ pints hot water and take a tablespoonful before meals. This simple remedy will remove your excess fat rapidly without dieting and strenuous exercising, and seems to produce best results in the winter months. Your skin will be firm and free from any flabbiness.

Mrs. T. B.: You will not catch cold from shampooing if you use for your shampoo a teaspoonful of canthrox dissolved in a cup of hot water, rinsing the hair thoroughly. You should never use soap shampoos, as the alkali dulls and deadens the hair, causing it to become brittle, streaky and split at the ends. Canthrox produces an indescribable softness and fluffiness that one gets only from a perfect shampoo. It relieves irritation and removes dandruff thoroughly. The hair will be very lustrous, and you will have no trouble in keeping the short hairs in place.

Mrs. R. C.: Nothing is worse than stale or greasy beauty creams. Always use fresh made, greaseless complexion creams and your skin will not be shiny or hair grow on it. By mixing into ½-pint of cold water, two teaspoonfuls of glycerine and one ounce of almozoin, you have a dependable cream-jelly for cleansing, softening and beautifying the skin. This is excellent for chapped face and hands and keeps the complexion in perfect condition. Use it morning and night and you will soon have a charmingly smooth, refined complexion.

Ruby R.: Do not despair. You can easily save your hair, but not by using so-called hair tonics that have lost their strength. Get at your druggist an ounce of quinzoin and ½-pint cold water. Apply this tonic to the scalp about twice a week and you will be amazed to see how quickly it rids your scalp of dandruff and irritation, and your hair will stop coming out. The tonic makes the hair soft, lustrous and beautiful. By preparing your own hair tonic as directed you will have the best hair and scalp remedy known to science.

Anxious: It is not necessary to resort to the pain and expense attending the use of the electric needle. With powdered delatone and water mix enough paste to cover the hair surface. After letting remain on two or three minutes remove, wash the skin, and the hairs will have vanished. This leaves the skin white, firm and hairless, and while druggists charge a dollar for an original one-ounce package, it never fails to do the work.

Axe Falls on Welland Canal Employes.

The Trent Valley Canal is not the only Dominion Government institution from which employes are being discharged. A St. Catherines dispatch says: The political axe has at last fallen on the Welland Canal and when that waterway opens this spring it will be manned with an almost entirely new staff. There is much jubilation in some Conservative quarters as a consequence, because it was feared no changes were to be made, but in other quarters those who have been disappointed in their applications are anything but happy. Practically every man from the lighthouse keeper's at Port Dalhousie to Lock 16, who could be fired, has been.

LIGHT THAT DOES NOT FAIL

A Volcanic Beacon in San Salvador Republic

The republic of San Salvador is the only government on earth that collects lighthouse fees on account of a volcano that it owns, and without the slightest cost of upkeep.

The volcanic beacon is about eight miles inland from the port of Acajutla, and its pillar of cloud by day and its fire sky by night are visible for many miles out to sea. It bursts forth every seven minutes and is just as accurate as any revolving light that warns mariners of danger in any part of the world.

This volcano has been keeping up this seven minutes' service of eruptions ever since anyone can remember. It is a favorite amusement of visitors to sit by the hour during the lazy afternoons, and, watch in hand, to time the eruptions till they tire of the occupation and fall asleep. No one has ever caught the volcano napping, however.

Every vessel that puts in at Acajutla has to pay its lighthouse fee. There is no other lighthouse than the volcano. But that is a sufficient excuse for the Government of Salvador to make a charge for its services. The explosions that accompany the eruptions sound like detonations of heavy charges of dynamite, but, fortunately, they are not sufficient to shake the ground perceptibly more than about a mile or two from the summit of the crater.

A FUNNY PROPOSITION

The Boston Transcript makes the very pertinent remark that man is a funny proposition, because, when he reads a medical book, he fancies he has every disease described; but when he reads the work of a moralist all the faults that are pointed out he sees, not in himself, but in his neighbor.

THE OLDEST FLAG

The flag of Denmark, a plain red banner bearing on it a white cross, is the oldest flag now in existence. For 300 years both Norway and Sweden were united with Denmark under this flag. In the year 1219 King Waldemar of Denmark, when leading his troops to battle against the Livonians, saw, or thought he saw, a bright light in the form of a cross in the sky. He held this appearance to be a promise of Divine aid, and pressed forward to victory. From this time he had the cross placed on the flag of his country, and called it the Dannebork—that is, strength of Denmark.

Cornelius O'Brien Will Recover.

SORE SHOLDERS, YOUNG HORSES

[illegible] are Usually the Cause—[illegible] Should be Gradually Toughened to Work

[illegible] of the shoulders of young [illegible] of the most important factors to keep in mind during the first few weeks of the spring work.

A horse can not do satisfactory work with shoulders that pain him every time he takes a step. The horse may be looked upon as a machine that is expected to do so much work, and if some of the mechanism is out of order, then the amount of work is lessened. But, also the animal must be looked upon as a creature with feeling and ambition, taking pride in its work, that is a willing, obedient, and, therefore, valuable servant, and should be properly cared for.

The first thing of importance to consider in the draft horse is the collar. Most injured shoulders are the result of poorly-fitting collars, and the fault usually lies in a collar being too large. It is a good idea to have a harness-maker fit the collars to your horses. He may be able to remove padding, and in other ways make the collar over so that it will fit nicely. Heavy collar pads are to be avoided if possible. They are hot and cause the shoulder to sweat; this keeps the pad and shoulder wet, and the skin becomes soft and blisters easily.

Dirty collars are probably as responsible for sore shoulders as ill-fitting ones. In the spring the horse's hair is long and holds large quantities of dirt and scales from the skin. He is soft from lack of work and sweats profusely. This forms a gummy dirt that adheres to the collar and makes, when dry, a hard, tough surface. The ordinary farm hand feels that his duty is done if he scrapes the dirt from the collar with the back of his jack-knife. This method, however, is not an especially good one for the leather of the collar, and a smooth surface is not left. A damp sponge used in the evening as soon as the collar is taken off will, in one or two minutes, remove the dirt. This may be followed by an oiled rag. If this is done, the collar, in the morning should be soft and smooth.

Careless driving, jerking a horse out of the furrow and into it again, allowing him to work with his head around on one side, all tend to produce sore shoulders.

Of course, the first precaution to take is not to ask the colt to do a full day's work until he learns something about his job and ceases to fret. The shoulders will then gradually become toughened. It is a good idea to sponge the shoulders with cold water—just plain cold water. Alum water has been used to good advantage; also weak solutions of tannic acid. Also hot [illegible] to toughen the skin.

Injuries to the top of the neck very frequently terminate in fistulas, withers, etc. A blister near the point of the shoulder is likely to become a callous and form what is known as a "cold abscess." Ill-fitting collars and poor drivers are equally responsible for a condition known as "sweeny."

If an accident occurs and in spite of careful attention a horse's shoulder becomes injured, do not wait until a fistula has developed, or an abcess has formed, or the animal is "sweened," but seek the advice of a veterinary while there is still a chance to check the progress of the injury. This is not the proper place to teach the treatment of such conditions after the injury has been done; it takes years of school work to do that, but it is a good oportunity to impress upon the minds of horse owners that such unfortunate things may be entirely avoided.

LIME AND ITS USES

Helps Land to Digest Manure and Other Matter

Expressed simply and as a simile, the application of lime to land assists it to "digest" manure and other animal matter; it prevents the soil from becoming sour and callous; it causes it to yield up readily its full proportion of plant food; and it assists root action.

Although in these days of artificial manure lime is not so highly necessary as it was, an application will work wonders with most soils, particularly with those that have been neglected; and the small holder breaking up old pastures for the purpose of close cultivation will find an application almost essential.

Generally speaking, it is better to give light dressings frequently rather than a heavy dressing occasionally; and further, you should buy from a reputable source, or you may obtain mixed with the material a quantity not effectually treated in the kiln. For light soils a ton and a half of lime to the acre should be ample, but heavy soils need more liberal treatment.

SORT OF SOW TO BREED FROM

In considering the efficiency of brood sows, Henry Wallace gives the following advice: Go over those that have had pigs the present year and ask them the following questions: How many pigs did you have this year? Were they all good ones, or did you have two or three choice pigs and were the rest inferior? How did you take care of those pigs? Are you a good suckler? Are you good-natured? Are you a good mother, or are you one of the nervous, fidgety kind, always worrying and fretting for fear somebody will hurt you and your precious piglets? If the brood sow on being interrogated, cannot give satisfactory answers to these questions, it is not worth while to scold her or give her a moral lecture. Just turn her into the fattening pen; for there is where she belongs.

How many hens do you have in your flock that do not pay their board? This may be the reason you do not find poultry profitable. Eliminate the unprofitable hens.

A Bright Foresters' Paper.

The Canadian Forestry Journal of last issue has reached The Times. This issue, the organ of the S.O.F., is neatly gotten up and cleverly edited. It contains a good report of the 13th annual convention held in Ottawa, where Mr. G. Y. Chown, B.A., Registrar of Queen's University, Kingston, introduced the Premier, Right Hon. R. L. Borden, to the convention. As the Foresters are one of Peterborough's strongest fraternal societies, this issue of the Journal will be of general interest.

FLESH FLIES

Can Do No Damage If Given No Place to Lay Their Eggs

When the sheep's wool becomes filthy and the skin irritated, an ideal condition is made for the work of the maggot fly. And when the maggots get a start they create a more and more friendly harbor for their kind as they work and increase in numbers under the wool. A sheep infected with maggots is a most pitiful sight, helpless against the parasites eating out its flesh until the sheep dies, its flesh gnawed out in a most cruel manner. For the sake of humanity, if for no other reason, sheep should be saved from much suffering.

These flies can do no damage if not given a suitable place to lay their eggs. Sheep should be watched carefully, especially in warm damp weather, and dirty tag-locks or other filth clipped off and a little tar dabbed on if the skin is chafed. These maggots also get in their work under rams' horns. Indeed, a ram with heavy horns lying close to his head will hardly pass through a summer without infection unless the flies are kept away by putting some tar on the ram's head.

An infected sheep can be told by the fact that it refuses to eat, stands with its head down and most often by itself, and stamps its feet or jerks its head exactly as irritation by maggots would lead one to expect. The remedy is simple. Cut away the wool close. Clean out all maggots, using turpentine to wash them out. Smear the place thoroughly with tar. Then watch the sheep to see that the flies do not again start in the same place. Thoroughness in cleaning out the parasites is essential, for one left in will start the damage all over.

GOOD CHIOKENS

Something to Keep them Busy—The Ideal Pen

Chickens that are penned up should have their houses cleaned out twice a week at least, and their runs dug up (to loosen the earth) once a week, which enables them to have a little exercise in the way of scratching. Their morning meal should consist of potato peelings and all scraps from the table, boiled down and thickened, after draining well, with barley meal, with a dash of pepper in, and when cooled down, given; their water vessels washed and filled. For mid-day meal, a good size cabbage, hung to allow them to get round it, and high enough for them to peck at, which keeps them busy for some considerable time, and, for a change, a swede hung is very good, too. For their last meal give barley, a little wheat, or darry, and occasionally, small Indian corn. A box kept in the run with all fine ashes saved from the house on washing days, if sifted well, gives them a bath. A handful of pepper corns thrown in to them about once a month helps to keep them [illegible] and their houses should be limewashed occasionally.

CLEANING MEN'S CLOTHES

The Best Mixture for the Removal of Grease Spots

The cleaning of a dust-laden old coat reduces the average woman to despair, as it is hard work, and the easiest way to clean a coat or pair of pants is to pin them to the clothes-line and beat the dust out with a cane or limber switch. Then lay them out on a table and brush with a stiff brush. A coat, vest or pair of pants that is not much soiled will come out of a good gasoline bath looking like new. First brush and shake the garment until it seems perfectly free of dust, then remove the spots and put the garment in a wash-bowl or a large bucket and pour enough gasoline over the garment to saturate it thoroughly, then cover the bucket to keep the fluid from evaporating and leave it for two hours. The safest way to use the gasoline is in the open air. Clean the garments by pressing and squeezing between the hands, and hang over the line.

There is nothing better for removing grease spots from the cloth than a fluid composed of four parts of alcohol to one part of ammonia. When the garments are soiled enough to be washed, remove the buttons and baste the buttonholes together; then put them in a warm gasoline suds and let them remain for half an hour; then wash clean through this suds and put them through a lighter suds and rinse through clear water. There is nothing better than this suds for washing garments of any color, and it leaves the cloth soft and clean, and then it is much easier to wash a garment that is much soiled than to try to remove the spots from the fabric, and, after they are washed and pressed, the buttons can be sewed in place and the buttonholes washed over again if necessary.

When pants are beginning to get baggy at the knees, turn them wrong side out, lay one leg at a time on the ironing table, lay a wet cloth all over the knee portions and press until the cloth is dry, then turn right side out, fold in the crease and press from top to bottom over the damp cloth.

FISH PONDS ON THE FARM

That relief from the high prices of meats might be found in having fish ponds on farms, is the opinion expressed by an Omaha, Neb., paper. "Years ago," it says, "when times were not so good and when people were not enjoying the degree of prosperity that now seems to prevail throughout the land, there was great interest taken in stocking the small and larger streams with fish from the state and government fisheries. Thousands of farm fish ponds were built all over the country, in all states, and the commercial idea prevailed in the construction and stocking of these ponds. This was when the fish pond on the farm was viewed as an asset in the advertising and sale of the farm."

Lindsay Players in Raw Deal.

Lindsay Post has the following complaint: "The Olympia hockey team has returned from the tournament at Fenelon Falls and feel pretty sore. The manager of the Olympias was assured that the team would get fair treatment and would meet teams of their own rank. However, the boys were pitted against a Fenelon Falls team of seasoned players with a member of the Peterborough T.A.S. team on the lineup. The locals were pretty roughly used, and are bearing bruises and cuts.

STRAINING MILK

The Milk Strainer Does Not Purify the Fluid

Straining milk does not purify it. Milking should be done with such attention given to cleanliness that it would be unnecessary to use the strainer. The utensil is of value chiefly because it removes the visible indications of impurity from milk, not because it really has any purifying effects. Small particles of manure, hairs, pieces of dead cuticle from the cow's udder and body, and dirt from the milker's hands find their way into the milk pail during the first manipulations of the udder, these impurities are churned around in the pail by the force of the streams as the milk is drawn, and by the time the pail is full this filth is all but dissolved, and no strainer yet produced can remove anything but the coarser and more insoluble substances which settle to the bottom of the bucket.

The millions of bacteria carried into the receptacle by these impurities are untouched by the strainer and go on their way rejoicing to carry ill-health and disease, maybe, to all who drink the milk or use the butter made from it. We use the milk strainer because we do not like the looks of small particles of dirt and refuse in the bottoms of the milk can, or perhaps in the drinking cup. It does no harm to remove these, but gives us a sense of relief in thinking that the milk is clean because it looks clean. We seem to have discharged a moral obligation in using the strainer, forgetting that the real harm comes from the dissolved material, the filth that goes into solution and carries its nauseating effect concealed in the pure white fluid.

HOUSEHOLD SUGGESTIONS

A moderate oven is one in which a piece of white paper will become golden brown in 12 minutes.

A convenience and economy for the oil or gasoline stove is a three part cooker which can be used over one burner. The parts are separated so that three articles can be cooked at the same time.

Rinse out the dish cloths frequently and let them bleach on the grass in the sun to keep them sweet. There is nothing like the sun as a purifier. Use it lavishly and your health will be better and the house purer.

To relieve ear ache, irrigate the ear with warm water. Arrange the patient so that the water can run out of the ear into a receptacle or into cloths which will absorb it. Have the water of slightly more than tepid warmth and allow it to run slowly into the ear until relieved. Cover the ear afterwards with warm woollen cloths.

Little chicks require plenty of fresh water in their reach in hot weather. If this is neglected you will be disappointed in the growth and health of your chicks.

Port Hope Has Typhoid Scare.

Port Hope is having a scare from typhoid fever. There are at present twenty-seven cases in the town, but it is not possible yet to form an opinion as to their cause. At the request of a number of citizens, D. Amyot, Provincial Analyst, was sent from Toronto and conferred with the Board of Health.

A Hiawatha Indian on a Spree.

Hanlon Howard, an Indian from Hiawatha, pleaded guilty in the Police Court, to a charge of being intoxicated. He testified to having been served with whiskey at two local hotels. One of his clearest recollections of the spree was that one of the bartenders had Titian hued locks. Judgment was reserved until Thursday.

Citizen Did Not Like Cigars.

A local citizen talking yesterday with a Times reporter, remarked "I see that the Inland Revenue Dept. took in $36,506.18 for duty on Canadian cigars during January, 1912. Judging by a quarter's worth of Montreal made cigars I bought on Saturday, the Government should spend that amount in disinfectants to get rid of the "aroma" of these smokes.

Venerable Missionary Here.

Rev. Geo. Buskin, 63 O'Hara avenue, Parkdale, was in the city yesterday and gave The Times a call. This venerable Divine has been engaged in evangelical and Colportage Mission work for many years, in fact his face and good work have been familiar in Peterborough district for a fifth of a century. The Rev. gentleman informed us that the donations of Peterborough to the cause he represents, amounted to $21.25.

Of Interest to Local Poultry Men.

It is generally known that the Peterborough Poultry Association is a live institution and advancing poultry breeding in this city and county. It will interest the chicken fanciers to learn that last week Mr. P. A. Ferguson, of Lindsay, had his hen house, weighing four tons, removed from his late residence on Kent street to Bond and Albert streets, of that burg. That is some hen house.

Successful Local Hockeyist Home.

Walter Miller, the Peterborough boy who has made good in the professional hockey ranks, has arrived home, after a most successful season with the Glasgow team in the Maritime professional league. He enjoyed the campaign among the Blue Noses immensely and reports a good season. The team of which he was a member finished second in the league race.

Mr. James Graham in Toronto.

It will be remembered by our readers, The Times notes some time ago, that Mr. James Graham, the local contractor recently went out to Calgary owing to the illness, in Alberta of his son, Harold. It seems, that on the way home to Peterborough, Harold took a relapse and was taken to a hospital in Toronto. Mr. Jas. Graham went to Toronto, a day or two ago and was expected home last night. Mr. Harold Graham, we are informed suffers from severe pains in the head.

A certain local citizen of sporting tendencies, who will always back his opinion, at the drop of the hat, yesterday paid over $60.00 to a well-known travelling man. It seems that the local man had bet that sum against the election of Hon. Geo. P. Graham as member for South Renfrew. The bet was to be decided as soon as the election returns from that county were officially gazetted. The official Canada Gazette, containing Mr. Graham's election was received here yesterday and, as noted the money paid over.

The Liberals of Lemberg, Sask., have chosen Mr. John McLaughlin of Cupar as Liberal M.P.P. for the Saltcoasts riding. Mr. McLaughlin was born in Victoria County.

Mr. Fred Burns, Pearl avenue, has recovered sufficiently from the injury which he received at the C.G.E. a few days ago, to enable him to resume work.

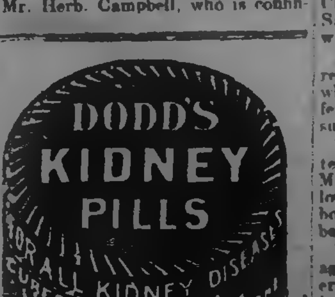
In response to enquiries, made yesterday, the Times was informed that Mrs. Frank Mason, who has had a long and painful illness, is just about the same physically as she has been for some weeks.

Mr. Fred Walker, the popular manager of Messrs. R. A. Dutton's grocery establishment, who was confined to his room for a few days with a severe cold and sore throat, was yesterday back at work.

Rev. Mr. Henderson, pastor of the Charlotte street Methodist church, who has been at Clifton Springs for the past month, expects to return home on Thursday evening, improved in health and ready to resume his work.

Mr. Harry Long left on the noon G.T.R. train for Irma, Alta. He will travel via Chicago and St. Paul, and will spend the summer on his ranch at Strawberry Plains, Irma, Alta. His nephew, Gordon, accompanied him on his way to Edmonton.

Mr. Jas. Low, of Lindsay, who has many friends in this city, has been offered and has accepted the position of manager and treasurer of the British Columbia Permanent Loan Co., Vancouver. He leaves at the first of the month.



Firemen Had Hard Day.

The fire laddies certainly earned their money yesterday. Three calls to fires in the morning, and then clean up for the greater part of the day. In the Gilbert and Sullivan Opera, Pirates of Penzance, it is said that "the policeman's lot is not a happy one." The average fireman, who risks life and limb at a fire, in pursuance of his duty, and whilst saving property and, often human life, has many long hours later in cleaning up the engines and appliances.

LITTLE LOCAL LINES

"All quiet along the Otonabee," was the report received by the g.f.j. last night from police headquarters.

The Bugle Band met for rehearsal at the Opera House yesterday evening.

A "Shamrock Social" will be held in the George street church, under the auspices of the ladies' Aid Society, on the evening of March 15.

A meeting of the Women's Missionary Society of George street church will be held at the home of Mrs. Jas. Kendry, 754 Water street, to-day at 3.30.

Last night was one of those evenings that cause the average local reporters to tear their hair and use language. There was not enough doing in the way of news to, as a local merchant often says, "to make a jacket for a gooseberry."

Health and Beauty Hints

BY MRS. MAE MARTYN.

H.N.K.: To whiten and beautify the complexion you will find nothing better than a simple, inexpensive lotion made by dissolving 4 ounces of spurmax in a half-pint witch hazel (or hot water) then adding two teaspoonfuls of glycerine. This lotion will freshen up and improve any complexion without giving that artificial powdered look. It does not clog the skin pores like powder and lasts much better. It gives to the skin a smooth, velvety tone and takes away that shiny, sallow look. For treating freckles and skin discolorations generally, spurmax lotion is very fine.

D.L.: To quickly get rid of that sallow, pimply look on your face, you should take a good system tonic to remove the impurities from your blood which come from lack of exercise and eating too much solid food in the winter. A good old-fashioned tonic can be made by dissolving an ounce of kardene in ½-pint alcohol, then adding ½-cup sugar and hot water to make a quart. Take a tablespoonful before meals and you will be surprised how quickly the look of perfect health will come into your face and your energy and ambition be restored.

Nadie: To strengthen your weak eyes and rid them of that dull, overworked look, put in each eye daily, two or three drops of a fine, strengthening tonic, made by dissolving an ounce of crystos in a pint of water. This eye tonic is very soothing and strengthening, and will make your eyes strong, clear and sparkling. I find it unequalled as a tonic for treating weak, inflamed, expressionless eyes.

Reader: There is one remedy above all others that I take pleasure in recommending for fat reduction. It is harmless and so very effective in regaining a shapely figure. Just dissolve four ounces of parnotis in 1½ pints hot water and take a tablespoonful before meals. This simple remedy will remove your excess fat rapidly without dieting and strenuous exercising, and seems to produce best results in the winter months. Your skin will be firm and free from any flabbiness.

Mrs. T. B.: You will not catch cold from shampooing if you use for your shampoo a teaspoonful of canthrox dissolved in a cup of hot water, rinsing the hair thoroughly. You should never use soap shampoos, as the alkali dulls and deadens the hair, causing it to become brittle, streaky and split at the ends. Canthrox produces an indescribable softness and fluffiness that one gets only from a perfect shampoo. It relieves irritation and removes dandruff thoroughly. The hair will be very lustrous, and you will have no trouble in keeping the short hairs in place.

Mrs. R. C.: Nothing is worse than stale or greasy beauty creams. Always use fresh made, greaseless complexion creams and your skin will not be shiny or hair grow on it. By mixing into ½-pint of cold water, two teaspoonfuls of glycerine and one ounce of almozoin, you have a dependable cream-jelly for cleaning, softening and beautifying the skin. This is excellent for chapped face and hands and keeps the complexion in perfect condition. Use it morning and night and you will soon have a charmingly smooth, refined complexion.

Ruby R.: Do not despair. You can easily save your hair, but not by using so-called hair tonics that have lost their strength. Get at your druggist's an ounce of quinzoin and ½-pint cold water. Apply this tonic to the scalp about twice a week and you will be amazed to see how quickly it rids your scalp of dandruff and irritation, and your hair will stop coming out. The tonic makes the hair soft, lustrous and beautiful. By preparing your own hair tonic as directed you will have the best hair and scalp remedy known to science.

Anxious: It is not necessary to resort to the pain and expense attending the use of the electric needle. With powdered delatone and water mix enough paste to cover the hair surface. After letting remain on two or three minutes remove, wash the skin, and the hairs will have vanished. This leaves the skin white, firm and hairless, and while druggists charge a dollar for an original one-ounce package, it never fails to do the work.

DEADLOCK IN ENGLISH COAL STRIKE PRACTICALLY OVER

Both Welsh and Scottish Miners Have Yielded to Demands of the Men Who Would Let England and Her People Starve

Whilst Their Are Still Some Difficulties Between Operators and Men Their is All Hope for a Settlement

Owners Meet Miners Delegates at a Round Table Conference When the Strike is Discussed Fully

London, Mar. 12.—The disputants in the British coal war, which since the beginning of the month has involved the throwing out of employment of over two million men in England, Scotland and Wales, and has caused the greatest distress among the population, met again to-day in a round-table conference.

The meeting was a momentous one as it established the fact that the long-standing deadlock had been broken. It took place at the Foreign Office at three o'clock this afternoon under the presidency of Premier Asquith.

DIFFICULTIES STILL.

The coal owners of the Federated district, which comprises the purely English collieries, who had already signified the concession in principle of a fixed minimum wage for miners found no difficulty in accepting the Premier's invitation. They had, however, to wrestle strenuously with the Welsh and Scottish coal masters in order to induce them to modify their opposition to a conference with the men from which the miners had expressly barred the discussion of the principle of a minimum wage.

There are still many difficulties in the way of the immediate settlement of the dispute, but the fact that the two parties have come together and that negotiations are proceeding has served to brighten the atmosphere and bring about a feeling of hope.

OPERATORS' DRAFT REPLY.

New York, Mar. 12.—A sub-committee of anthracite coal operators was prepared to meet again for the purpose of completing the draft of the reply refusing the demands of the hard coal workers. The draft of the reply was practically completed and there were only a few minor details to be incorporated to-day.

This reply is to be given to the mine workers at the joint meeting of the operators and the miners' representatives, and its form is believed to be such as to permit the miners to submit a new proposition. The demands of miners for 20 per cent. increase in wages, recognition of the union, shorter working hours and other conditions are to be refused, and the operators will give a detailed reply to each demand.

The operators will decline the increase of 20 per cent. in wages on the ground that the miners are already obtaining an automatic increase based upon the sliding scale.

The operators will decline the demand for collection of union dues by the companies on the ground that a statute of the State of Pennsylvania makes this illegal, requiring the payment to the employes by employers of "the full amount of wages or earnings in cash."

The only exception allowed by law is that miners may agree to have part of their earnings set aside for payment of check weighman and check docking bosses.

MURDER IS EASY IN U. S.

Acknowledged Slayer of Aged Oysterman Let Out on Bond Because he is Not Feeling Well.

New Orleans, Mar. 12.—Henry Caruso, the young inspector of weights and measures of the Second District of this city, who a few days ago shot and killed Joseph Cimo, an aged oysterman, will in all probability be released from the Parish Prison on bond. It was learned that Caruso is not only a victim of tuberculosis, but is also suffering from a blow he received in the fight preceding the shooting. Dr. L. S. Charbonnet, upon the request of Caruso's attorneys, examined Caruso in the Parish Prison. His certificate was presented to the district attorney with a request that bond be allowed Caruso. Dr. Charbonnet states in his certificate that continued confinement in the Parish Prison may endanger the life of the prisoner, and upon this recommendation the district attorney has consented to allow bail to Caruso.

Accordingly, the friends of the young man at once raised sufficient money to cover the bond.

The nature of the case is such, it is the general opinion, as to warrant the release of Caruso on a bond.

THE WEATHER.

BORDEN AND BOURASSA

The Liberal press has loudly declared that "Bourassa bosses Borden." The absurdity of this contention has been repeatedly demonstrated at Ottawa in the last few weeks, says The News. The Prime Minister's firm refusal to impose a dual school system on the new districts now being annexed to Manitoba is the latest proof that Mr. Borden is not the slave of Bourassa as Laurier was when the Liberal leader fastened Separate Schools upon Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Under Laurier Bourassa actually wrote the clauses depriving the two younger Provinces of self government in educational matters. To-day Mr. Bourassa is thundering on the platform and in the clerical press because Mr. Borden will not allow him to draw up a dual school clause for inclusion in the Manitoba boundaries legislation. The Prime Minister will not have any such interference with Provincial autonomy. He stands immovable and his colleagues with him. That is why the Liberal press is so angry these days.

DYNAMI1ERS TRIAL BEGUN INDICTMENTS ASKED REMOVED

Indianapolis, Ind., Mar. 12.—Demurrers to indictments against 46 defendants in the Government's prosecution of the alleged dynamiting conspiracy were filed before Judge A. B. Anderson by counsel for the indicted men when they were arraigned in the Federal Court. Eight of the 51 defendants were not present.

Elijah Zoline, of Chicago, one of the attorneys for the defence, began the argument in support of a motion to quash the indictments on the ground that many of them charged the same offence of conspiracy to transport explosives from State to State illegally.

WILL NOT BE EMBARRASSED.

Judge Anderson interrupted Mr. Zoline with a statement that the motion to quash the indictments on the ground of confusing multiplicity "was absurd."

"These defendants will never go to trial without thoroughly understanding what they are charged with," said he. "They will not be embarrassed or confused in this court. The motion is over ruled."

Attorney Alfred Hayes then attacked the indictments, [illegible] had unlawfully [illegible] on passenger trains. He declared there was no violation of Federal statute unless explosives were transported on common carriers concealed in unmarked packages, and maintained the indictment did not so aver.

NAPLES IS CALLED THE CITY OF GIRLS

Naples, Mar. 12.—Nearly in every capital of Europe the number of boys born exceeds that of girl babies, but Naples forms a conspicuous exception to the rule. During twenty-six years the number of girl babies born per annum exceeded that of boy babies twenty-four times. Only in 1906 and 1909 were more boys than girls born. Scientists all over Europe have tried to explain the phenomenon, but no adequate explanation has yet been offered. There is only this to be said: "The most beautiful of European towns and the most favored by nature seems to produce more of the beautiful sex than any other."

CAMPANILE SOON TO BE DEDICATED

Venice, Mar. 12.—Some of her former splendor will be restored to Venice on April 25, when the reconstructed campanile of St. Mark will be consecrated. The rebuilding of the campanile is looked upon as an achievement worthy of commemoration, and entertainments on a large scale will be held.

The King and Queen of Italy are to come from Rome to assist at the ceremony. The German Emperor will also be present. Already a large number of visitors have ordered rooms at the hotels. The scaffolding is now being removed from the top of the monument.

CHINESE WOMEN AS SUFFRAGETTES

Pekin, Mar. 12.—The suffragettes of China, outdoing their Western sisters, are desirous of asserting their military valor. At Shanghai, the Chinese girls at the Chang Yu school wrote to the leader of the republican forces offering their aid as soldiers.

"Heaven has given women the same rights as man," the letter says. "Soon the Manchus will be chased out of China, but till now, no regiment of women has been formed. We wish to take a share with the men of China in crushing our enemies. The needle does not suffice for us. We ask for arms."

SCORED LABOR LEADERS

Gompers, Mitchell and Morrison on Trial at Washington.

Washington, Mar. 12.—Samuel Gompers, John Mitchell and Frank Morrison, the three Federation of Labor officials being tried in the District of Columbia Supreme Court before the full bench of justices to-day were severely scored by Attorney Darlington, of the prosecutors, who characterized their alleged violation of the Buck Stove and Range injunction as "flagrant, defiant and conscious."

Mr. Darlington declared the case should have been entitled "law against anarchy," because of the position taken by the respondents that they would follow their own inclinations despite the opinions of the tribunals created by the constitution to interpret the law.

KINGSTON COAL DEALERS FINED FOR SHORT WEIGHT

The Times, in the interests of its readers and the public of Peterborough in general, have taken up the matter of coal weights. We showed how several dealers in Kingston had been haled before the Magistrate there. A large number of coal dealers of the Limestone City were charged with selling coal in light weights. The result of the trial to which our article led, as far as local connection with such matters is concerned, ended as follows, after trial before Police Magistrate Farrell:

Swift & Co., $10 and costs.
James Sowards, $10 and costs.
Booth & Co., $10 and costs.
Robert Crawford, $10 and costs.
The Frontenac Lumber & Coal Co. dismissed.

STREETS STREWN WITH DECAPITATED BODIES

London, Mar. 12.—That a thousand decapitations have taken place at Pekin and Tein Tsin in the past week is officially admitted, says a Pekin dispatch to the Daily Telegraph. Only the brush of Gustave Dore could do justice to the hideous picture the streets present. Bodies lie in groups in agonized attitudes, the heads literally hacked off, lying where they rolled. The very mules and ponies snort and refuse to approach the terrible objects over which the rabble stands and gloats.

NO AGREEMENT WHEN CONFERENCE ADJOURNED

Discussion Between Owners and Miners' Delegates Resumes To-morrow.

London, Mar. 12.—The British miners and coal owners sat in conference under the Presidency of Premier Asquith at the Foreign Office for three and a half hours without reaching a basis for a settlement of the dispute. The meeting adjourned until eleven o'clock to-morrow morning. Sir Edward Grey, Sidney Buxton and Sir George Askwith participated.

ORANGE LODGE WILL DEAL WITH BILINGUAL

In view of the stir over the bi-lingual school question, the Ne Temere decree and the Home Rule situation, unusual interest attaches to the annual gathering of the Grand Orange Lodge of Ontario West, which opens in London to-day, and will continue until the end of the week. It is expected that the meeting will be by far the largest in the history of the district.

The bi-lingual issue and the Ne Temere decree will be dealt with vigorously.

FIREMEN FIRED BUT THEY HAD RESIGNED

Mr. George Grange has been nominated as Assistant Chief of the Fire Department by the Fire, Water and Light Committee. A position of fireman vacated by Mr. R. Leahy, is also to be filled.

All the members of the committee were present, with Ald. Johnston presiding. A letter received by the chairman by Mr. Bruce Menzies, who has been acting deputy chief for some time brought up a discussion. Ald. Anderson seconded Mayor Bradburn's motion that Messrs. Menzies and Leahy be dismissed.

Ald. Morgan moved, seconded by Ald. Brown, that the matter be postponed.

The resulting vote defeated the amendment. It was moved by Ald. Gordon, seconded by Ald. Buller that Mr. Geo. Grange be appointed Assistant Chief.—Carried.

Moved by Ald. Buller, seconded by Ald. Gordon, that a man be secured to take the place of fireman Leahy.

MEN HAD RESIGNED

However, Deputy Chief Menzies and Fireman Leahy tendered their resignations to Chief Howard. Thus, at the conclusion of the meeting, the motion for dismissal was found to be too late.

THE NEW PROVINCIAL MUSEUM.

Editor Morning Times.

Here is an opportunity for Peterborough to show her patriotism and generosity. The Ontario Government proposes to establish a Provincial Museum at Toronto. The purposes of the Museum shall be: The collection and exhibition of objects of every kind calculated to illustrate the natural history of Ontario, the collection and exhibition of objects of any kind calculated to illustrate the natural history of the world and the history of man in all ages. Should the Museum at Inverlea Park have duplicates of some of their priceless curios, they might present such to the "Royal Ontario Museum."

EARLIER CLOSING ON SATURDAY

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—It seems useless to call attention, through the press, to the general benefit that would arise by earlier closing of shops on Saturday nights. It has been pointed out that grocers and their clerks may want to get to bed at a reasonable hour on Saturdays so that they may feel equal to attending church. The good churchgoers, however, who wait until nearly midnight Saturdays before ordering their groceries, have only their own soul's salvation at stake. Apart from church matters, the hardworked clerk, who has faithfully toiled from 7 a.m. on Saturdays, who has been on his feet for 15 or 16 hours in his employer's shop, is only a little lower than the angels if he remains strictly honest and devoted to his employer's interests. I notice that the barbers of Kingston, Ont., have got the City Fathers of that City to pass a bill compelling barber shops to close on Saturday nights at 11, instead of midnight. This is a work in the right direction.

FROM THE NORTH COUNTRY

Where the Winters are Cold and the Snows Deep.

Writing from the vicinity David Harum made famous, a man says that he was an habitual coffee drinker, and, although he knew it, was doing him harm, (Tea is equally harmful, because it contains caffeine the same drug found in coffee) was too obstinate to give it up, till all at once he went to pieces with nervousness and insomnia, loss of appetite, weakness and a generally used-up feeling, which practically unfitted him for his arduous occupation, and kept him on a couch at home when his duty did not call him out.

While in this condition Grape-Nuts food was suggested to me and I began to use it. Although it was in the middle of winter and the thermometer was often below zero, almost my entire living for about six weeks of severe exposure was on Grape-Nuts food with a little bread and butter and a cup of hot water, till I was wise enough to make Postum my table beverage.

"After the first two weeks I began to feel better and during the whole winter I never lost a trip on the mail route, frequently being on the road 7 or 8 hours at a time.

"The constant marvel to me was how a person could do the amount of work and endure the fatigue and hardship as I did, on so small an amount of food. But I found my new rations so perfectly satisfactory that I have continued them using both Postum and Grape-Nuts at every meal, and often they comprise my entire meal.

"All my nervousness, irritability and insomnia have disappeared and healthy natural sleep has come back to me. But what has been perhaps the greatest surprise to me is the fact that with the benefit to my general health has come a remarkable improvement in my eyesight.

"If a good appetite, good digestion, good eyesight, strong nerves and an active brain are to be desired, I can say from my own experience, use Grape-Nuts and Postum. Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont.

CONVICTS AND GUARDS HAVE FIGHT AT THE UNION STATION

Four Prisoners for Kingston Penitentiary Try to Make Their Get Away

Toronto, Mar. 12.—One of the most desperate attempts at escaping custody which the police of this city have ever been called upon to face was tried on the Eastern Flyer for Kingston shortly after nine o'clock, when four convicts, who were being transferred from Stoney Mountain Penitentiary to Kingston, attacked and beat up three guards, and only failed in their dangerous attempt by a slight miscalculation in time. All four men were recognized by the authorities as "desperate." They were heavily manacled, shackled and chained. The men proved unmanageable in the Manitoba Penitentiary, from which they had made several unsuccessful attempts at gaining their freedom.

Their persistent attempts at jail breaking in Stoney Mountain made them feared, and precaution had been taken. For that reason there was an unusual police patrol surrounding the men when they walked through the Union Station.

The four convicts were all sentenced from ten to seventeen years. Their case was a hopeless one, and to show their recklessness they had boldly announced to the guards on their way from the West that they would make an attempt to escape before they reached Kingston.

MANY CASUALTIES IN GERMAN STRIKE RIOTS

Berlin, Mar. 12.—Collisions between the strikers, the police and the non-strikers occurred to-day in six or eight localities in the coal regions. The most serious conflict was near Hamborn, in the district of Dusseldorf, where, according to dispatches, a mob of 2,000 strikers threw stones and bottles and fired revolvers at the detachment of 40 policemen who were on guard, injuring five of them. The police then charged with drawn sabres, injuring many of the strikers.

The workers were stoned and the police used their sabres in dispersing the crowds of strikers at many other points, but the number of casualties is not reported.

CALL FOR TROOPS.

Owing to these disturbances the Christian Trades Unions and the mine owners have telegraphed to the Minister of the Interior to send troops.

The strike is making considerable progress.

Figures issued to-day show that the increases of wages demanded by the miners cannot be granted, owing to the financial position of the mining companies.

CONVICTS HAVE BEEN LANDED IN KINGSTON

Kingston, Mar. 12.—The four Manitoba convicts who tried to escape from the train at Toronto, were safely landed in the Penitentiary this afternoon. They were taken there in Fingle's van doubly guarded. The story of their escapade had preceded them and their arrival at Kingston Junction was watched by a big gathering. The convicts were marched to the van piled in between constables. The convicts were smiling and laughing at the crowd. Brown, whom O'Leary had hit, had cloths about his head and these were saturated with blood. The deputy warden regarded them as the worst lot he had had to deal with in many a day. The report that O'Leary was injured is unfounded. He had a lively struggle, but he came out unmarked. The men on arrival at the prison were at once removed to the incorrigible ward.

CHURCH UNION IS IN BALANCE

No Official Return Yet Received by Dr. Somerville

"Toronto, Mar. 12.—"There is no possible way of knowing what the General Assembly will do," said Rev. Dr. R. P. McKay, moderator of the Toronto Presbytery, "So many things have to be taken into account and the Assembly cannot even begin to discuss the matter until the full data is before them.

"I think, however, that a majority of at least two-thirds would be necessary, and probably more than that, before the union could be authorized, but I believe there will be that majority.

"In any case the returns are very incomplete as yet. The figures we have are only incidental and we have not heard from the churches in the west at all.

"Any expression of opinion as to what action the Presbyterian General Assembly is likely to take with regard to church union on the face of it," declared Rev. Dr. Somerville, treasurer of the Presbyterian Church in Canada.

"There are 69 Presbyteries in Canada to report and I have not received a return from any one of them yet. Any individual returns from outside churches which have been published, are not official and may have been sent in by interested parties.

PEKIN IS NOW TO BE CAPITAL OF CHINA

Nanking, China, March 9.—In an effort to restore order and inaugurate a stable government as soon as possible, it is understood that Dr. Sun Yat Sen and his advisors have decided to go to Pekin and make that city—for the present at least—the capital of the new republic. This step is regarded as advisable on account of the mutinous spirit evidenced by the troops in the vicinity of Pekin and the general unrest there.

The plans which are now being prepared, provide for the early removal of the entire official machinery in the republic. It is believed that the removal of the seat of government to Pekin will of itself restore order there.

THE RIVER CLYDE

A Few Notes About the Most Wonderful Waterway in the World

The Clyde is one of the most important shipbuilding districts in the world. Between Glasgow and Greenock there are about fifty shipyards, and their aggregate output has on two occasions exceeded 600,000 tons. During the last twenty years the total has rarely been less than 400,000 tons, and has frequently exceeded 500,000. Two Super-Dreadnoughts are at present under construction on the river, besides several cruisers and torpedo destroyers; and some of the most notable liners afloat including the Lusitania have been built and launched from the banks of the narrow waterway. The River Clyde is one of the most wonderful waterways in the world, particularly that part of it which extends from Greenock up to Glasgow Bridge, a distance of nearly twenty miles. At one time, a few hundred years ago, it was possible for pedestrians to cross the river at certain points without wetting a shoe. To-day, between the points named, there is a minimum depth of nearly twenty feet at low water.

Needless to say this great change has not been effected without a tremendous amount of forethought, skill and determination. As far back as 1566, detachments of the city's inhabitants were employed to clear away a formidable sandbank about two miles above Dumbarton, but although the people labored away for several weeks their efforts had little effect. The river continued to wash down the sand from the upper reaches, and the bank became as formidable as ever. It was about this time that a then well-known civil engineer was consulted as to the best method of making the river navigable for shipping. He informed the city authorities that it would be impossible to deepen the river, his theory being that as the bed of the river was deepened the water level would fall correspondingly.

Fortunately, the authorities did not allow themselves to be seriously influenced by this expert's opinion. After several more ineffective attempts had been made to solve the problem, a civil engineer from Chester, in 1768, experimented on a system of contracting the river by means of jetties, and removing the sand and gravel from within the narrow channel. In 1773 he contracted with the town council to make the river from Dumbuck upwards a depth of six feet and a width of 300 feet at low water, at a cost of $9,200. He succeeded in giving a depth of ten inches more than he bargained for, and he was rewarded by the town council with an additional sum of $6,000 and a silver cup. That may be said to have been the beginning of the great work of widening and deepening the river, a work which has been proceeding almost incessantly ever since.

THE PATAGONIAN INDIANS

Normally the Patagonian Indians are a peaceable and kindly people, but they are impulsive, capable of strong prejudices, very revengeful, and often with good reason suspicious of strangers. They are not to be trifled with, and when under the influence of drink are brutal and dangerous. They show love for their children and wives and kindness to their own people. They are divided into numerous tribes or groups, each having its chief, or cacique, upon whom the burdens of government rest but lightly. The cacique of the tribe to whom this village belonged was then at another camp. They believe in a good and an evil spirit, whom they propitiate, and have many stories, myths, and superstitions connected with the sun, moon, and stars, while the slaying of horses and drinking of blood form a conspicuous part in their superstitions, birth, marriage and death ceremonies, many of which are most repulsive.

VEGETABLES AND CHARACTER

According to a French doctor, the potato develops in the eater an evenness of temper and calmness of thought. The carrot acts as a stimulant to the character, and is recommended for billousness and to peevish or jealous persons. Spinach develops ambitious dreams and energy. Peas, we can understand, are not calculated to help serious thought, and the cauliflower induces egotism.

Stack of Old Horseshoes

A unique sight is to be seen at Upper Studley, near Trowbrige, where Mr. James Jennings, the well-known steam roundabouts proprietor, has a huge stack of old horse-shoes which he has collected during the past two years. It stands 17 feet high, is 10 feet through, weighs about 150 tons, and could not be purchased for $2,000. The shoe stack attracts great attention, particularly from touring motorists, who frequently stop to examine the curious pile.

KEEP THE PIGS DRY

Guard Against Dampness From the Very Beginning

Pigs are animals that, as a class, are subject to rheumatism and similar troubles, and if you are going to be a successful pig-keeper you must guard against dampness from the very start, especially with the bedding arrangements.

Straw—barley straw in particular—makes capital bedding; and dry bracken, dried grass from the hedges, and similar material may be used. I will assume, of course, that the floor of the sleeping apartment of your sty is of brick, sloped for drainage, and that a warm bed of some kind is provided for the animals. From time to time as it is dirtied this bedding must be changed, and it is a good plan to place it in the forecourt of the sty—if any—till it has become part of the muck, which you will remove for manurial purposes as necessary.

And if dry quarters are necessary with adult sows and pigs, how much more so is this the case with the youngsters! At birth they should have clean, sweet straw provided, not in great quantities, or they may be unwittingly lain upon by their mother, or else smothered, but sufficient for dryness and warmth. Then, during their infancy the quantity may be gradually increased till the usual allowance is arrived at. Needless to say, the straw bedding should be

ONE TELEPHONE SERVICE ONLY.

Current talk of the government taking over the Express Companies, reminds one of when, some twenty years ago, some local citizens took stock in an Express Company to run in opposition to the companies then in operation. It's death was just a little more rapid than that of the Ontario Telephone Co., organized and operated here, which undertook to give a $15.00 a year service in competition with the established Bell Co. Whilst every one naturally wants the cheapest of everything he can get, any intelligent man realizes that to give good value in any walk of life, or line of business, to supply good goods takes money.

It is very evident that a certain section of the far Western press is not in love with Sir Wilfrid Laurier's action on the Manitoba Boundary Bill. The Winnipeg Telegram says: "The speech of Sir Wilfrid Laurier on the boundary bill will go down in Canadian history as the most unfair made by a Canadian statesman, and as betraying besides his undying hostility to this province. It is difficult to be seen how any man of his intellectual capacity could descend to any such despicable argument as he adopted."

WHALING OFF NEW ZEALAND

Graphic Description of the Work of the Whalers with Their Deadly Harpoons

At the cry of "There she blows!" out go the steam launches to replace the nets, three in number, that suffice to close the narrow channel. These, unanchored, are allowed to float loose; the ends of each slightly overlapping. Kept taut by their own weight, they hang stretched on the float line, an invisible curtain of wire mesh barring the water run.

No human fastening, says the Wide World, has yet been invented that would stop the rush of a charging whale. The principal of the detached floating net is not to stop, but so to hamper the monster with a gossamer of wire rope that he falls an easy prey to the hunters. For this reason also the nets are so placed that on striking an entangled whale may race seaward or sound downward, carrying the enveloping net, without fear of disturbing the remaining two.

When the nets are in position the launches and attendant whaleboats, with their crews, take up their stations at some distance to watch for an unheaval and dancing floating line that marks the striking of a whale.

Often a whale's presence is first indicated by great masses of broken barnacles and torn sea-grass that come floating upward to the surface as the whale, floundering among the rocks of the sea-floor, eases himself with delighted scratchings in the depths.

In the boats all is tense expectancy and ordered preparation. Harpoon guns are loaded and made ready, lines are carefully flaked down in the tubs, lances are looked to, and everyone is on the qui vive. Suddenly a sort of shudder runs through the sea. There are tossing billows and wild commotion made by the bobbing float lines. "Hurrah! she's struck!" is the cry.

Away go the boats, each racing to be the first fast to the struggling fish and so earn the bonus that rewards the winning crew. A mighty, grey black head, entangled in a clinging web of wire, rears from out the water. Up, up, it goes, till a huge bulk of body towers a good fifty feet in the air, its side fins thrashing wildly in a smother of foam. It curves in an arch, and then, like an arrow, down go whale and net together for the sound.

Not for long though. The upward drag of bunched net floats, and its necessity for breath brings the animal quickly to the surface—a spouting, snorting, wallowing mass; mad with rage, wild with terror of the unknown clinging horror that envelops it.

Bang! bang! go the guns from each boat in quick succession. Both irons are home and well placed. A wild quiver of flukes and fins, and the whale either sounds again or races along the surface, towing the boats after it at express speed. But the net holds fast, and at each new effort for freedom the victim becomes more [illegible] gling the whale comes to rest and there is a momentary cessation of the mad fight, as the leviathan pauses to breath. Huge panting air gasps are plainly audible at a distance of half a mile.

The crews are quick to seize the opportunity. With the lancemen ready in the bow the boats sweep in, one on either side. "Steady with the lance." "Now!" Eight foot steel blades drive deep for the heart behind the pectoral fins.

A shiver, a hissing spout of [illegible] and blood, a wallow and roll of huge wire-tangled carcass, flashes of red and white foam in the sunlight, and the black heave of a twentyfoot fin that for one dread instant, scimitar-shaped, a falling wall of bone and sinew, hangs over the boat and its occupants. The boat's crew back out like lightning just in time. Down crashes the mighty flail, missing it by a bare foot. There is a roar and clap of many thunders, and jetting spurts of spray leap high into the blue.

The boats backed clear, still hang to the lines, the crews watching events and waiting the end. It may be that the dying whale will sound again or race in a final effort. But the lances have got home. A few more wallows of despair, the great tail flukes thrash the water with lessening force, and presently the huge body, inert, lifeless, rises quietly to the surface. Hawsers are made fast to the dead whale, and while the boats return to their stations to watch the remaining nets, it is towed by the launch to the jetty ashore.

SALT FOR MANGOLDS

Best Results Obtained From Use of 10 Per Cent. Per Acre

That application of salt in addition to other fertilizers is useful for the mangold crop is generally acknowledged, but what is the most suitable quantity to apply is a question upon which there is considerable difference of opinion.

To obtain definite information on this point, the Harper-Adams Agricultural College has been conducting experiments for three years with quantities per acre of 2½ cwt., 5 cwt., 10 cwt. and 15 cwt. respectively.

The salt was applied in the middle of April and thoroughly worked into the soil by cultivating, barrowing and rolling three times before rowing up, the ridges being again split before sowing.

Special care has to be taken to ensure the salt being completely mixed with the soil, otherwise the seed is liable to be damaged.

The dressings were made across all the manurial and variety trial plots, and the weights are the average of the different plots. The result was the following:—The application of—

2½ cwt. produced an average increase, about 4 tons roots;

5 cwt. produced an average increase, about 5½ tons roots;

10 cwt. produced an average increase, about 8½ tons roots;

15 cwt. produced an average increase, about 4 tons roots.

The big application of 15 cwt. was tried for the first time last year, just to see what the effect would be.

The experiment seems to demonstrate that the quantity of salt that can be used with the best result is 10 cwt. per acre.

HORSES IN WINTER

Can be Kept on Straw as Well as on Hay

Professor J. H. Shepperd, of the North Dakota Agricultural College, answering a question recently about wintering horses on straw, says:

The North Dakota station did a considerable amount of work in horse feeding a number of years ago and made extensive trials with oat straw, as compared with hay, for roughage. In the trial it was found that some horses did about as well on it as they did on hay. While others were very much harder to carry, chiefly because their appetites for roughage were too light to cause them to eat enough of it. Aside from those dainty animals there was little trouble in keeping them up on oat straw as roughage.

The oat straw used was that of a normal season, which was coarser and more woody than that which had been obtained this year. The trial consisted of a period of sixty days' feeding with oats as the grain ration against a similar period with oats and hay, and sixty days' feeding with a mixture of half and half bran and shorts by weight with hay compared with sixty days' feeding bran and shorts with oat straw.

During the first thirty days winter conditions were present and the horses were used only about enough for good exercise. During the second thirty [illegible] of that work the last half of the month. The horses receiving oats and hay as a ration required nine and one-third pounds of oats with hay to carry them, while those on oats and straw consumed eleven and one-half pounds of oats per day. During the thirty days that they had light work the horses on hay gained 176 pounds and the three on straw 169 pounds. During the thirty days when they had heavy work one-half of the time, those on hay lost 240 pounds and those on straw 315 pounds.

The similar lots of horses fed on bran and shorts, half and half by weight, gained during the winter conditions, 88 pounds when fed hay, and 83 pounds when fed straw. When they were on the straw ration with heavy work for one half of the month they lost 225 pounds, and on the hay ration 235 pounds.

These results indicate that horses can be carried almost as successfully on straw as roughage as they can on hay, provided enough additional grain is given them to supply them with sufficient nourishment. The additional grain required is about one fifth. If the feeder has facilities for chaffing the straw and will moisten it and mix the grain fed with it during the season when the animals are required to do very little work, a smaller amount of grain will carry them.

SUCKERS ON CORN

In the past suckers on corn were regarded as very undesirable, and oftentimes the small boy had to go through the cornfield and pull them off. Recent experiments show that suckering of the corn plant is merely a response to its surroundings. When the stand is thin there will always be plenty of suckers. The corn plants simply try to remedy the thin stand by suckering.

In an experiment several years ago where there were four plants in a hill eight suckers developed to each one hundred plants; where there were three in a hill, twenty-five suckers developed; where there were two in a hill seventy-six suckers, and where there was only one plant in the hill, 198 suckers developed to each one hundred plants. It was noticed that a large number of the suckers produced ears.

Another cause for suckering is the richness of the land. Rich, new land has been found to produce nearly twice the number of suckers as old, worn-out land. To some extent the tendency to suckers is no doubt inherited, but the main causes of suckering are the thinness of the ground and the weather conditions.

Experiments conducted for two years indicated that it paid to leave the suckers on. The average yield for two years of corn with the suckers left on was eighty-one bushels, while for corn with suckers pulled off it was sixty-four bushels.

ARMY'S LATEST RECRUIT

Laura, the Coldstreams' Pet Pelican, Returns from Egypt

One of the latest recruits which the British Army has secured is Laura, the pet pelican of the Coldstream Guards. Laura has been brought home from Egypt by the famous regiment, and is now a favorite with all, except—and an important exception—Chinko, a pert little monkey, which is another pet of the Coldstreams'.

However, breaches of the peace are now uncommon between them, as Laura and Chinko do not often meet. The pelican is quite expert in the duties of a soldier. She occasionally wears the uniform, and does "sentry-go" in front of a box in quite the approved style.

A long, narrow beak of sword-like dimensions is an excellent substitute for the real thing, and more than one member of the regiment, not excepting Chinko, has felt its keen edge.

It is reported that Laura found England very depressing after the sunshine of Egypt, but is now getting more acclimatized and contented with her life in the regiment.

THE SQUIRREL'S CUNNING

Storing Its Winter Supply—Why It is a Game Bird Guard

Although the common red squirrel is one of the liveliest and most attractive of our wild creatures, a knowledge of its habits is more casual than intimate.

The past winter gave forest lovers an opportunity for studying squirrels to an extent seldom possible, as the mildness of the weather made neither for long nor deep hibernation. I was surprised at the number and variety of places where the little animal had stored its winter hoards. The smallness of these, too, was noteworthy, as they seldom contained more than a handful of foodstuff.

The larders were in hollow trees, old birds' nests, but most often in the ground a little below the surface, and although many of the hoards were at the foot of trees, the favorite place was in a field bordering a wood and about twenty or thirty yards from the edge. The latter is probably the safest larder of all, as marauding rats and mice do not venture so far outside the wood in winter.

After watching the squirrel going from one hoard to another, I have little doubt that its ability to find these is not a matter of memory or of instinct, but of smell. It is the same highly-developed sense, too, that makes the squirrel an accomplished truffle hunter (for truffles are a great squirrel dainty), and I think that it must have been their smelling abilities that brought squirrels to a peach house in which they did a lot of damage.

Squirrel cunning defeated the most cleverly laid traps and other attempts at capture, and to save the fruit the unwelcome visitors had ultimately to be shot. The squirrel is one of the best game bird guards, and its winter stores have fed many a famished pheasant.

Beyond an occasional "chuck!" the squirrel does not pay much attention to a mere man, but immediately it [illegible] chatters loudly in the greatest excitement, and game birds never fail to profit by their sentinel's warnings, apparently knowing that the squirrel is no idle alarmist.

Pheasants scratch up and devour the squirrel's winter stores when other food is scarce, and as "pug" always wastes ten times the quantity of food he consumes, and scatters nuts, acorns, wild fruits and hedge berries which the game birds would not otherwise get, and which they thoroughly enjoy, it thus benefits them all the year round.

One of the prettiest sights is that of young squirrels taking their first lessons in climbing and jumping. Like most wild animals the squirrel can swim well when the occasion demands, but it does not love damp, and when passing through wet grass its tail is carried high and not fox-wise, as it usually is when the squirrel is in motion.—From the Scotsman.

MARRIAGE RESOLUTIONS

When Theodore Parker, the great American preacher, was married, he entered in his journal on his wedding-day the following resolutions:

First—Never, except for the best reasons, to oppose my wife's will.

Second—To discharge all duties for her sake freely.

Third—Never to scold.

Fourth—Never to look cross at her.

Fifth—Never to worry her with commands.

Sixth—To promote her piety.

Seventh—To bear her burdens.

Eighth—To overlook her foibles.

Ninth—To save, cherish, and for ever defend her.

Tenth—To remember her always in my prayers. Thus, God willing, we shall be blessed.

The commandments which Parker put upon himself are like the old decalogue, all comprehended in one word—love.

WHY HE FOUGHT

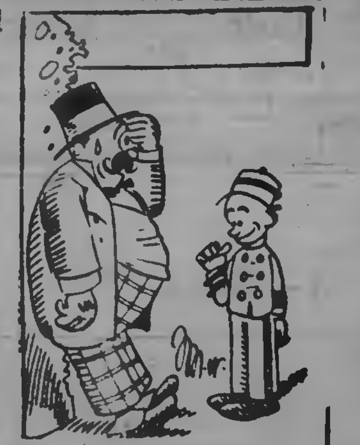
A defendant at Enfield the other day made the following answer to the accusation against him: "His little boy came to my house and said, 'Father sends kind regards, and he's waiting to do it on you.' I said, 'I don't fight in the street,' but he came and knocked the door; and I went out and had a go with him, and the ginger-beer man was referee."

A Foolish Fish

A curious angling story comes from Cornhill. An enthusiastic disciple of Isaak Walton was sitting musingly on the river's side, when he felt a tug at his line. He pulled suddenly, and the line gave way, the fish making off with the hook, worm and cast. Putting on a new cast, what was the angler's surprise to find on hooking a trout that it was the same one that had run off with his hook and line.

Peterborough vs. Lindsay Drummers.

Lindsay Warder: The Lindsay travelers will play an exhibition game of hockey next Friday night, according to present arrangements, against the drummers of Peterborough, the proceeds to be handed over to Ross Memorial Hospital. This game promises to provide untold amusement for players and spectators alike. Already Peterborough travelers are dieting on Postum and Quaker Oats.



HOME DUTIES

Stage Manager:—"Where is the six-year-old child-wonder? The audience is getting impatient."

Door-keeper:—"She's gone down to the station. Her daughter was married to-day and she wanted to see her off for her honeymoon."

NOT AN IMPOSTOR

He was a poor, downtrodden specimen of humanity, and the heart of the millionaire merchant was touched. He stopped for a moment to listen to the beggar's plea.

"I'm starving, sir," wailed the unfortunate one, and tears stood in his eyes. "And this is the last thing we have in the world—my poor wife's wedding-ring!"

Then the merchant remembered. He looked more closely into the man's face, and all of a sudden, became exceedingly mad.

"You—you scoundrel!" he spluttered. "Why, it was only last week I bought your wife's wedding ring from you to save you from starvation! You're an impostor, sir! Get—"

"An impostor!" cried the weary one indignantly. "Oh, no, sir! You're quite mistaken! This ring belongs to my second wife—I was married again last Monday!"

GREAT STUNT

Lady:—"What do you think? I have a maid who gets up early in the morning without being called."

Chorus of Voices: "Impossible!"

Lady:—"But it's true; she is to [illegible] with the milkman."

PRESENCE OF MIND

It was the annual concert of the Slowcombe Philharmonic Society, and the young man who came from the city was obviously bored.

At last one singer tried him more than usual. Lines of pain showed on his face. He leaned forward to express himself audibly to his elderly neighbor; for the young man, being musical, felt the need of sympathy.

"Did you ever hear, in the whole course of your existence," he whispered, in disgust, "such horribly discordant, ear-splitting—"

The old gentleman frowned.

"That's my daughter, sir, and if—"

But the young man waved aside the interruption and, with scarcely a tremor, went on:

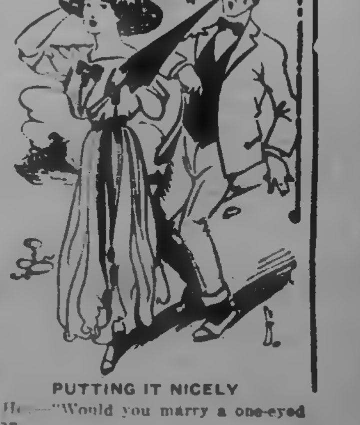
"Such ear-splitting chatter as these idiots behind us are making? Really, I can scarcely catch one word of the song!"

TOO MANY TRAINS

A railway guard busily engaged in getting his train ready to start accidentally trod on a lady's dress as she swept by.

"Oh, you clumsy man!" she exclaimed, the sudden weight from behind bringing her to a standstill. "Please be a little more careful."

"Beg pardon, madam," replied the guard; "but I can't possibly attend to two trains at once."



PUTTING IT NICELY

He:—"Would you marry a one-eyed man?"

She:—"Gracious! No."

He:—"Then you'd better let me carry your umbrella for you."

There are times when you don't have to be an acrobat to take a tumble to yourself.

Of Interest to Local Poultry Men.

It is generally known that the Peterborough Poultry Association is a live institution and advancing poultry breeding in this city and county. It will interest the chicken fanciers to learn that last week Mr. P. A. Ferguson, of Lindsay, had his hen house, weighing four tons, removed from his late residence on Kent street to Bond and Albert streets, of that burg. That is some hen house.

Couldn't Get Strong

SEEMED TO HAVE LOST ALL AMBITION, WAS PALE AND ANAEMIC.

Made Wonderful Recovery When Dr. Hamilton's Pills Were Used.

"I was never actually sick," writes Mrs. La Pierre, wife of a well-known resident of Labeniene, "yet I never could get strong like other women. I ate well enough, but somehow blood rich and red I could never make. When I married I took a great pride in my housekeeping, but it kept me tired all the time. Mrs. Lechance, my neighbor, looked well — she told me her health had been made by Dr. Hamilton's Pills. I only thought of pills as a physic, but now I know that Dr. Hamilton's Pills are more, for they quickened my stomach, liver and bowels—made me stouter and stronger, gave me such color in my cheeks as I never had before. They do good to parts in ways I need not mention in this letter, but I sincerely believe Dr. Hamilton's Pills should be used at regular intervals by every woman—that's why I write this letter."

No medicine invigorates a woman like Dr. Hamilton's Pills. 25c. per box, all dealers, or the Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Canada.

CARE OF POOR IN HOSPITAL.

A. E. Donovan's bill to amend the Charity Act, requiring municipalities to pay for the care of their poor in the hospitals of other municipalities stipulates that the superintendent of a hospital immediately upon the admission of a non-paying patient to a public ward in the hospital shall notify by registered post the clerk of the municipality from which the patient represents himself as being brought, that such patient has been admitted to the hospital, giving such particulars as may be ascertainable to enable the clerk of the municipality to identify the patient. Upon the discharge or death of such a patient the municipality from which [illegible] must pay the hospital's claim.

ROOSEVELT DISCREDITED.

In view of his glaring self-contradictions, his inconsistencies, and his exhibitions of petulance and childishness, the nomination of Colonel Roosevelt for the presidency would be almost a miracle. His warmest admirers must surely be grieved at his antics.

The publication of a letter written to a friend last summer by the colonel has put him in a very bad light. In this letter he declared not only that he would not be a candidate for nomination, but that he would take no part for or against the nomination of any candidate; moreover, that he was urging his close personal friends to do all in their power to prevent any movement looking to his nomination. The publication of this letter angered Mr. Roosevelt, and he denounced it as dishonorable; and yet in the letter he requested the gentleman to whom he wrote to send copies of it to certain mutual friends. How it could be regarded as dishonorable to publish a letter which the writer of it had desired to be circulated is a mystery.

MARRIAGE ANNULLED.

A summary of the judgments on marriages of Roman Catholics before Protestant ministers has been carefully collated in the 'Patrie,' with a view to showing what a very small place the judgment of Mr. Justice Charbonneau holds in the total volume of jurisprudence on the matter. The compiler of the information says, nothing can be counted fixed before a decision is reached by the Privy Council; but he evidently leans strongly to the view that Judge Charbonneau not only has the weight of judicial opinion against him, but is mistaken in his conclusions. Into this we do not assume to enter, further than to remark that in the presence of the terrible pressure in an opposite direction, Judge Charbonneau's opinion counts for more with us than half a dozen judgments that went with the stream. The thing that is important is to determine what the law is, so that we may learn whether there is any work for Parliament or not. It seems that according to quoted judgments, not only is a marriage of Roman Catholics before a Protestant minister null, but a marriage of Roman Catholics before another priest than the proper cure is null. This was held by Judge Polette in 1866. We have no hesitation in saying that if this is the law, it is damnable. It is simply incredible that a church should, through its own priest, celebrate a marriage in good faith, at least as regards one of the parties, and than that the church should pass judgment, not to punish its priest, not to impose spiritual penalties for breaking its rules, which it is of course free to do, however innocently the rules may have been broken, but to separate two persons who have actually, and under its auspices, become one in marriage, and to invoke the law of the land to enforce this separation. It may be right, and sometimes is right, to punish people who do things irregularly. For such irregularities there are depositions and penances and excommunications in the church, and fines and prisons in the state. But where a marriage exists de facto, and made in good faith on the part at least of one of the parties, and presumably, at the time, of both of them, neither party having been unmarriageable, to declare such not to have been a marriage, but a criminal connection, is altogether unholy and destructive of elementary morals. It is only necessary to convince the nation that such is the law, to raise a tremendous demand to have the law altered.

Editorial Notes

A correspondent writes The Times asking for a cure for headache. About the quickest and most permanent cure we know is to hold a government job, and then take part in elections. If the axe of dismissal does not separate that aching head from its weary shoulders, there is a change in recent local political conditions.

The New Ontario Insurance Act makes matters of protection, for the insured, more rigid. Section 133, says: "No agent, or paid officer, or officer of the bankers of the company, or person in the employment of the company, other than the manager, shall be eligible to be elected as a director, or shall interfere in the election of directors."

Under the new Ontario Insurance Act, for such purposes "Trade union" shall mean an organization of wage-earners of a particular trade or industrial calling constituted primarily and operated bona fide for regulation of wages and hours of labor as between employers and employed; but shall not include a co-operative association or society.

Kingston, Ont., has introduced a by-law to compel the barber shops in that city to close at 11 P.M. on Saturdays instead of at midnight. This seems a move in the right direction. Barbers are human beings as much as bank managers and enjoy an hour's leisure or an hour's sleep equally well. The man who cannot, or will not get round for his "scrape" before 11 P.M. had better invest in a safety razor and get busy Sunday or Monday morning.

An Ottawa despatch says, "Hon. Frank Cochrane intends to make [illegible] personal examination of the railways and canal systems of Canada during the coming summer. This is something which no other minister of railways and canals has ever attempted." Here is an opportunity for the City Council and Board of Trade of Peterborough to invite the Minister to stop over in this city. The Trent Canal is a sufficient reason and possible future results, another and equally practical reason.

The Ontario Government is considering an Act, entitled "The Ontario Insurance Act." A matter of local interest is that Section 5 says: "Assessment insurance" or "insurance on the assessment system," shall include any contract in which the premium, not being a premium note within the meaning of paragraph 46 of this section, consists of sums uncertain or variable in time, number or amount; and also any contract whereby the benefit is in any manner or degree made dependent upon the collection of sums levied upon persons holding similar contracts, or upon members of the contracting corporation, and shall also include any assessment insurance undertaken or transacted under the authority of The Insurance Act of Canada."

ED. M. ELLIOTT,

County Clerk.

Peterborough, February [illegible], 1912.

[illegible] a very formidable weapon in the hand of an angry woman or boy, as it is possible to knock a person down with it. Irkutsk people hang their milk on hooks instead of putting it in pans, though, of course, when warm spring weather comes, pans and pails are used, as the milk begins to melt.—Answers.

THE HEAD OF THE HOUSE

There is a man who fancies he is the head of his house. This particular man has several small children, and it pleases him to discourse a great deal on the training of children. A few days ago he had friends visiting him. His two little sons began to play about noisily. It is one of his theories that children should obey implicitly. He wanted his friends to see how he carried it out in the training of his own children.

"Johnny," he said, sternly, "stop that noise instantly."

Johnny looked up in surprise, then grinned a little.

"Oh, Freddy," he said to his brother, as they went on with the noise, "just hear papa trying to talk like mamma."

Caught a Big Salmon

The first catch on the Lake at Summerland, B.C., was an eight and a half pound salmon, which all the fishermen agreed was a fine indication of a good fishing season.

THE ASPIRING CHAUFFEUR

Chug, chug! Plonk, plonk! Choo, choo!

The motor-car dashed along the road at a tremendous speed, missed a woman by a split hair's-breadth, bumped over her less fortunate dog, and came to an abrupt halt.

"Dear me!" said the chauffeur, alighting.

The woman said more than "Dear me!" In fact, what she didn't say isn't worth printing.

"Can I—er—replace your dog?" suggested the chauffeur, getting in a word edgewise at about 3.45.

For a brief moment the woman regarded his be-goggled features. Then she retorted freezingly:

"You flatter yourself!"

A COMMON COMPLAINT

"What's the matter with you?" asked the Army doctor.

The recruit, who had been on the sick list ever since he had enlisted, shook his head sorrowfully.

"I dunno," he replied.

"You look well enough," commented the doctor. "How's the appetite?"

"I'd match an elephant at meals," answered the recruit. "It ain't that kind of illness, sir."

"Then I'm hanged if I know what kind it is!" exclaimed the Army medico. "How does it affect you?"

"Well, I eats well, and I drinks well, and I sleeps well," replied Thomas Atkins, rubbing his nose thoughtfully; "but directly I hear the word 'work,' I come all of a tremble!"

BOY MUSICIANS BEFORE KINGS

Children Who Earn More Than Cabinet Ministers—A Genius of Five Years

This can certainly be termed the age of baby prodigies, for the number of boys and girls of tender years who perform on the stage at the present time runs well over a score. A few Sarasates and Paderewski's in sashes and pinafores gain Royal recognition almost before the public has heard of them, and during the last week or two the inhabitants of a street in Maida Vale have been surprised, if not exactly pleased, by brilliant five-o'clock-in-the-morning performances on a grand piano of rhapsodies by Liszt and Chopin waltzes.

At first it was imagined that an old professor had taken up his abode in the neighborhood, but it has just come to light that the pianist is Master Erwin Nyiregyhazi, of Budapest, who is only [illegible] years of age. Erwin has apparently been practising for a Royal performance, for soon he will play before King George and Queen Mary.

Although the boy will not become a public artist before he reaches the age of [illegible], it is understood that he will give a series of drawing-room concerts. He appeared at the Duchess of Rutland's house in Arlington Street, Piccadilly, and gave a wonderful exhibition of technique and memory. He played with perfect fluency works by Bach, Handel, Chopin, Rachmaninoff, Mozart, Grieg, and Liszt.

After the unveiling of Queen Victoria's Memorial the German Emperor and Empress drove to St. Dunstan's, Regent Park, where they were present at a garden-party given by Lord and Lady Londesborough. The Kaiser took a great deal of interest in David Paget, the "boy fiddler," who played a couple of selections, appearing before the Royal party in the clothes which he wore during the latter days of his street peregrinations, for some time ago he was found playing to a theatre queue in a London thoroughfare. Paget, who is ten years old, was awarded first prize in a recent competition held for street-players. He performed the Intermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusticana" before the German monarch with remarkable skill.

His Majesty of Potsdam quite recently instructed Hans von Garnier, a boy musician, to write him an opera. It was six years ago when the Kaiser first became interested in the boy, who is now sixteen years of age. Garnier had composed a Grenadier March, which his Majesty thought so well of that he ordered its inclusion in the list of the so-called German Army marches for infantry and cavalry. A little while ago Garnier composed a Review March, to be played during the "Present," when the Emperor [illegible] and this was played, by Royal order, at a banquet of the Territorial battalions.

Moritz [illegible], who commenced to play [illegible] distinction as a composer of music. He has conducted an orchestra of 180 players in some of his own compositions before the German Emperor, and conducted the Garde Republicaine, the famous Parisian band, in a concert consisting exclusively of his own pieces. He also won prominence in this country by giving a concert of his compositions to his own conducting with Mr. Dan Godfrey's band at Bournemouth, on the outskirts of which city, by the way, he was born.

Mischa Elman, is another wonderful boy musician. He was thought good enough to play a concerto at the Birmingham Triennial Festival in 1906. Young Mischa was a pupil of Professor Auer, of St. Petersburg, who described him as the future Joseph Joachim.—Tit-Bits.

AND STILL SOME VACANCIES

George W. Perkins Recalls a Humorous Western Advertisement

George W. Perkins, who has withdrawn from the banking-house of J. P. Morgan & Co. to devote himself to the great public questions of the day, said at a recent dinner in New York:

"Ours is a country of phenomenal prosperity. There is no such prosperity anywhere else on earth. Here we have work for all."

Mr. Perkins smiled.

"In fact," he said, "we have such a scarcity of labor here that the Western farmer was hardly joking when he inserted in the newspapers this 'want ad.':

"'Wanted—Harvest hands. Hired girl blonde and pleasant. Phonograph music during meals. Pie three times a day. Six lumps of sugar to each cup of coffee. Hammocks, leather divans, cosy corners, feather-beds. Rising-hour, 10 a.m. Organ concert every evening. Free chewing and smoking. Come one, come all.'"

OPPOSED TO POLYGAMY

In connection with the application of a Mohammedan woman, Sir J. Wessels at Johannesburg recently decided that no person could bring into the Transvaal more than one wife. A protest has now been made by the Indian community to the Minister of the Interior, in which it is pointed out that polygamy is a recognized institution in India.

Prefers Indian Dress

A growing number of Indians are adopting European dress. For our own part we think this is very much to be regretted in itself. We wish Indians would retain their own easy and dignified dress, and spare their money for something more worth having than cheap and ugly imitations of European clothes.—Madras Weekly Mail.

A BABY SUPERSTITION

In the annual report of the Medical Officer of Health for Stepney it is stated that there is a curious objection on the part of some women to weigh their babies. It is often their firm belief that if a baby is weighed it will die before it is a year old.

A VETERAN COMPOSITOR

One of the oldest compositors in Scotland, Mr. John White, has retired from the service of The Glasgow Herald. Mr. White, though in his eightieth year, is a man of remakable vigor. He was 64 years at the "case."

Proven Oil Lands
Consisting of 240 Acres, King's County, Coalinga, California, U.S.A.

The Company's property consists of 240 acres of patented and proven OIL-BEARING LAND, situated in King's County, California, east of the croppings; and they have already struck oil which is high gravity, 33 per cent., and a "gusher" is confidently expected on from 400 to 600 feet additional drilling.

In this particular location THERE ARE NO DRY HOLES. Many companies in Coalinga have the same capitalization, or greater than that of the DOMINION OIL COMPANY, have control of only 20, 40 or 80 acres, and even these companies are making big money for their shareholders. Compared with them, the holdings of the DOMINION OIL COMPANY are immense, and when developed and producing oil should be worth MILLIONS OF DOLLARS. The Company's well has been drilled to a depth of 2480 feet.

The Canadian Coalinga Company, which adjoins the DOMINION OIL COMPAEY'S property on the north, have their well down about 3000 feet, at which depth the oil came in, and is now producing 7500 barrels per day, which means an income of $8250 per day, and their stock is selling at $20.00 per share. This well is only a short distance from the one now being drilled by the DOMINION OIL COMPANY. Mr. G. W. Warner, who has charge of the DOMINION OIL COMPANY'S development work, and who is without doubt one of the best authorities on oil, predicts that with from 400 to 600 feet further drilling, the DOMINION OIL COMPANY will strike the same flow, and he believes that the Company will get an enormous flow of the light oil, for which there is a ready market at from $1.10 per barrel up.

EQUIPMENT AND DEVELOPMENT: The property of the Dominion Oil Company is thoroughly equipped with the most modern and improved standard drilling rig, derrick and bunk house to comfortably house and accommodate its men, and the drilling of the first well is being rapidly pushed. The well is now over 2480 feet in depth, and the first oil has been encountered, but another 500 to 600 feet will have to be drilled before encountering the rich pay sands. It is the intention of the Directors to GREATLY INCREASE THE EQUIPMENT, and other wells will be drilled and development pushed in a vigorous manner. The development so far has been carried on mainly at the expense of the Directors.

DIVIDENDS: This is what most interests the investors. We would be glad if we could tell you when and how much you will make if you will join us, but we cannot. As business men, we will not try to deceive you by glowing forecasts regarding the future. Judging, however, by what others have done and are doing, the returns on your money should be ample to satisfy the most exacting. We promise you as early returns as possible, consistent with good management, and we promise you every penny your money earns in the enterprise, pro rata with your holdings in the Company. To do more than this would be to "count your chickens before they are hatched," and to put a premium on deception. We make no big promises, but the Company's property is big. The Directors' intentions are sincere, and our judgment is that your investment will be safer with us and far more profitable to you, and in a shorter time than with those who figure out just how much you will make providing certain things happen, as well as the day and hour you will get your dividends. The officers of this Company have far more invested than any treasury stock holder is liable to invest, and are giving brains and time without salaries. They are anxious for dividends as soon as possible, but they cannot get them any sooner than you do, for all are going to be treated alike. This ought to appeal to you as an investor, for you are placing your money with men who believe they have the best proposition going, but do not promise you great things just to get you to invest.

The stock is now selling very rapidly, and as this is an investment of an exception[illegible] PROSPECTUS and full particulars of the DOMINION OIL COMPANY, which will be mailed to you without any obligation or expense on your part.

Her cheeks flushed and her eyes blazed. "Who told you that?" she asked, angrily.

"Several people. It has been common talk."

Her anger gave way to sobs. "Oh, Frank," she pleaded, as she flung herself on his neck. "It isn't true—it isn't true."

A great load was lifted from his heart. "No, Frank," she went on, "it isn't true; there were only four."

WANT THE STRAPS BARRED.

At the meeting of the Rules Committee of the American Trotting Association a deputation representing a large number of members appeared and argued that the rule barring hopples should not be rescinded at present; that in their opinion it had not been given a fair trail, as it had only applied to two or three year olds and that it should be continued in force at least two years longer. This deputation further showed that racing races in which hopples had been barred offered by the State fairs of Iowa, Nebraska and South Dakota over half-mile tracks had proved more successful and received more entries and starters than had those in which hopples were hen barred.

WASTE NOT WANT NOT SOUP.

Get from your butcher 1 lb. of ends and trimmings of meat and some bones; place in a saucepan, cover well with water. Put in any raw and cooked vegetables you have, celery stalks, rinds and bones of bacon, scraps of bread and toast, seasoning of herbs, salt, and pepper, scraps of poultry or veal, some rice and minced parsley. Simmer gently for three hours, removing the fat occasionally. Strain through a colander, and serve very hot. Poach two or three eggs, and add them after the soup is in the tureen.

Satchets With Violet Perfume.

Mix equal quantities of powdered orrisroot and ground cloves with a little musk and attar of roses, the whole moistened with a little alcohol, and then rolled and kneaded into a paste. It will in time get quite stiff. Break the mass up finely and pack into satchets.

HOME-GROWN

He was a seedy, sad, sick-looking individual. His coat was gritty and grimy, and his countenance showed a close and unwashed friendship with Mother Earth. The large boquet in his buttonhole, despite its size and bright color, did not relieve his deplorable condition. It only seemed to accentuate it.

Yet he was nothing worse than a neighbor who had dropped in to pay Jones a call.

"How are you?" he said, extending an ungloved paw. "Nice day, ain't it? Everything's bloomin'. What do you think of my buttonhole?"

"Charming!" replied Jones politely.

"Yes, ain't it?" said its owner proudly. "Now, where d'you suppose I got it—eh?"

Jones bestowed upon the flower and the dirty coat-lapel on which it was pinned a thoughtful scrutiny.

"I give it up," he answered at last. "Did it grow there?"

HOUSEHOLD SUGGESTIONS

A moderate oven is one in which a piece of white paper will become golden brown in 12 minutes.

A convenience and economy for the oil or gasoline stove is a three part cooker which can be used over one burner. The pans are separated so that three articles can be cooked at the same time.

Rinse out the dish cloths frequently and let them bleach on the grass in the sun to keep them sweet. There is nothing like the sun as a purifier. Use it lavishly and your health will be better and the house purer.

To relieve ear ache, irrigate the ear with warm water. Arrange the patient so that the water can run out of the ear into a receptacle or into cloths which will absorb it. Have the water of slightly more than tepid warmth and allow it to run slowly into the ear until relieved. Cover the ear afterwards with warm woollen cloths.

Little chicks require plenty of fresh water in their reach in hot weather. If this is neglected you will be disappointed in the growth and health of your chicks.

STATUE OF THE KING

Mr. Arthur Rogers, AR.C.A., is now engaged upon the creation of a colossal bronze statue of King George V. This, mounted upon a lofty pedestal, will stand at the summit of the main steps leading to the grounds of the Crystal Palace; thus his Majesty will seem to be always overlooking the Festival of the Empire. The King will be represented wearing his Coronation robes, and holding his sceptre in his hand. The sculptor was a prominent pupil at the Manchester School of Arts.

CLEANING HINTS

If you have some shabby leather chairs that want renovating, boil half a pound of linseed oil, and, when cold, mix it with half a pint of vinegar. Pour a little of this on to a clean flannel, and rub well into the leather, and polish with a soft silk duster.

Rusty curtain-hooks and rings should be soaked in water that has a drop of black ammonia dissolved in it. The dirt and rust will soon come off, and a final polish with whiting will make them quite bright again.

"Well, I don't blame you for not taking chances."

Potato Dumplings

Take one egg well beaten, one pint of sweet milk, a cupful of mashed potatoes, hot and seasoned, a small lump of butter, and enough flour to make a stiff batter. When nearly all the flour is used, add two scant teaspoonfuls of baking-powder, and work in as lightly as possible. Drop in small lumps into boiling gravy, and cook for twenty minutes. These will help out nicely a dinner that threatens to be rather scanty.

Dustless Dusters

A great deal can be saved by making your own dustless dust cloths by the following recipe: One-third ounce oil of paraffin mixed with one pint of coal oil. Wash a piece of black cheesecloth in this and you will have a dustless dust cloth harmless to any furniture. The above quantity makes three yards.

PLENTY OF SOAP AND FRESH AIR

An English Borough Proposes to Make People Healthy — Suggestions Added by Correspondent

The Paddington Borough Council are considering the enactment of a new set of by-laws, to provide that every lodger in a tenement house shall, except in special circumstances, cause his bedroom windows to be opened for at least one hour in the morning and one hour in the afternoon; and to have the floor of his bedroom or bedrooms swept daily and washed at least once a week.

"As one who is all for fresh air and plenty of soap and water, I welcome with joy this step on the part of the Paddington Fathers," says a correspondent, who thereupon proposes that the additional by-laws be adopted:-

Any person or persons doing anything prohibited by or otherwise offending against any of the following by-laws shall be liable for every such offence to a penalty not exceeding forty shillings for a first offence, and not exceeding five pounds for any subsequent offence.

All plates, dishes, cups, glasses, knives, forks, spoons, saucepans, frying pans and other utensils, implements and instruments used in the preparation and consumption of supper shall be washed, scoured, dried and otherwise made clean overnight, and not left to be washed up with the breakfast things in the morning.

All chimneys, flues, and other passages, holes, and recesses to which smoke has regular access shall be swept once in every three months, and the resultant soot preserved for the cultivation of Coronation Sweet Peas.

All grates, ranges, and stoves shall be blackleaded, and all stone and concrete hearths, whether cracked or sound, as well as all doorsteps and window-sills shall be whitened, once every seven days.

No cobwebs shall be allowed to hang suspended from any ceiling in any room, passage, closet, or cupboard for a longer period than one calendar month.

All beds that have been slept in overnight shall be stripped, and the mattress or mattresses turned back, immediately upon the occupant arising in the morning, and allowed thus to remain airing for a period of at least one hour from such time.

All beds shall be re-made by 10 o'clock a.m.

Once every seven days the bottom sheet of each bed in every bedroom in every house in the Borough shall be removed, and the top sheet substituted for it, and a clean sheet substituted for the top sheet thus transferred.

Every occupant of every house shall wash, or cause to be washed, his or her face, [illegible] and no less than three inches of neck, at least once every twenty-four hours.

Every male occupant of every house shall shave, or cause to be shaved, his chin, [illegible] and top lip at least once every three days; provided always that such male occupant does not grow a beard, and moustache (which is to be deprecated), or has not reached such age as is favorable to the production or growth of face moss.

Every female occupant of every house shall have her hair out of curling pins or curl papers by midday at the latest each day (Saturdays excepted), and all hooks and eyes securely fastened.

Every child occupant of every house shall have his or her nose duly wiped by some qualified person at least three times a day, and four times on Sundays.

THE NEED OF MEN

Work In Every Field Not Only Remains But Increases

More men are needed in the world to-day than ever before, because there is more to do—more different things to make, more actual people to support. Fifteen years ago the bicycle makers would have been frightened into bankruptcy if you had told them that in 1910 their trade would have almost disappeared. But what do we see now? The coming of automobiles has given work to all the bicycle men and thousands more. And it is so in other businesses and professions. The point to remember is that, while the form of work changes, the work in every field remains, and even increases. The real claims are not all taken up. Alexander the Great was only a fool when he wept because there were no more worlds to conquer. He didn't use his eyes to see with, but only to weep with.

PREFER BIG CLOTHES

The male portion of our United States visitors (says the Tailor and Cutter) might generally pass as native born subjects of this country if it were not for their obtrusively easy-fitting garments. The United States is a big country, and many of her subjects seem to prefer looking a few sizes larger than Nature intended them to be. Their coats are usually cut about four inches larger than they ought to be, and then built up with wadding and haircloth until there is a semblance of outline agreeable to the American idea of largeness.

DIAMONDS IN HEAPS

Most of the Largest Ones Have Been Found Accidentally

Diamonds to the value of $20,000,000 are extracted from Kimberley annually. Everything impresses you at the mines except the diamonds. Shaken by machines on to greased tables, over which dirty water is constantly passing, they have no lustre in their raw state, and even when seen in heaps of all sizes on the office counters, it is impossible to think of Hatton Garden cheques.

Passing envy is followed by wonder that minerals so plentiful and so cheaply extracted (the cost may be given roughly as $1.40 per load, and the yield $[illegible] per load) should be the coveted hall-mark of wealth and fashion. There is infinitely more beauty in a wayside flower—until you see the cut diamond fashioned at Amsterdam. They have a box of finished diamonds at the Kimberley offices of De Beers.

It is a strange thing that most of the largest diamonds have been found by accident. This was the case with the great Cullinan diamond, which an overseer discovered by accident.

COST OF TUBERCULOSIS

E. F. McSweeney's Estimate is $100 Per Family a Year

"Preventable disease, the greatest item in which is tuberculosis and the other expenses which grow out of it, costs each family on this continent at the minimum $100 a year." This is a verdict of a most thorough and cautious estimate by expert statisticians, and it errs, if anything, on the conservative side. It is a sentence, the nugget of the discourse, taken from an address on "Tuberculosis as a factor in the increased cost of living," delivered at Denver by Mr. Edward F. McSweeney, chairman of the board of trustees of the Boston Consumptives' Hospital. The guess that preventable disease has been a large share of the growing weight of living expenses is not a new one, but the thoroughness with which the proofs have been searched out by Mr. McSweeney is novel and convincing. The nations have searched and found five major causes of this increase, namely, waste, extravagance, armed peace, inefficiency and the burden of crime, pauperism, accident and disease. By the most cautious estimate the yearly money cost of tuberculosis alone in the United States is $622,513,904, and on the present ratio of deaths annually from this disease as compared with the deaths from all other causes 10,000,000 of people now living will eventually die of tuberculosis. The constructive [illegible] Mr. McSweeney's discourse [illegible] the proof that the treatment [illegible] cases is a failure, [illegible] bad conditions [illegible] and that the prevention [illegible] from the advanced cases [illegible] must be [illegible] York is following [illegible] has now been recognized [illegible]. The rigid medical [illegible] school children is one [illegible] prevention and "we will solve the tuberculosis question when we settle the problems of child labor, play [illegible], long hours and bad factory and housing conditions." This [illegible] that the crusade is [illegible] for physicians and [illegible]. "This is [illegible] man's crusade, and should be led by the Chamber of Commerce."

A PECULIAR HYBRID

What has been aptly described as a hybrid between a needle and a frog has been grown by two eminent French scientists, M. Bataillon and M. Henneguy. The eggs of a frog have been fertilized purely by a mechanical stimulus, pricking them with a fine platinum or glass needle. The needle has been as remarkable in its effects as Aaron's rod, for the eggs have on being placed in sterilized water, developed into tadpoles just as though a male frog had fathered them into existence.

Chronic Throat Trouble Permanently Cured

SEVEN DAYS' USE OF CATARRHOZONE PERFORMED REGULAR MIRACLE.

Miss Counter's Case Proves the Wonderful Efficacy of Catarrhozone In All Throat and Nose Troubles.

Windsor, Ont., Jan. 17.—Miss Counter's case will prove of great interest to everyone troubled with sore throat bronchitis or weak lungs.

When asked for a statement, Miss Counter said: "About seven years ago I contracted a heavy cold that settled on my lungs and resisted a treatment. After I had tried several doctors here and specialists in Detroit without benefit, I went to my druggist and asked him for the best remedy he had for cold on the lungs. He recommended Catarrhozone, which cured my cold in one week. It brought back my voice, and I have been ever since free from my old trouble. For coughs, colds and lung trouble I am sure that Catarrhozone is the best remedy. It goes right to the sore spot, gives quick relief, and makes a lasting cure."

Catarrhozone cures because its healing vapor is inhaled to the very places that are sore and inflamed.

To permanently cure your winter ills, your coughs, sneezing and Catarrh, by all means use a tried and proven remedy like Catarrhozone. But beware of the substitutor and imitator. Look for Catarrhozone only, 50c. and $1.00, at all dealers, or by mail from the Catarrhozone Company, Buffalo, N. Y., and Kingston, Canada.

MEN AND WOMEN, ODD CONTRAST

A Writer Who Dilates on "The Curious Conceit of Men and the Modesty of Women"

If there is one sin from which the average man considers himself free, it is the sin of vanity. Vanity, he firmly believes, is the prerogative of women. Women are vain, dear creatures, he will tell his wife or lover while he fondly pinches her cheek, says Answers.

The wife or lover is generally too wise to [illegible] him, but there never was a woman yet who did not wonder at the marvellous vanity of men.

As a matter of fact, there is scarcely any difference between men and children in this respect. A child with a new pair of shoes will not rest content until everybody in the house has gone into raptures over both shoes and wearer, separately and together. And a man's method of attracting notice to his splendor are—to women—hardly less simple.

For Those She Loves

Women, on the contrary, are singularly free from vanity. You laugh and point to a lady's mirrors, and her [illegible] in them at every possible [illegible]. My dear young man, you do not understand. A woman will take infinite pains to dress herself to please [illegible] she loves—although he seldom notices it—or to annoy somebody she hates. If she pleases her loved one she is in the seventh heaven, as she certainly is if she annoys the other woman. But she never admires herself in the way that a young man admires his invisible moustache.

Men, too, are free from a terrifying danger which hangs over a woman from the age of fourteen to the age of ninety or so—the criticism of other women. How terrifying this may be men can seldom understand.

A man may wear a battered straw hat for ever and ever, and go about in shabby trousers on Sundays, and his friends will not think it worth while to notice; whereas a woman dare not have a button out of place without all the ladies in the district noticing it.

Hence the agony of mind that a woman suffers if she thinks her back hair is coming down is not at all due to vanity. And hence the mirrors which thoughtful shopkeepers provide so abundantly.

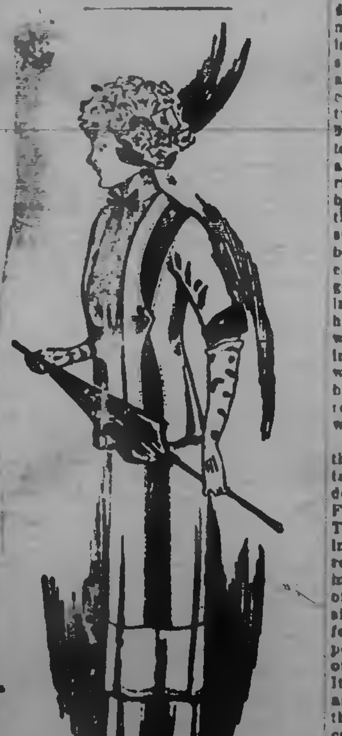
The Lady-Killing Youth

Even when you come to pretty girls, who might very well be excused for having their heads turned, there is no approach to the vanity of the lady-killing youth. A pretty girl takes her prettiness as a gift from the fairies, to be tended as the gardener tends a beautiful plant. It is her duty, a necessity to her self-respect, to look nice.

Contrast her with the average handsome man. Here you have vanity so monumental that a woman can only gasp. To his lady friends the handsome boy invariably adopts a sorry-my-dear-you-love-me-but-I-can't-help-it-makes-a-sensible-girl ywantshrdlau-you-know tone of voice, which at first makes a sensible girl want to slap him, then amuses her, and then makes her yawn.

But he never changes. He is the same year after year; and though he considers himself such a superior being, he is always as anxious to attract the attention of washerwomen as that of duchesses.

So, mothers, pray that your babies will lose their beauty when they become men. A woman will carry her beauty as it should be carried, neither scorning it nor worshipping it. The handsome man loses his head early in life, and never finds it again.



SERGE AND SILK COAT SUIT

A few wise designers have ventured to prophesy a vogue for green and blue in the wake of the flood of red which has rushed upon us this season, and some lovely models have been made up in these combined shades. Take for example this suit. The design is exceedingly chic and the material is a diagonal serge in the new king's blue. Inset pieces in skirt and coat are green taffeta. The idea of inset pieces of taffeta is new and effective, and may be copied in self-tone silk with equally good results.

Every reporter in every small town or city is anxious to procure personals. The reporters of Kingston, however, have a steady source for such news, and still they do not seem to use it. Strangers are going almost daily to the Limestone City to take up residence for long periods, and, still their respective arrivals are not noted in the press of that city. The visitors referred to reside at the Penitentiary.

WINTER EXERCISE

Ball Players Will be Better off Out of Doors

"There is nothing like outdoor exercise during the winter time to put a baseball player in proper condition," remarked George McBride, the crack baseman of the Washington club in the American League during a fanning bee. "There are many players who during the winter months take to all sorts of indoor games, such as basketball, baseball, bowling and the like, to get into condition for the playing season, but I do not agree with them as to the benefits derived from such a course. It has been my experience that a ball player who was outside all the summer season, gains a great deal more by following the same method during the winter time—that is, taking exercise outdoors, such as skating, walking and, in fact, anything along that line with a little pleasure connected with it. During the last two months I have done a great deal of walking about the city and around to the outskirts, and have also put a great deal of time skating at the rink and on the river. I do a little bowling now and then, but not with the heavy finger balls, as I think the strain is too much with that kind. I bowl the pony ball, which is light and easily handled, and there is no danger of overtaxing your throwing arm in bowling that kind of a game. I have noticed that several ball players whom I know and who did nothing but indoor work during the winter season were in the poorest condition to play baseball in the spring, and for that reason I keep away from the indoor work as much as possible.

"It may sound strange," continued the Washington captain, "but this talk during the last few weeks of independent leagues bring to mind the Fletcher deal of a year or so ago? There were many of the star players in both the big leagues who were ready to go over to the Fletcher movement, especially when they were offering big bonuses to those who signed contracts. I, myself, was offered a contract by the Fletcher people, and a most flattering one, but, of course, nothing ever came of it. It seems to me that the major leagues are adopting a very wise course in the proposed extension of the American Association into cities like Detroit, Cleveland, Cincinnati and Pittsburgh, for with continuous ball there it will make it much harder for the leagues to get a footing. In my opinion, the players will be slow to accept anything of that kind as long as the major-league magnates treat them fairly, and I guess most of them are doing that now."

RAPID HYDROPLANE

The Oregon Wolf, a nine-cylinder hydroplane, in a sanctioned race against time at Portland, broke the world's motor boat records on a five-mile course for all distances up to thirty miles. The Oregon Wolf's time for the thirty miles was 42 minutes 14 2-5 seconds, the best previous record over a six-lap course was 44 minutes 33 1-5 seconds.

Two boys in Kingston have been arrested for stealing coal. This was a most reprehensible act! Still, with the price of coal now-a-days, and diamonds only being worth about $200 a karat, there might have been great temptation. The boys had manufactured a home-made sleigh to draw away the hundred pounds of coal they stole. Thus the act was premeditated. The article from which this information was gleaned did not say whether the boys were going to have the coal made into jewellery or just put it in the kitchen stove.

COMMITS A MURDER AND KILLS HIMSELF

Georgetown, Tex., Mar. 11.—Geo. T. Sneed, father of Beal Sneed, the principal in the Snead-Boyce case, which closed in a mistrial in Fort Worth last week, was shot and killed here yesterday by one of his farm tenants, R. O. Hillard. The assailant then killed himself. He left a note stating that his act was caused by a desire for revenge.

Hillard met Sneed at the postoffice and opened fire on him with a 45-calibre pistol. Sneed ran several steps. With two bullets through his body, he fell to the sidewalk, after which Hillard shot him twice more.

LIGHT THAT DOES NOT FAIL

A Volcanic Beacon in San Salvador Republic

The republic of San Salvador is the only government on earth that collects lighthouse fees on account of a volcano that it owns, and without the slightest cost of upkeep.

The volcanic beacon is about eight miles inland from the port of Acajutla, and its pillar of cloud by day and its fire sky by night are visible for many miles out to sea. It bursts forth every seven minutes, and is just as accurate as any revolving light that warns mariners of danger in any part of the world.

This volcano has been keeping up this seven-minutes' service of eruptions ever since anyone can remember. It is a favorite amusement of visitors to sit by the hour during the lazy afternoons, and, watch in hand, to time the eruptions till they tire of the occupation and fall asleep. No one has ever caught the volcano napping, however.

Every vessel that puts in at Acajutla has to pay its lighthouse fee. There is no other lighthouse than the volcano, but that is a sufficient excuse for the Government of Salvador to make a charge for its services. The explosions that accompany the eruptions sound like detonations of heavy charges of dynamite, but, fortunately, they are not sufficient to shake the ground perceptibly more than about a mile or two from the summit of the crater.

A FUNNY PROPOSITION

The Boston Transcript makes the very pertinent remark that man is a funny proposition, because, when he reads a medical book, he fancies he has every disease described; but when he reads the work of a moralist all the faults that are pointed out he sees, not in himself, but in his neighbor.

THE OLDEST FLAG

The flag of Denmark, a plain red banner bearing on it a white cross, is the oldest flag now in existence. For 300 years both Norway and Sweden were united with Denmark under this flag. In the year 1219 King Waldemar of Denmark, when leading his troops to battle against the Livonians, saw, or thought he saw, a bright light in the form of a cross in the sky. He held this appearance to be a promise of Divine aid, and pressed forward to victory. From this time he had the cross placed on the flag of his country, and called it the Dannebork—that is, strength of Denmark.

SORE SHOLDERS, YOUNG HORSES

Large Collars are Usually the Cause—Colts Should be Gradually Toughened to Work

The care of the shoulders of young horses is one of the most important factors to keep in mind during the first few weeks of the spring work.

A horse can not do satisfactory work with shoulders that pain him every time he takes a step. The horse may be looked upon as a machine that is expected to do so much work, and if some of the mechanism is out of order, then the amount of work is lessened. But, also the animal must be looked upon as a creature with feeling and ambition, taking pride in its work, that is a willing, obedient, and, therefore, valuable servant; and should be properly cared for.

The first thing of importance to consider in the draft horse is the collar. Most injured shoulders are the result of poorly-fitting collars, and the fault usually lies in a collar being too large. It is a good idea to have a harness-maker fit the collars to your horses. He may be able to remove padding, and in other ways make the collar over so that it will fit nicely. Heavy collar pads are to be avoided if possible. They are hot and cause the shoulder to sweat; this keeps the pad and shoulder wet, and the skin becomes soft and blisters easily.

Dirty collars are probably as responsible for sore shoulders as ill-fitting ones. In the spring the horse's hair is long and holds large quantities of dirt and scales from the skin. He is soft from lack of work and sweats profusely. This forms a gummy dirt that adheres to the collar and makes, when dry, a hard, tough surface. The ordinary farm hand feels that his duty is done if he scrapes the dirt from the collar with the back of his jack-knife. This method, however, is not an especially good one for the leather of the collar, and a smooth surface is not left. A damp sponge used in the evening as soon as the collar is taken off will, in one or two minutes, remove the dirt. This may be followed by an oiled rag. If this is done, the collar, in the morning should be soft and smooth.

Careless driving, jerking a horse out of the furrow and into it again, allowing him to work with his head around on one side, all tend to produce sore shoulders.

Of course, the first precaution to take is not to ask the colt to do a full day's work until he learns something about his job and ceases to fret. The shoulders will then gradually become toughened. It is a good idea to sponge the shoulders with cold water—just plain cold water. Alum water has been used to good advantage; also weak solutions of tannic acid. Alco- [illegible] the top of the neck very frequently terminate in fistulas, withers, etc. A blister near the point of the shoulder is likely to become a callous and form what is known as a "cold abcess." Ill-fitting collars and poor drivers are equally responsible for a condition known as "sweeny."

If an accident occurs and in spite of careful attention a horse's shoulder becomes injured, do not wait until a fistula has developed, or an abcess has formed, or the animal is "sweened," but seek the advice of a veterinary while there is still a chance to check the progress of the injury. This is not the proper place to teach the treatment of such conditions after the injury has been done; it takes years of school work to do that, but it is a good opportunity to impress upon the minds of horse owners that such unfortunate things may be entirely avoided.

LIME AND ITS USES

Helps Land to Digest Manure and Other Matter

Expressed simply and as a simile, the application of lime to land assists it to "digest" manure and other animal matter; it prevents the soil from becoming sour and callous; it causes it to yield up readily its full proportion of plant food; and it assists root action.

Although in these days of artificial manure lime is not so highly necessary as it was, an application will work wonders with most soils, particularly with those that have been neglected; and the small holder breaking up old pasturage for the purpose of close cultivation will find an application almost essential.

Generally speaking, it is better to give light dressings frequently rather than a heavy dressing occasionally; and, further, you should buy from a reputable source, or you may obtain mixed with the material a quantity not effectually treated in the kiln. For light soils a ton and a half of lime to the acre should be ample, but heavy soils need more liberal treatment.

SORT OF SOW TO BREED FROM

In considering the efficiency of brood sows, Henry Wallace gives the following advice: Go over those that have had pigs the present year and ask them the following questions: How many pigs did you have this year? Were they all good ones, or did you have two or three choice pigs and were the rest inferior? How did you take care of those pigs? Are you a good suckler? Are you good-natured? Are you a good mother, or are you one of the nervous, fidgety kind, always worrying and fretting for fear somebody will hurt you and your precious piglets? If the brood sow on being interrogated, cannot give satisfactory answers to these questions, it is not worth while to scold her or give her a moral lecture. Just turn her into the fattening pen; for there is where she belongs.

How many hens do you have in your flock that do not pay their board? This may be the reason you do not find poultry profitable. Eliminate the unprofitable hens.

Chicago, Mar. 11.—"The discovery of the South Pole, besides being a geographical achievement, will enable scientists to make long time weather predictions, which has been an object of work for centuries," said Prof. T. C. Chamberlain, head of the Department of Geology of the University of Chicago, last night.

"Heretofore we have been enabled to trace the winds and storms up until the time they entered the Antarctic Circle. At this point we lose trace of them absolutely, and do not know where to watch for their re-appearance. It now becomes possible

Can Do No Damage If Given No Place to Lay Their Eggs

When the sheep's wool becomes filthy and the skin irritated, an ideal condition is made for the work of the maggot fly. And when the maggots get a start they create a more and more friendly harbor for their kind as they work and increase in numbers under the wool. A sheep infected with maggots is a most pitiful sight, helpless against the parasites eating out its flesh until the sheep dies, its flesh gnawed out in a most cruel manner. For the sake of humanity, if for no other reason, sheep should be saved from much suffering.

These flies can do no damage if not given a suitable place to lay their eggs. Sheep should be watched carefully, especially in warm damp weather, and dirty tag-locks or other filth clipped off and a little tar dabbed on if the skin is chafed. These maggots also get in their work under rams' horns. Indeed, a ram with heavy horns lying close to his head will hardly pass through a summer without infection unless the flies are kept away by putting some tar on the ram's head.

An infected sheep can be told by the fact that it refuses to eat, stands with its head down and most often by itself, and stamps its feet or jerks its head exactly as irritation by maggots would lead one to expect. The remedy is simple. Cut away the wool close. Clean out all maggots, using turpentine to wash them out. Smear the place thoroughly with tar. Then watch the sheep to see that the flies do not again start in the same place. Thoroughness in cleaning out the parasites is essential, for one left in will start the damage all over.

GOOD CHICKENS

Something to Keep them Busy—The Ideal Pen

Chickens that are penned up should have their houses cleaned out twice a week at least, and their runs dug up (to loosen the earth) once a week, which enables them to have a little exercise in the way of scratching. Their morning meal should consist of potato peelings and all scraps from the table, boiled down and thickened, after draining well, with barley meal, with a dash of pepper in, and when cooled down, given; their water vessels washed and filled. For mid-day meal, a good size cabbage, hung to allow them to get round it, and high enough for them to peck at, which keeps them busy for some considerable time, and, for a change, a swede hung is very good, too. For their last meal give barley, a little wheat, or darry, and occasionally, small Indian corn. A box kept in the run, with all fine ashes saved [illegible] days, [illegible]. A handful of peppercorns thrown in to them about once a month helps to keep them in good condition, and their houses should be limewashed occasionally.

CLEANING MEN'S CLOTHES

The Best Mixture for the Removal of Grease Spots

The cleaning of a dust-laden old coat reduces the average woman to despair, as it is hard work, and the easiest way to clean a coat or pair of pants is to pin them to the clothes-line and beat the dust out with a cane or limber switch. Then lay them out on a table and brush with a stiff brush. A coat, vest or pair of pants that is not much soiled will come out of a good gasoline bath looking like new. First brush and shake the garment until it seems perfectly free of dust, then remove the spots and put the garment in a wash-bowl or a large bucket and pour enough gasoline over the garment to saturate it thoroughly, then cover the bucket to keep the fluid from evaporating and leave it for two hours. The safest way to use the gasoline is in the open air. Clean the garments by pressing and squeezing between the hands, and hang over the line.

There is nothing better for removing grease spots from the cloth than a fluid composed of four parts of alcohol to one part of ammonia. When the garments are soiled enough to be washed, remove the buttons and baste the button holes together; then put them in a strong pearline suds and let them remain for half an hour; then wash clean through this suds and put them through a lighter suds and rinse through clear water. There is nothing better than this suds for washing garments of any color, and it leaves the cloth soft and clean, and then it is much easier to wash a garment that is much soiled than to try to remove the spots from the fabric, and, after they are washed and pressed, the buttons can be sewed in place and the buttonholes washed over again if necessary.

When pants are beginning to get baggy at the knees, turn them wrong side out, lay one leg at a time on the ironing table, lay a wet cloth all over the knee portions and press until the cloth is dry, then turn right side out, fold in the centre and press from top to bottom over the damp cloth.

FISH PONDS ON THE FARM

That relief from the high prices of meats might be found in having fish ponds on farms, is the opinion expressed by an Omaha, Neb., paper. "Years ago," it says, "when times were not so good and when people were not enjoying the degree of prosperity that now seems to prevail throughout the land, there was great interest taken in stocking the small and larger streams with fish from the state and government fisheries. Thousands of farm fish ponds were built all over the country, in all states, and the commercial idea prevailed in the construction and stocking of these ponds. This was when the fish pond on the farm was viewed as an asset in the advertising and sale of the farm."

London, Mar. 11.—The Home Rule Bill for Ireland is to be introduced into the House of Commons on 9th or 10th April.

Premier Asquith made this definite promise in the House of Commons this afternoon, adding:

"This is the date when it has always been intended and contemplated by the Government to introduce the Home Rule Bill.

"I have always thought this bill, having regard to its magnitude and complexity, is by far the most important to be brought in this session

MAKING NOSES FROM SHINBONES

Up-to-Date Methods of Facial Specialists in Germany—Beautifying the Homely

Sigh no more, ladies, sigh no more,
Beauty is knocking at your door.

In fact, judging by the prophecy of Dr. Hans Kersten, the well-known medical specialist of Berlin, the time is coming when every woman will be beautiful, and men will stand amazed at the brilliant charms of every member of the opposite sex.

Says the worthy doctor: "Skilful surgeons are already able to replace missing organs, such as ears and noses, so perfectly that no scar is seen. That being so, they can reduce or increase the size of any facial organ, and, as all beauty is symmetry, the most mis-shapen face can be transformed into a likeness of Apollo. And the artificial beauty may be of the highest type. It is quite an easy matter to reduce exceptionally big ears, narrow unduly distended nostrils, straighten a crooked nose, and take away all blemishes of the skin. Radiant liquid air, frozen carbolic acid gas, electricity, when properly applied, are all beautifiers. The woman of the future will be the radiant daughter of these miraculous forces of Nature."

Noses and Marriage

Already, however, scientific skill has been applied to remedying Nature's defects in a wonderfully successful manner. Another German doctor, for instance, Dr. Jacques Joseph, has made quite a reputation on account of the manner in which he reconstructs ugly noses. "I remedy every day," he said a short time ago, "by operative means, defective noses of various kinds. Noses from which, by Nature, illness, or accident, part or nearly the whole is missing. I build up the nose from the inside, after delicate use of the knife, by injecting either liquid or solid paraffin, or by fitting in a piece of the patient's own shin-bone. Crooked noses can also be straightened from within, without leaving any semblance of scars on the outside; and almost every week I get engagement cards of men and women ex-patients, who, long denied matrimonial bliss on account of repulsive noses, now describe me as the architect of their new-found happiness."

The use of electricity as a beautifier, mentioned by Dr. Kersten, has produced some wonderful results. By its means impaired complexions can be restored, wrinkles can be eradicated, and dimples produced. It is also largely used in the removal of what is commonly known as the port-wine stain, although many people believe that it is impossible to remove this blemish [illegible]

Wonderful Appliances

The appliances of beauty specialists are really wonderful. One of the latest is an apparatus with a series of thumb-screws for making the finger-nails a better shape. Then there is an elaborate face and neck mask for removing wrinkles and a coin strap which drives away that nightmare of many women, a double chin.

Equally remarkable is the slight operation by which beauty doctors are able to beautify the ears. This operation, which is practically painless, and in which only a little cocaine or any local anaesthetic is required, consists in removing from the back of the ear a small wedge-shaped piece of cartilage and skin, so that when the edges are united the ear can be pulled back into its proper position.

AERIAL TORPEDOES

They Will Explode When They Strike Airship

Messrs. Krupp, the great German firm, have filed the details of their new aerial torpedo with the Federal Patent Office, London. According to the plans which accompany the company's statement, the torpedo is fitted with a fuse so sensitive that it explodes on coming in contact with the delicate surface of a gas-bag. There is a base-plate containing fulminate of mercury, which, when ignited, explodes the torpedo. This is done by a needle driven by a spring, which is controlled by two levers. These levers, normally, are held firm by a movable wooden shaft. When the head of the torpedo strikes an airship, the levers are released, and swing outward under [illegible] force, permitting the needle to be driven into the fulminate. [illegible] torpedo from [illegible] to the Regimental Bugle Band Concert.

The Bugle Band of the 57th Regiment repeated their splendid concert in the Grand Opera House last night. The attendance, while large, was hardly in keeping with the very interesting and grand musical program presented. The chorus was particularly strong and the entire program demonstrated the great interest the citizens take in the Regiment and its Bugle Band.

Good Address at Y.M.C.A.

Last night there was a large and appreciative audience at the Y.M.C.A. hall to hear Rev. Dr. McClay's splendid lecture on Immorality. The subject was taken from Tennyson and Browning. The talented speaker is Dean of Arts of McMaster University. His historic address was thoroughly appreciated by all present. Rev. R. J. Webb, pastor of Murray street church, very ably filled the chair.

Port McNicholl Will Have Customs House.

The government has decided to make Port McNichol on ~~the Georgian Bay~~ a port of entry for customs purposes, and George Crooke has been appointed collector. Mr. Crooke resides at Victoria Harbor.

This decision of the government constitutes an immense benefit for the farmers of the west in the transportation of their grain to Montreal.

Our Local Coal Conditions.

A lot of people think they get short weight on the coal they buy. We have gone into the subject pretty fully and think we have shown conclusively that the local coal dealers are honest as the average men can be expected. Look at the Kingston coal dealers, for instance! There a lot of merchants in that line of business have been fined for short-weights.

Local Cheese Men to Meet.

The annual convention of the Peterborough Cheese and Butter Makers Association, which will be held in the city council chambers on Wednesday, March 20th, at 1.30 p.m., promises to be one of the largest ever held by the Association. Mr. G. G. Publow, Chief Dairy Instructor for the Eastern Province, will deliver an address. The annual meeting of the Cheese Board will be held on the same day at 10.30 a.m., in the Bank of Montreal Chambers.

The Made in Peterborough Fair.

The "Made in Peterborough Fair" is progressing nicely. Every patriotic resident of this city should and assuredly will, help to boom a local exhibition that has been advocated for weeks past by the Times. This city has the manufacturers and the manufactured articles to prove to the world that this city is strictly alive. Now is the time to prove this, by helping along the "Made in Peterborough Fair."

Thinks T.V.C. Should Get Money.

A well known local citizen yesterday remarked to a Times representative, "There is a lot of talk about deepening the Welland Canal. Now the Trent Valley Canal has been used for Parliamentary purposes for a good many years. The T.V.C. has directly or indirectly elected a good many members of Parliament. When the authorities at Ottawa begin to talk about appropriations the Trent Canal deserves most serious consideration."

I.O.F. Organizer Kept Busy Here.

Mr. W. J. Wilson, Perth, Ont., Deputy Chief Ranger of the Independent Order of Foresters was in the city yesterday and gave The Times a friendly call. Mr. Wilson is a guest at the Snowden House. Any information regarding the Order or its insurance branch will be cheerfully supplied by Mr. Wilson. There are approximately 250 members of the I.O.F. in Peterborough now, and it is Mr. Wilson's ambition to increase the number to at least half a century.

Funeral of Mr. F. Reynolds.

The funeral of the late Mr. Francis Reynolds, who passed away at the residence of Mrs. John Brown, 29 Crescent street, will take place on this afternoon. The Rev. W. C. Riddiford will conduct a service at the house at 3 o'clock, after which the funeral cortege will proceed to the Little Lake cemetery for interment.

The deceased gentleman was 65 years of age. He was born in Cavan township and came to Peterborough about four years ago. He was an Anglican and during his sojourn in the city he has made many friends.

Did Not Like the Snow.

More of the "Beautiful" fell yesterday morning. One Water street citizen at the business end of a snow shovel at 7.30 yesterday morning, remarked sarcastically "look at the lovely shining prisms! Just regard the way the sun's rays glitter and are refracted from heaven's jewels! Pshaw! This infernal snow makes me sick. I've just about worn out the handle of this shovel during January, February and the present month."

Fine Concert at Conservatory.

One of Canada's best known astronomers was in the city last night in the person of Rev. Dr. Marsh, of Springville. An entertainment was held in the fine hall of the Conservatory of Music. The hall was completely filled with one of the most appreciative and intelligent audiences ever gathered in this city. It is understood that the evening's proceeds were for the purpose of forwarding the good work done by the Springville choir. Miss Barbara Foster, the talented contralto, and Miss Mae Tesky, entertainer, rendered a splendid program.

Celebrate Sixtieth Wedding.

Sixty years ago, Mr. and Mrs. Jason Williamson were married in Pet-good. This venerable couple have seven children living and four of them were present at the celebration—Mrs. John McCarroll, Emily; Mr. F. Williamson, Lindsay; Mrs. McIvor, of Smith, and Mr. Geo. E. Williamson, of Peterborough. One son Mr. H. H. Williamson, of Peterborough, and two daughters, Mrs. J. A. McGhee of Alpena, Mich., and Mrs. Porter of Wallaceburg, were absent.

LITTLE LOCAL LINES

If you are sceptical that spring is coming, look out for Bill Wailey in a straw hat!

Judging by reports of the Winnipeg Hockey game the Eatons were eaten by the Victorias.

Court Chemong, No. 530, will hold a regular meeting to-morrow night. A full attendance is requested.

Peterborough lost by seven shots, in the game with Keene yesterday morning. The match was played on local ice.

As great local interest is being taken in the great English coal strike, it is of interest to learn that this strike is practically within sight of settlement.

Although the returns of St. Andrew's congregation vote in regard to church union, are not yet known, there is a majority in favor of the movement.

The address that was to have been given at the Young Women's Christian Association last night, by Rev. Mr. Reynolds, of St. Andrew's church, was postponed until a future date. This event will be specifically described later on in these columns.

The Victoria Savings & Loan Co., of Lindsay, has declared a seven per cent dividend. Good for Scugogville! This is away ahead of the York Loan, where stockholders had to get down to the very toes of their stockings to settle up!

A local contemporary speaks of the loose enforcement of the license law in Peterborough. Is there a village, town or city in Ontario under license system where the law is better en- enness, in proportion to population?

City Engineer Tom Hay is taking time (or trouble) by the forelock, and having ditches dug through the several feet of snow lining the principle streets to avoid spring floods. Good work!

As more than twenty former Peterborough residents are now living at, or near, Red Deer, Alberta, it will be of local interest to note that that rapidly growing settlement has been made an Output of Customs under survey of the Port of Calgary.

In giving quotations of Peterborough market prices, it is somewhat hard to segregate the "hog market." Judging by prices paid for everything on the local market, the word "hog" is not specific in application but general in practice.

We notice that hundreds of thousands of dollars are being voted towards steam services between various Canadian and Canadian and Foreign points. Just a few handfuls of these greenbacks would establish a street car service between the west and the eastern banks of the Otonabee, in this city.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Mrs. Dr. Frank C. Neale will not receive to-day or again this season.

Messrs. Patrick Devlin and Lloyd Dockrell, left yesterday evening for Moose Jaw.

Mrs. W. Blewett of Young's Point, is visiting at the home of Mrs. Graham for the week.

Mrs. R. M. Glover, 306 Margaret avenue, will not receive to-day nor again this season.

Mrs. (Dr.) Gibson, of Lakefield, is the guest of her sister, Miss Mollie Young, Charlotte street.

Mr. F. W. Wilson, publisher of the Port Hope Guide, was in the city yesterday and gave The Times a fraternal call.

The many friends of Mrs. W. S. Dodd, who has been seriously ill for several weeks, will be pleased to learn that she is now convelasing, and it is hoped will soon be restored to perfect health.

Mr. and Mrs. Guy MacDougall (a former Peterborough girl) and temporarily residing in Duluth, Minn. Their home is in Port Arthur, Ont., but business conditions in connection with the Dominion Government inspection of grain has impelled Mr. MacDougall's temporary sojourn in Duluth.

BLOODY BATTLE FOUGHT YESTERDAY IN WHICH THOUSANDS OF ARABS MET DEATH IN A STIFF FIGHT

MANITOBA BOUNDARY BILL CARRIED BY BIC MAJORITY

Three Ontario Liberals Supported the Lamarche Amendment and One Half of Them Absent

Minister of Justice Declared That the Minority Had no Special Rights in New Territory

Nearly One Quarter of the Liberals Seemed to Have Shirked Their Vote in This Important Question

Ottawa, Mar. 13.—At 4 o'clock in the morning the Manitoba Boundaries extension bill was read a third time. Manitoba gets her additional territory, unclogged with conditions.

For fifteen years Sir Wilfrid Laurier shunned adding this territory to Manitoba, because he knew that a demand for a charter of Separate Schools would be made upon him when the expansion came. For seven years the need for granting the enlargement has been urgent.

MR. BORDEN FACED MUTINY.

Mr. Borden, in his first session, five months after assuming office, has attended to this very pressing piece of business. The demand for Separate Schools has been served on him and has been resisted. He has taken up the work, he has gone through with it. He has faced a mutiny on the part of the more extreme members of the French-speaking section of his party and he has won.

MAJORITY OF 136 AGAINST AMENDMENT.

The roar of threats died down when it was an actual question of real votes in Parliament, Mr. Borden's bill has carried with an overwhelming vote. There were two divisions on the third reading; on one there was cross voting and the amendment beaten by a majority of 136—the figures were 160 to 24. The second was a trial of party strength—was a straight party vote and the Government scored a majority of 55, or 11 more than normal. The figures were 107 to 52, or more than 2 to 1. Sir Wilfrid Laurier with a burst of that beautiful eloquence which he knows so well how to do, announced himself on the side of peace, harmony, conciliation and all other beautiful things. Having said this he voted with the Government on the Lamarche-Mondou amendment. A moment later, one of his lieutenants, Dr. Beland, moved a second amendment, also designed to force Separate Schools on Manitoba: it was that a conference take place between the Dominion and Manitoba to ascertain if there really are vested rights in the added territory, and if so they can be safeguarded. For this insidious amendment the whole Liberal party voted. That is, such of it as chose to be present; for the absentees were very numerous, while the Conservatives had a very full delegation.

The Lamarche-Mondou amendment and its fate now claims attention. The amendment was insidious and dangerous, it was as follows:

7a. Section 29 of the Manitoba Act, 1870, 33 Viet. chap. 3, shall apply to the territory added to the Province under the provisions of this Act, with the substitution for paragraph 1 of said section 22, of the following paragraph:—

1. Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to denominational, or separate schools which any class of persons have, at the date of the passing of this Act, by law or practice, in the territory added to the Province under the provisions of this Act.

BOURASSA WANTS THE SENATE TO KILL THE BOUNDARY BILL

Montreal, Mar. 13.—Le Devoir prints a signed article by Omer Heroux an appeal to the Senate to support the rights of the minority by declaring themselves in opposition to the position taken by the House of Commons. Mr. Heroux's principal comment is that the House of Commons had deprived the smaller body of their rights.

Mr. Bourassa is out of town and his newspaper will print his views to-morrow or Friday after the Nationalist Chief has had time to consider the vote which was passed at a very early hour this morning. The French morning papers had no comment to offer.

CHARGED THAT FIELDING KNEW FARMERS BANK CONDITIONS

Ottawa, Mar. 13.—The inquiry into the defunct Farmers Bank and its collapse began in the County Court House here this morning before the special commissioner, Sir William Meredith, of Toronto.

Messrs. Frank Hodgson, K.C., and John Thompson, K.C., are representing the people; Messrs. W. C. Mikel, of Belleville, and I. F. Weldon, the depositors, and Mr. Laidlaw, K.C., of Toronto, the shareholders.

The Farmers Bank had been incorporated on July 1, 1904, Mr. Hodgins stated, and the provisional directors named.

Mr. Henderson stated that he had been interested in the bank through the fact that many of his constituents were connected with it almost from its inception. He had had a conference with Hon. Mr. Fielding as to the bank's mode of raising money. The bank had been discounting notes endorsed by the provisional directors in 1906. Mr. Fielding had seemed surprised and told him he would hold back the certificate as long as he could. After the certificate had been issued he had had another conference with the Finance Minister in which the latter stated that W. R. Travers of the Farmers Bank, had been down and when the matter of the discounted notes had been put up to him by Mr. Fielding, had denied it.

He had had conversations two years later with the Minister as to rumors of peculiar operations of the bank. He had found Mr. Fielding knew as much about these facts as he did himself and the latter told him "well, Mr. Henderson, you don't need to worry about it. You did your best to warn the Government."

"Why did not you put these interviews in writing?" asked Mr. Hodgins.

"It is sometimes safer for a member of Parliament not to do so," answered the witness. "He might be accused of undue interference."

LOCAL POWER DISCUSSED

Peterborough Manufacturers Talk Over Ways and Means of Conserving the Water of Our Kawartha Lakes.

Last night, a private meeting of some of the leading users of water power in this city was held in the Bank of Montreal Chambers. Representatives of the local press were on hand, and were respectfully, but firmly told that there was "nothing for publication." As intimated by two leading local manufacturers, to The Times, the main reason for the meeting was to discuss conservation of the water, in the back country, which ultimately turns the wheels of Peterborough's factories. It seems that the local manufacturers, because there have been so many changes on the local staff of the Trent Valley Canal, feared that owing to inexperience of the new staff, the conservation of water, a vital question with them, might not receive the attention so important a question demands. The meeting was thus held to consider ways and means of conserving the water of the Kawartha Lakes. Among those present were Messrs. Denham, of the Quaker Oats Co., Crane, of the Dominion Bank, Munro of the Peterborough Light & Power Co., Patterson, of the Canadian General Electric Co., and McClellan, of the Trent Valley Canal, and others.

After the meeting adjourned The Times learned from one of the gentlemen present that an association was formed to be known as the "Central Ontario Water Conservation Association." Mr. W. H. Denham was elected president, and Mr. Munro, secretary.

THE WEATHER.

Fair and warm.

SYLVIA PANKHURST WILL HURRY BACK TO ENGLAND

New York, Mar. 13.—Miss Sylvia Pankhurst, the English Suffragette, who has just arrived in New York from the West, will curtail her lecture tour in this country and return to England within the next fortnight.

"I am much worried over my mother," said the youngest daughter of the militant leader, upon her arrival. "From reports of the treatment she is receiving in Holloway Prison I have fears for her health. This is the first time my mother has been forcibly led to prison. Such treatment of prisoners has resulted in ruined health and even death."

GREAT BATTLE 1,000 KILLED

Biggest Fight of the Italian-Turkish War Pulled Off

Benghazi, Tripolitana, Mar. 13.—More than 1,000 Arabs were killed and another 1,000 wounded, according to Italian advices in the course of one of the stiffest encounters of the war, when the Italians yesterday stormed and occupied two oases situated to the north east of Fro-at which were strongly entrenched and held by a large force of Arabs.

The Arabs defended their positions with the utmost bravery, but were finally routed by the Italian troops at the point of bayonets.

Over 400 Arab corpses were left on the battlefield and the Italian officers report that an enormous number were carried off by the retreating enemy.

The loss of the Italian troops is given as three officers and 25 soldiers killed, while they also had seven officers and 55 soldiers wounded.

SHIP BURNED IN NEW YORK

Fifteen Men in The Hold Barely Escaped With Their Lives

New York, Mar. 13.—The steamer Jose, of the United Fruit Company, laden with 10,000 cases of oil caught fire this morning while at her pier at the foot of Maiden Lane. Fifteen men, caught in the steamer's hold, barely escaped with their lives, and the burning steamer after being pulled out into the East River, sank. Shipping along the waterfront was endangered by the blaze.

The Jose was taking on oil for Kingston, Jamaica, and a case of gasoline being lowered into the hold fell from the lift and broke open near a watchman who carried a lighted lamp. In an instant flames swept the Jose from stem to stern and fifteen workers in the hold just managed to scramble to the hatchway and escape. Fire boats pulled the blazing vessel to mid-stream, where she sank.

PARTISANSHIP IN ENGLAND.

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—I happened yesterday to get into conversation with three English immigrants. These men, one of whom, I wanted to hire, all assured me that, as they waited on the docks of Liverpool, along the Mersey River banks, a Canadian Immigration Agent hovered about them and other intending emigrants from the Mother Country. This agent button-holed them and insisted on talking Canadian politics. He, so said the English immigrants, told them that Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his, then dominant party were the only thing to bind Canada to the British Empire. Now, Mr. Editor, you and your readers can take this story at its face value. I only give the story as I absolutely know it. If the Canadian officer at Liverpool did, as charged, use his time and opportunity to impress grit politics on the minds of in-coming Canadian citizens, there is no wonder that the axe of non-partizanship should fall on the necks of those who have been active partisans in the recent political campaign.

THE MILK PROBLEM.

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—The people of this city, if they consider the significance of the matter, and its bearing on the chance of disease. Must feel grateful to Ald. Gordon, for introducing his milk by-law amendment. Mr. Gordon's by law is designed to compel dealers to thoroughly clean all bottles that are to contain milk for sale. Now, without "giving away" the individual, as a matter of fact. I happened a few months ago to be in a place in this county where milk was bottled for sale. Right next to where the milk was handled was the family cook stove. Children were playing round where the milk was bottled. Those children looked as though they would not know the difference between a cake of soap and a buzz saw. Milk is one of the most sensitive commodities used in daily human use. If dirty or unwashed bottles are used, disease could easily be transferred from one house to another, or created at once. Let Ald. Gordon's by-law be carried out promptly and strictly.

LABOR LEADERS MUST GO TO TRIAL

Indianapolis, Ind., Mar. 13.—All the defendants indicted for violation of Federal Statutes governing transportation of explosives, must go to trial in one cause on October 1st, according to the final ruling of Judge Anderson to-day after he had heard arguments of attorneys for the defense on a motion for separate trials.

WIFE'S LETTER TO PROVE AN ALIBI

Atlanta, Ga., Mar. 13.—Lawyers and police officers handling the Eugene H. Grace shooting case apparently have settled down to await developments. What seems to be the most important turn is the reported finding of a letter to Mrs. Grace which attorneys for Grace family assert she compelled her husband to write. It is addressed they say, to her at Newnan, Ga., and advises that his contemplated trip to Philadelphia had been postponed and that "a friend" will stay with him that night. That this written at her instance so she could prove an alibi and lay the blame of his death to the mysterious "friend" is the theory of attorneys. Mrs. Grace is still held without bail.

ONE FLAG, ONE SCHOOL AND ONE LANGUAGE THE BATTLE CRY

Grand Orange Lodge of Ontario West Wrestling With Burning Questions at Annual Meeting in London

London, Ont., Mar. 13.—"One school, one flag, and one language," is the united feeling of the Orange Grand Lodge of Ontario West as expressed by Mr. Harry Lovelock, Grand Master, in his address to the delegates at the opening of the 54th annual session of the Grand Lodge in the Y.M.C.A. Hall here this afternoon. The session was last held in London sixteen years ago, a fact which was referred to by Mr. Lovelock, who pointed out, with gratification, that whereas the County Lodge in East Middlesex had then only six primary lodges under its jurisdiction it now has nineteen, an evidence that the spirit of Orangeism is not by any means dying out in this part of the Province.

A YEAR OF UNREST.

Mr. Lovelock, who is completing his second year as Grand Master, briefly reviewed the events of the past year, which he said had been one of much unrest throughout the Province and in fact the whole Dominion and the Order has been actively engaged combatting the marriage question, the bi-lingual school situation and the Home Rule problem in the Old Land, in which so many of the brethren in Canada are so deeply interested. The first two questions, he promised, would be fully dealt with by the joint legislation committees' report, which will be presented to this Grand Lodge later on.

THE TIBER OR THE THAMES.

As Grand Master, Mr. Lovelock felt that he voiced the sentiments of the Grand Lodge when he said that the brethren in the Old Land had undying sympathy in their efforts to prevent the passage of a Home Rule bill for Ireland, and the hopes and prayers are being exercised on their behalf, and, if need be, personal and financial assistance. "The very soil of Ireland is sacred to us because of the traditions of the past," said Mr. Lovelock. "Not only it is consistent for Irish Orangemen and Protestants to oppose Home Rule, but it is consistent for Orangemen and Protestants of every nationality, because the passage of that bill means ultimately being ruled from the Tiber instead of the Thames. The Dublin Parliament would be largely under the control of the priesthood of the Roman Church."

"WHERE WE STAND."

In conclusion the Grand Secretary urged upon the brethren, that at this time close watch be kept upon the members of both Houses of Parliament. "Many questions of vital importance, which not only affect the family life, but also the great educational system of the country, are at stake," he said. "The scales hang in the balance; Rome is on the war path, ever vigilant and cunning. Shall we be less true to our heritage? Let us take no uncertain position. Let there be no hesitancy in informing our representatives where we stand, and to all who prove false toward keeping Canada British to the core, with one marriage law for the Dominion, and with the English language, the language for the schools of Ontario. Be he Tory or Grit, when the day of reckoning arrives, let no quarter be shown."

Several hundred prominent Orangemen of Western Ontario are in attendance at the session. To-night a public meeting will be held in the Grand Opera House.

GREAT COAL STRIKE BELIEVED TO BE NEARING A SETTLEMENT

London, Mar. 13.—The conference between the British coal mine owners and the delegates of the striking miners under the auspices of several members of the Cabinet, and presided over by Premier Asquith, was resumed this morning at the Foreign Office, and satisfactory progress is said to have been made. No details of the proceedings have been made public, but the Premier at noon expressed his gratification at the course negotiations were taking.

CONFERENCE YESTERDAY.

New York, Mar. 13. With conferences to-day in New York and London, steps may be taken which will lead toward adjustments of the world-wide coal situation, which finds a million miners on strike in Great Britain and a threatened strike of thousands of hard and soft coal miners in the United States. In England all branches of industry are affected by the strike, and it is estimated that the work army totals 2,000,000 persons. Possibilities of a strike in this country has already made itself felt in premiums of $1 a ton paid on anthracite.

President John P. White of the United Mine Workers of America and a committee of hard coal miners were prepared this afternoon to confer with a committee of operators who will officially reply to the demands for higher wages and other concessions presented two weeks ago by the miners. The operators have already announced that the demands would be refused. Both sides insist that they will "stand pat."

"I shall have nothing to say until the operators have officially answered the demands," said President White. "Certain it is that I hope we come to some agreement. This much I will say that the miners' committee is quite satisfied with the situation, and, if necessary, we are prepared to quit work."

LINDSAY VOTES ON CHURCH UNION

The result of the vote in St. Andrew's church, Lindsay, on Church Union, resulted as follows. In response to the question "Are you in favor of Organic Union with the Methodist and Congregational churches." Out of 16 ballots issued to elders, 592 to communicants and 63 to adherents, the result was: elders 12 for, 3 against; communicants, 188 for, 167 against; adherents, 9 for, and 03 against. In response to the question "Do you approve of the proposed basis of union?" Elders, 9 for, 5 against; communicants, 132 for, 149 against; adherents 7 for, 10 against.

Oil is King--King of Fuel for all puposes

Without it the automobile could not exist. Just as soon as a supply can be depended on, ships on every ocean, sea, lake, and river, will be propelled by it. The British Admirality are building warships to be propelled by it. The great railway transportation companies are altering their locomotives to be driven by it. The cooking stoves and heating plants in every district where it can be secured are being made to use it—in fact the whole civilized world is crying out for it.

And we have it—have the piece of the earth's crust where it is bursting out and spilling over in such quantities that we are able to collect it from the surface of the pools, put it in bottles, and have it analyzed, and here is what the analytical chemist has to say of it :

New Orleans, Mar. 12.—Henry Caruso, the young inspector of weights and measures of the Second District of this city, who a few days ago shot and killed Joseph Cirino, an aged oysterman, will in all probability be released from the Parish Prison on bond. It was learned that Caruso is not only a victim of tuberculosis, but is also suffering from a blow he received in the fight preceding the shooting. Dr. L. S. Charbonnet, upon the request of Caruso's attorneys, examined Caruso in the Parish Prison. His certificate was presented to the district attorney with a request that bond be allowed Caruso. Dr. Charbonnet states in his certificate that continued confinement in the Parish Prison may endanger the life of the prisoner, and upon this recommendation the district attorney has consented to allow bail to Caruso.

Accordingly, the friends of the young man at once raised sufficient money to cover the bond.

The nature of the case is such, it is the general opinion, as to warrant the release of Caruso on a bond.

THE RIVER CLYDE

A Few Notes About the Most Wonderful Waterway in the World

The Clyde is one of the most important shipbuilding districts in the world. Between Glasgow and Greenock there are about fifty shipyards, and their aggregate output has on two occasions exceeded 600,000 tons. During the last twenty years the total has rarely been less than 400,000 tons, and has frequently exceeded 500,000. Two Super-Dreadnoughts are at present under construction on the river, besides several cruisers and torpedo destroyers; and some of the most notable liners afloat, including the Lusitania, have been built and launched from the banks of the narrow waterway. The River Clyde is one of the most wonderful waterways in the world, particularly that part of it which extends from Greenock up to Glasgow bridge, a distance of nearly twenty miles. At one time, a few hundred years ago, it was possible for pedestrians to cross the river at various points without wetting a shoe. To-day, between the points named, there is a uniform depth of nearly twenty-seven at low water.

Needless to say this great change has not been effected without a tremendous amount of forethought, skill and determination. As far back as 1566, detachments of the city's inhabitants were employed to clear away a formidable sandbank about two miles above Dumbarton, but although the people labored away for several weeks their efforts had little effect. The river continued to wash down the sand from the upper reaches, and the bank became as formidable as ever. It was about this time that a then well-known civil engineer was consulted as to the best method of making the river navigable for shipping. He informed the city authorities that it would be impossible to deepen the river, his theory being that as the bed of the river was deepened the water level would fall correspondingly.

Fortunately, the authorities did not allow themselves to be seriously influenced by this expert's opinion. After several more ineffective attempts had been made to solve the problem, a civil engineer from Chester, in 1768, experimented on a system of contracting the river, by means of jetties, and removing the sand and gravel from within the narrow channel. In 1773, he contracted with the town council to make the river from Dumbuck upwards a depth of six feet and a width of 300 feet at low water, at a cost of $9,200. He succeeded in giving a depth of ten inches more than he bargained for, and he was rewarded by the town council with an additional sum of $6,000 and a silver cup. That may be said to have been the beginning of the great work of widening and deepening the river, a work which has been proceeding almost incessantly ever since.

THE PATAGONIAN INDIANS

Normally the Patagonian Indians are a peacable and kindly people, but they are impulsive, capable of strong prejudices, very revengeful, and often with good reason suspicious of strangers. They are not to be trifled with, and when under the influence of drink are brutal and dangerous. They show love for their children and wives and kindness to their own people. They are divided into numerous tribes or groups, each having its chief, or cacique, upon whom the burdens of government rest but lightly. The cacique of the tribe to whom this village belonged was then at another camp. They believe in a good and an evil spirit, whom they propitiate, and have many stories, myths, and superstitions connected with the sun, moon, and stars, while the slaying of horses and drinking of blood form a conspicuous part in their superstitions, birth, marriage and death ceremonies, many of which are most repulsive.

VEGETABLES AND CHARACTER

According to a French doctor, the potato develops in the eater an evenness of temper and calmness of thought. The carrot acts as a stimulant to the character, and is recommended for biliousness and to peevish or jealous persons. Spinach develops ambitious dreams and energy. Peas, we can understand, are not calculated to help serious thought, and the cauliflower induces egotism.

Stack of Old Horseshoes

A unique sight is to be seen at Upper Studley, near Trowbrige, where Mr. James Jennings, the well-known steam roundabouts proprietor, has a huge stack of old horse-shoes which he has collected during the past two years. It stands 17 feet high, is 10 feet through, weighs about 150 tons, and could not be purchased for $2,000. The shoe stack attracts great attention, particularly from touring motorists, who frequently stop to examine the curious pile.

KEEP THE PIGS DRY

Guard Against Dampness From the Very Beginning

Pigs are animals that, as a class, are subject to rheumatism and similar troubles, and if you are going to be a successful pig-keeper you must guard against dampness from the very start, especially with the bedding arrangements.

Straw—barley straw in particular—makes capital bedding; and dry bracken, dried grass from the hedges, and similar material may be used. I will assume, of course, that the floor of the sleeping apartment of your sty is of brick, sloped for drainage, and that a warm bed of some kind is provided for the animals. From time to time as it is dirtied this bedding must be changed, and it is a good plan to place it in the forecourt of the sty—if any—till it has become part of the muck, which you will remove for manurial purposes as necessary.

And if dry quarters are necessary with adult sows and pigs, how much more so is this the case with the youngsters! At birth they should have clean, sweet straw provided, not in great quantities, or they may be unwittingly lain upon by their mother, or else smothered, but sufficient for dryness and warmth. Then, during their infancy the quantity may be gradually increased till the usual allowance is arrived at. Needless to say, the straw bedding should be changed almost daily at first, and this is especially the case with a large litter in a somewhat cramped sty.

LIGHT THAT DOES NOT FAIL

A Volcanic Beacon in San Salvador Republic

The republic of San Salvador is the only government on earth that collects lighthouse fees on account of a volcano that it owns, and without the slightest cost of upkeep.

The volcanic beacon is about eight miles inland from the port of Acajutla, and its pillar of cloud by day and its fire sky by night are visible for many miles out to sea. It bursts forth every seven minutes, and is just as accurate as any revolving light that warns mariners of danger in any part of the world.

This volcano has been keeping up this seven-minutes' service of eruptions ever since anyone can remember. It is a favorite amusement of visitors to sit by the hour during the lazy afternoons, and, watch in hand, to time the eruptions till they tire of the occupation and fall asleep. No one has ever caught the volcano napping, however.

Every vessel that puts in at Acajutla has to pay its lighthouse fee. There is no other lighthouse than the volcano, but that is a sufficient excuse for the Government of Salvador to make a charge for its services. The explosions that accompany the eruptions sound like detonations of heavy charges of dynamite, but, fortunately, they are not sufficient to shake the ground perceptibly more than about a mile or two from the summit of the crater.

COST OF TUBERCULOSIS

E. F. McSweeney's Estimate is $100 Per Family a Year

"Preventable disease, the greatest item in which is tuberculosis and the other expenses which grow out of it, costs each family on this continent at the minimum $100 a year." This is a verdict of a most thorough and cautious estimate by expert statisticians, and it errs, if anything, on the conservative side. It is a sentence, the nugget of the discourse, taken from an address on "Tuberculosis as a factor in the increased cost of living," delivered at Denver by Mr. Edward F. McSweeney, chairman of the board of trustees of the Boston Consumptives' Hospital. The guess that preventable disease has been a large share of the growing weight of living expenses is not a new one, but the thoroughness with which the proofs have been searched out by Mr. McSweeney is novel and convincing. The nations have searched and found five major causes of this increase, namely, waste, extravagance, armed peace, inefficiency and the burden of crime, pauperism, accident and disease. By the most cautious estimate the yearly money cost of tuberculosis alone in the United States is $622,513,904, and on the present ratio of deaths annually from this disease, as compared with the deaths from all other causes, 10,000,000 of people now living will eventually die of tuberculosis. The constructive part of Mr. McSweeney's discourse deals with the proof that the treatment of incipient cases is a failure, because returning to bad conditions, they relapse; and that the prevention of contagion from the advanced cases is where the resistance must be focussed. New York is following this lead, and it has now been recognized by Germany. The rigid medical inspection of school-children is one means of prevention and "we will solve the tuberculosis question when we settle the problems of child labor, city congestion, long hours and bad factory and housing conditions." This critic is emphatic that the crusade is not one primarily for physicians and charity workers. "This is essentially a business man's crusade, and should be led by the Chamber of Commerce."

A FUNNY PROPOSITION

The Boston Transcript makes the very pertinent remark that man is a funny proposition, because, when he reads a medical book, he fancies he has every disease described; but when he reads the work of a moralist all the faults that are pointed out he sees, not in himself, but in his neighbor.

WHALING OFF NEW ZEALAND

Graphic Description of the Work of the Whalers with Their Deadly Harpoons

At the cry of "There she blows!" out go the steam launches to replace the nets, three in number, that suffice to close the narrow channel. These, unanchored, are allowed to float loose, the ends of each slightly overlapping. Kept taut by their own weight, they hang stretched on the float line, an invisible curtain of wire mesh barring the water run.

No human fastening, says the Wide World, has yet been invented that would stop the rush of a charging whale. The principal of the detached floating net is not to stop, but so to hamper the monster with a gossamer of wire rope that he falls an easy prey to the hunters. For this reason also the nets are so placed that on striking an entangled whale may race seaward or sound downward, carrying the enveloping net, without fear of disturbing the remaining two.

When the nets are in position the launches and attendant whaleboats, with their crews, take up their stations at some distance to watch for an upheaval and dancing floating line that marks the striking of a whale.

Often a whale's presence is first indicated by great masses of broken barnacles and torn sea grass that come floating upward to the surface as the whale, floundering among the rocks of the sea-floor, eases himself with delighted scratchings in the depths.

In the boats all is tense expectancy and ordered preparation. Harpoon guns are loaded and made ready, lines are carefully flaked down in the tubs, lances are looked to, and everyone is on the qui vive. Suddenly a sort of shudder runs through the sea. There are tossing billows and wild commotion made by the bobbing float lines. "Hurrah! she's struck!" is the cry.

Away go the boats, each racing to be the first fast to the struggling fish and so earn the bonus that rewards the winning crew. A mighty, grey black head, entangled in a clinging web of wire, rears from out the water. Up, up, it goes, till a huge bulk of body towers a good fifty feet in the air, its side fins thrashing wildly in a smother of foam. It curves in an arch, and then, like an arrow, down go whale and net together for the sound.

Not for long though. The upward drag of bunched net floats, and its necessity for breath brings the animal quickly to the surface—a spouting, snorting, wallowing mass; mad with rage, wild with terror of the unknown clinging horror that envelops it.

Bang! bang! go the guns from each boat in quick succession. Both irons are home and well-placed. A wild quiver of flukes and fins, and the whale either sounds again or races along the surface, towing the boats after it at express speed. But the net holds fast and at each new effort for freedom the victim becomes more helplessly wound up than before.

Soon exhausted with futile struggling, the whale comes to rest, and there is a momentary cessation of the mad fight, as the leviathan pauses for breath. Huge panting air gasps are plainly audible at a distance of half a mile.

The crews are quick to seize the opportunity. With the lancemen ready in the bow the boats sweep in, one on either side. "Steady with the lance." "Now!" Eight-foot steel blades drive deep for the heart behind the pectoral fins.

A shiver, a hissing spout of and blood, a wallow and roll of huge wire-tangled carcass, flashes of red and white foam in the sunlight and the black heave of a twentyfoot fin that for one dread instant, scimitar-shaped, a falling wall of bone and sinew, hangs over the boat and its occupants. The boat's crew back out like lightning, just in time. Down crashes the mighty flail, missing its blow by a bare foot. There is a roar and clap of many thunders, and jetting spurts of spray leap high into the blue.

The boats, backed clear, still hang to the lines, the crews watching events and waiting the end. It may be that the dying whale will sound again or race in a final effort. But the lances have got home. A few more wallows of despair, the great tail flukes thrash the water with lessening force, and presently the huge body, inert, lifeless, lies quietly on the surface. Hawsers are made fast to the dead whale, and while the boats return to their stations to watch the remaining nets, it is towed by the launch to the jetty ashore.

A PECULIAR HYBRID

What has been aptly described as a hybrid between a needle and a frog has been grown by two eminent French scientists, M. Batallion and M. Henneguy. The eggs of a frog have been fertilized purely by a mechanical stimulus, pricking them with a fine platinum or glass needle. The needle has been as remarkable in its effects as Aaron's rod, for the eggs have on being placed in sterilised water, developed into tadpoles just as though a male frog had fathered them into existence.

SALT FOR MANGOLDS

Best Results Obtained From Use of 10 Per. Cent. Per Acre

That application of salt in addition to other fertilizers is useful for the mangold crop is generally acknowledged, but what is the most suitable quantity to apply is a question upon which there is considerable difference of opinion.

To obtain definite information on this point, the Harper-Adams Agricultural College has been conducting experiments for three years with quantities per acre of 2½ cwt., 5 cwt., 10 cwt. and 15 cwt. respectively.

The salt was applied in the middle of April and thoroughly worked into the soil by cultivating, harrowing and rolling three times before rowing up, the ridges being again split before sowing.

Special care has to be taken to ensure the salt being completely mixed with the soil, otherwise the seed is liable to be damaged.

The dressings were made across all the manurial and variety trial plots, and the weights are the average of the different plots. The result was the following:—The application of—

2½ cwt. produced an average increase, about 4 tons roots;

5 cwt. produced an average increase, about 5½ tons roots;

10 cwt. produced an average increase, about 8¼ tons roots;

15 cwt. produced an average increase, about 4 tons roots.

The big application of 15 cwt. was tried for the first time last year, just to see what the effect would be.

The experiment seems to demonstrate that the quantity of salt that can be used with the best result is 10 cwt. per acre.

HORSES IN WINTER

Can be Kept on Straw as Well as on Hay

Professor J. H. Shepperd, of the North Dakota Agricultural College, answering a question recently about wintering horses on straw, says:

The North Dakota station did a considerable amount of work in horse feeding a number of years ago and made extensive trials with oat straw, as compared with hay, for roughage. In the trial it was found that some horses did about as well on it as they did on hay. While others were very much harder to carry, chiefly because their appetites for roughage were too light to cause them to eat enough of it. Aside from those dainty animals there was little trouble in keeping them up on oat straw as roughage.

The oat straw used was that of a normal season, which was coarser and more woody than that which had been obtained this year. The trial consisted of a period of sixty days' feeding with oats as the grain ration against a similar period with oats and hay, and sixty days' feeding with a mixture of half and half bran and shorts by weight with hay compared with sixty days' feeding bran and shorts with oat straw.

During the first thirty days' winter conditions were present and the horses were used only about enough for good exercise. During the second thirty days they were worked at harrowing, discing and seeding and had nearly all of that work the last half of the month. The horses receiving oats and hay as a ration required nine and one-third pounds of oats with hay to carry them, while those on oats and straw consumed eleven and one-half pounds of oats per day. During the thirty days that they had light work, the horses on hay gained 176 pounds and the three on straw 169 pounds. During the thirty days when they had heavy work one-half of the time, those on hay lost 340 pounds and those on straw 345 pounds.

The similar lots of horses fed on bran and shorts, half and half by weight, gained during the winter conditions, 88 pounds when fed hay, and 83 pounds when fed straw. When they were on the straw ration with heavy work for one-half of the month they lost 225 pounds, and on the hay ration 235 pounds.

These results indicate that horses can be carried almost as successfully on straw as roughage as they can on hay, provided enough aditional grain is given them to supply them with sufficient nourishment. The additional grain required is about one-fifth. If the feeder has facilities for chaffing the straw and will moisten it and mix the grain fed with it during the season when the animals are required to do very little work, a smaller amount of grain will carry them.

SUCKERS ON CORN

In the past suckers on corn were regarded as very undesirable, and oftentimes the small boy had to go through the cornfield and pull them off. Recent experiments show that suckering of the corn plant is merely a response to its surroundings. When the stand is thin there will always be plenty of suckers. The corn plants simply try to remedy the thin stand by suckering.

In an experiment several years ago where there were four plants in a hill eight suckers developed to each one hundred plants; where there were three in a hill, twenty-five suckers developed; where there were two in a hill seventy-six suckers, and where there was only one plant in the hill, 198 suckers developed to each one hundred plants. It was noticed that a large number of the suckers produced ears.

Another cause for suckering is the richness of the land. Rich, new land has been found to produce nearly twice the number of suckers as old, worn-out land. To some extent the tendency to suckers is no doubt inherited, but the main causes of suckering are the thinness of the ground and the weather conditions.

Experiments conducted for two years indicated that it paid to leave the suckers on. The average yield for two years of corn with the suckers left on was eighty-one bushels, while for corn with suckers pulled off it was sixty-four bushels.

STATUE OF THE KING

Mr. Arthur Rogers, AR.C.A., is now engaged upon the creation of a colossal bronze statue of King George V. This, mounted upon a lofty pedestal, will stand at the summit of the main steps leading to the grounds of the Crystal Palace; thus his Majesty will seem to be always overlooking the Festival of the Empire. The King will be represented wearing his Coronation robes, and holding his sceptre in his hand. The sculptor was a prominent pupil at the Manchester School of Arts.

ARMY'S LATEST RECRUIT

Laura, the Coldstreams' Pet Pelican, Returns from Egypt

One of the latest recruits which the British Army has secured is Laura, the pet pelican of the Coldstream Guards. Laura has been brought home from Egypt by the famous regiment, and is now a favorite with all, except—and an important exception—Chinko, a pert little monkey, which is another pet of the Coldstreams'.

However, breaches of the peace are now uncommon between them, as Laura and Chinko do not often meet. The pelican is quite expert in the duties of a soldier. She occasionally wears the uniform, and does "sentry-go" in front of a box in quite the approved style.

A long, narrow beak of sword-like dimensions is an excellent substitute for the real thing, and more than one member of the regiment, not excepting Chinko, has felt its keen edge.

It is reported that Laura found England very depressing after the sunshine of Egypt, but is now getting more acclimatized and contented with her life in the regiment.

THE SQUIRREL'S CUNNING

Storing Its Winter Supply—Why It Is a Game Bird Guard

Although the common red squirrel is one of the liveliest and most attractive of our wild creatures, a knowledge of its habits is more casual than intimate.

The past winter gave forest lovers an opportunity for studying squirrels to an extent seldom possible, as the mildness of the weather made neither for long nor deep hibernation. I was surprised at the number and variety of places where the little animal had stored its winter hoards. The smallness of these, too, was noteworthy, as they seldom contained more than a handful of foodstuff.

The larders were in hollow trees, old birds' nests, but most often in the ground a little below the surface, and although many of the hoards were at the foot of trees, the favorite place was in a field bordering a wood and about twenty or thirty yards from the edge. The latter is probably the safest larder of all, as marauding rats and mice do not venture so far outside the wood in winter.

After watching the squirrel going from one hoard to another, I have little doubt that its ability to find these is not a matter of memory or of instinct, but of smell. It is the same highly developed sense, too, that makes the squirrel an accomplished truffle hunter (for truffles are a great squirrel dainty), and I think that it must have been their smelling abilities that brought squirrels to a peach house in which they did a lot of damage.

Squirrel cunning defeated the most cleverly laid traps and other attempts at capture, and to save the fruit the unwelcome visitors had ultimately to be shot. The squirrel is one of the best game bird guards, and its winter stores have fed many a famished pheasant.

Beyond an occasional "chuck!" the squirrel does not pay much attention to a mere man, but immediately it espies a fox or stoat on the prowl it chatters loudly in the greatest excitement, and game birds never fail to profit by their sentinel's warnings, apparently knowing that the squirrel is no idle alarmist.

Pheasants scratch up and devour the squirrel's winter stores when other food is scarce, and as "pug" always wastes ten times the quantity of food he consumes, and scatters nuts, acorns, wild fruits and hedge berries which the game birds would not otherwise get, and which they thoroughly enjoy, it thus benefits them all the year round.

One of the prettiest sights is that of young squirrels taking their first lessons in climbing and jumping. Like most wild animals the squirrel can swim well when the occasion demands, but it does not love damp, and when passing through wet grass its tail is carried high and not foxwise, as it usually is when the squirrel is in motion.—From the Scotsman.

THE OLDEST FLAG

The flag of Denmark, a plain red banner bearing on it a white cross, is the oldest flag now in existence. For 300 years both Norway and Sweden were united with Denmark under this flag. In the year 1219 King Waldemar of Denmark, when leading his troops to battle against the Livonians, saw, or thought he saw, a bright light in the form of a cross in the sky. He held this appearance to be a promise of Divine aid, and pressed forward to victory. From this time he had the cross placed on the flag of his country, and called it the Dannebork—that is, strength of Denmark.

WOMEN'S AILMENTS CAUSED BY NEGLECT

ARE QUICKLY CURED AND ROBUST, SOUND HEALTH RESTORED BY DR. HAMILTON'S PILLS.

Women are on the whole more sickly than men. One reason is that their system is more complicated; another and more important reason is they put off measures of relief too long. At the beginning, constipation is the cause of nine-tenths of women's ailments. The blood becomes weakened and polluted—the nerves suffer, and a run down condition takes root.

Because of their mildness of action as a system regulator, because of their undoubted power to remove constipation, irregularities, no medicine for women can compare with Dr. Hamilton's Pills. The kidneys quickly respond to the remedial action of Dr. Hamilton's Pills and the result is as you would expect, pain in the back and side, shortness of breath, and bad color disappear—the functions of the body then operate naturally, congestion and pain are prevented and perfect health returns.

Thousands of happy women say Dr. Hamilton's Pills are the greatest and best blood-purifier, the finest complexion renewer, the most certain regulating medicine known. All dealers in 25c. boxes, or the Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Canada.

INJUSTICE IN COURT.

"A convicted burglar, brought before a judge in Maine a few days ago, was sentenced to the penitentiary for two years. Thereupon the prisoner cursed the court. The judge promptly increased the sentence to five years. "I don't care if you make it ten!" hotly retorted the burglar, with more profanity. Immediately the judge made it ten."—Cleveland Leader.

Now some of the newspapers of Canada and the United States think this man was used hardly. We think a man who had the nerve to pass such remarks under such circumstances deserved what he got.

THE APPOINTMENT OF MEDICAL HEALTH OFFICERS.

A few days ago a well-written letter appeared in The Times which earnestly urges the Whitney Government not to disturb the present system of appointing Medical Health Officers. We have not a word to say against the writer of that letter who signs himself "Sanitas", for we all know that self preservation is the first law of nature, and we are all alike in our love of life, and of all that makes life comfortable. But in fairness to the local Legislature, it may be said that disinterested people everywhere, are in favor of the Medical Health Officer being a government appointee. Such a change would remove him beyond the suspicion of favoritism, and would enable him to discharge the duties of his office fearlessly, with equal rights to all, and special favors to none. Under present conditions the M.H.O. is not free. He has to please all parties, and no matter how honest his intentions may be, if he does his duty to the public he will be sure to offend some unfriendly critic, or some amiable suffragette, or perhaps some of his best clients, who in a good natured way, would like, just for this once, to evade sanitary rules.

It may be noticed also that as he is [illegible] appointed by the local council he may at any time be removed at the pleasure or the caprice of that august body So that under present conditions the M.H.O. is handicapped in every direction. And outside of the large cities, it is well known that his salary is a mere pittance, and is altogether inadequate to make the M.H.O. independent enough to control and regulate the conflicting interests of the health department over which he may be appointed. In every sense we think the government appointment is the best.

Editorial Notes

What a difference! (And thank God there is!) between Canadian ways of Justice and those practised in certain portions of the United States. In yesterday's issue appeared a telegram from New Orleans, La., describing how a young man of that city deliberately shot and killed an old oysterman. The message proceeds to tell how the acknowledged murderer, practically because he was ill, was released on bail, furnished by his friends.

Under the new Ontario Insurance Act, where an undisputed claim arising from loss insured against in Ontario remains unpaid for sixty days after having become payable, or a disputed claim after final judgment in Ontario and tender of a valid discharge remains unpaid, and written notice of such non-payment has been given to the Superintendent, the license of the company may be suspended or cancelled.

Hamilton, Ont., is usually spoken of as "The Ambitious City." When one thinks of conditions in Castle Nesbit, of this City, and the excellent arrangements there, for care of the prisoners, it is almost laughable to read what the Hamilton Herald has to say about the jail there, as a result of the Grand Jury's visit. The foreman says: "We visited the jail, where we found forty six male and three female prisoners. The conditions were satisfactory, except that the building lacks proper ventilation and sanitary facilities. We recommend that electric lighting be immediately installed. We also noticed that some of the corridors are not safeguarded by iron grills. The jail is overcrowded."

In these days of feminine artificial aids to beauty, when "bangs," "rats," "puffs" and other kinds of aid to helping out Woman's Glory are generally used, it may interest our readers of the gentler sex to learn that the Chinese revolution is likely to exercise a considerable effect on the human hair market. Considerably over 150,000,000 Chinamen are affected by the republican decision to discard the pigtail. A great number of these obsolete appendages will ultimately find their way into the hair market. New York, London and Paris, and even Peterborough will doubtless receive their share, for the leading coiffure makers send travelers far and wide in search of hair. A reduction in the price of false hair will be the result of the pigtail harvest.

If only the papers of Peterborough were under the same regulations as the report of the House of Commons Debates!! In these latter reports it is decided that the type of the daily edition shall be kept standing, and the sheets of the daily issue shall be revised by an officer appointed by the House. Members may send corrections to the said officer to be embodied in his revise. That the time allowed for the aforesaid correction shall not exceed twenty-four hours after the delivery of the daily issue to the House; and that all corrections shall be sent to the Debates office within that time. If the daily papers of this city could only have a daily correction by those "written up" what a lot of trouble it would save local editors and reporters!

RABIES, HYDROPHOBIA

A History of the Disease and How to Treat it

During the past year many cases of rabies have been reported in Canada which [illegible] much loss of live stock and several fatalities [illegible] have been [illegible].

This is one of the oldest diseases known. In the fourth century B. C. it was described by Aristotle, who wrote: "Dogs suffer from a madness, which puts them in a state of fury, and all the animals that they bite when in this condition become also attacked by rabies.'

The season of the year makes very little difference, as the disease is just as prevalent in winter as it is in summer. This seems contrary to the idea of many people, who think that July and August, "dog days," are the only time that dogs are subject to rabies.

Cause

Rabies is caused in nearly all cases by the bite of a rabid animal. It is possible to contract the disease from the saliva, the tears from the eyes, or the milk of a rabid animal. The rabid dog is a source of danger a few days before the symptoms of the disease appear, but in no case before he was bitten by a rabid animal, or otherwise innoculated. Hot weather, lack of water or ill treatment will never in themselves produce rabies.

The dog is the principal source of which rabies is spread over the country.

Symptoms

The symptoms seldom develop in less than fourteen days after the animal was bitten—most commonly three to six weeks but they may not show for six months to a year. Not all animals bitten develop the disease. It depends somewhat upon the part of the body which was bitten. In man there is less danger if bitten through the clothing than upon the bare parts of the body. It is not uncommon for the symptoms to develop in less than two weeks when bitten upon the head. The symptoms show in one of two forms—furious or dumb.

Furious Rabies

With the furious form the dog is at first noticed to seek the company of his master more than usual, or he will hunt dark, secluded places. Sometimes he will make sudden starts towards objects. These conditions last for a day or two. Later he becomes restless, and will often travel twenty to thirty miles in a day. While he is on this trip he is very likely to bite cattle, hogs, and dogs often passing horse and man, unless they interfere with his course. He will usually return home unless he is killed. During this period he is irritable, seldom eating or drinking, not because he does not want food or water, nor because he is afraid of water, for he is not, but from the fact that his throat is paralyzed and he cannot swallow. Often he will force sticks and stones down his throat in efforts to satisfy hunger and thirst. This period of irritation lasts for two to three days, followed by a general paralysis, which has already taken place in the throat, as shown by the voice, which has already changed to a prolonged howl, and the inability to swallow. This is followed by paralysis and death, the entire symptoms lasting from four to ten days.

Dumb Rabies

The dog seeks his master's company or may hide in dark places, being unable to eat or drink, the lower jaw hangs down and the tongue protrudes which may swell and turn dark. This condition is followed by paralysis and death in four to ten days after the first symptoms appear.

Symptoms

Cattle are prone to chase chickens dogs, and may run at a man, whom they are less apt to attack. Often falling down from no apparent cause twitching of muscles, inability to eat, due to paralysis, often showing signs of sexual excitement even when pregnancy is well advanced, but seldom biting. These symptoms are followed by paralysis and death.

The horse is often more vicious than cattle, biting anything within reach and shows many of the symptoms shown by cattle.

Diagnosis

This is made from microscopic examination of the brain, which shows small round or oval bodies from 1-25,000 to 1-1,000 of an inch in diameter. They have never been found unless the animal has been inoculated with rabies virus. There are also changes in the nervous ganglia in the last stage of rabies, but this manner of diagnosis is more uncertain and of little use in the early stages of the disease. Sticks and stones may be found in the stomach of a rabid dog

Treatment

This consists of a preventative treatment (Pasteur), which must be taken before the symptoms have developed. In order to be effective it should be taken within a few days after having been bitten by a rabid animal. The treatment may also be given to valuable domestic animals.

NINE HEALTH COMMANDMENTS

1. Keep windows open day and night.
2. Do not spit.
3. Breathe through the nose by keeping the mouth shut.
4. Drink pure water.
5. Eat slowly, take well-cooked meals, and cultivate regular habits.
5. Wear loose clothing of seasonable material.
7. Take regular open-air exercise, in sunshine if possible.
8. Wash the whole body at least once a week.
9. Work but do not worry.

A balanced ration is just as essential for poultry as it is for other live-stock. A few crumbs from the table or an occasional feed of corn will never produce profitable fowls. It pays to feed a balanced ration.

QUITE IMPOSSIBLE

"You claim to be a great clairvoyant?" said the sad-faced man, as he entered the thought-reader's rooms. "They say you can tell the past, present, and future. Nothing is hidden from you."

"It is true," answered the medium. "For two dollars I will tell you—"

"I'll give you ten dollars if you can tell the one secret of the past," interrupted the sad-eyed one quickly, and put the money promptly on the counter. "What was it that my wife told me to bring home for supper to-night?"

And the thought-reader shook her head sadly, and handed back the money; but not very cheerfully, as the advertisement promised.

Proven Oil Lands
Consisting of 240 Acres, King's County,
Coalinga, California, U.S.A.

The Company's property consists of 240 acres of patented and proven OIL-BEARING LAND, situated in King's County, California, east of the croppings, and they have already struck oil which is high gravity, 33 per cent., and a "gusher" is confidently expected on from 400 to 600 feet additional drilling.

In this particular location THERE ARE NO DRY HOLES. Many companies in Coalinga have the same capitalization, or greater than that of the DOMINION OIL COMPANY, have control of only 20, 40 or 80 acres, and even these companies are making big money for their shareholders. Compared with them, the holdings of the DOMINION OIL COMPANY are immense, and when developed and producing oil should be worth MILLIONS OF DOLLARS. The Company's well has been drilled to a depth of 2480 feet.

The Canadian Coalinga Company, which adjoins the DOMINION OIL COMPAEY'S property on the north, have their well down about 3000 feet, at which depth the oil came in, and is now producing 7500 barrels per day, which means an income of $8250 per day, and their stock is selling at $20.00 per share. This well is only a short distance from the one now being drilled by the DOMINION OIL COMPANY. Mr. G. W. Warner, who has charge of the DOMINION OIL COMPANY'S development work, and who is without doubt one of the best authorities on oil, predicts that with from 400 to 600 feet further drilling, the DOMINION OIL COMPANY will strike the same flow, and he believes that the Company will get an enormous flow of the light oil, for which there is a ready market at from $1.10 per barrel up.

EQUIPMENT AND DEVELOPMENT: The property of the Dominion Oil Company is thoroughly equipped with the most modern and improved standard drilling rig, derrick and bunk house to comfortably house and accommodate its men, and the drilling of the first well is being rapidly pushed. The well is now over 2480 feet in depth, and the first oil has been encountered, but another 500 to 600 feet will have to be drilled before encountering the rich pay sands. It is the intention of the Directors to GREATLY INCREASE THE EQUIPMENT, and other wells will be drilled and development pushed in a vigorous manner. The development so far has been carried on mainly at the expense of the Directors.

DIVIDENDS: This is what most interests the investors. We would be glad if we could tell you when and how much you will make if you will join us, but we cannot. As business men, we will not try to deceive you by glowing forecasts regarding the future. Judging, however, by what others have done and are doing, the returns on your money should be ample to satisfy the most exacting. We promise you as early returns as possible, consistent with good management, and we promise you every penny your money earns in the enterprise, pro rata with your holdings in the Company. To do more than this would be to "count your chickens before they are hatched," and to put a premium on deception. We make no big promises, but the Company's property is big. The Directors' intentions are sincere, and our judgment is that your investment will be safer with us and far more profitable to you, and in a shorter time than with those who figure out just how much you will make providing certain things happen, as well as the day and hour you will get your dividends. The officers of this Company have far more invested than any treasury stockholder is liable to invest, and are giving brains and time without salaries. They are anxious for dividends as soon as possible, but they cannot get them any sooner than you do, for all are going to be treated alike. This ought to appeal to you as an investor, for you are placing your money with men who believe they have the best proposition going, but do not promise you great things just to get you to invest.

The stock is now selling very rapidly, and as this is an investment of an exceptionally meritorious nature you cannot afford not to investigate. WRITE US AT ONCE FOR PROSPECTUS and full particulars of the DOMINION OIL COMPANY, which will be mailed to you without any obligation or expense on your part.

One of Calgary's close-in residential sub-divisions. City water is now in the adjoining divisions and sewer system is to be installed this spring. We expect these improvements in Capitol Hill this summer. Street car service is at present within two or three blocks of Capitol Hill. The City of Calgary has purchased Block 68, Capitol Hill, on which to build a large public school. A number of nice homes have already been built in Capitol Hill, and many more are in course of construction.

Lots in this sub-division are selling in pairs at $250 to $350 per lot. We offer you one block of forty lots, close to Block 68 at $210 per lot, on terms of Third Cash and Balance four, eight and twelve months, with interest at 8 per cent. on deferred payments. This block will readily sell for $300 per lot, or more, within the next six months. The block is high and level, and every lot is perfect. This is a gilt-edged investment. WE Want YOU To Read About GROUARD

The First City, Gateway and Commercial Centre of the Great

PEACE RIVER COUNTRY

Situated at the west end of Lesser Slave Lake controlling the entrance to the rich and fertile Lands of the great Peace River District. This is not a subdivision of a proposed townsite but part of an established town, first settlement and distributing centre of the Peace River Country

"I can forsee a very great future for Grouard"—a statement made by a party recently returned from there.

Farm lands and farming made Winnipeg, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Brandon, so you can imagine the future for GROUARD with forty million acres of the richest farm lands in the world behind it. The Peace River Country, at no great distant date, will be the home of a million prosperous farmers. Think of the business that will be done at GROUARD—the entrance and distributing center situated as it will be with rail and steamboat transportation. Hundreds of settlers are now going into the rich districts around GROUARD, now outfitting, trading and buying goods at GROUARD.

Read all of This Page

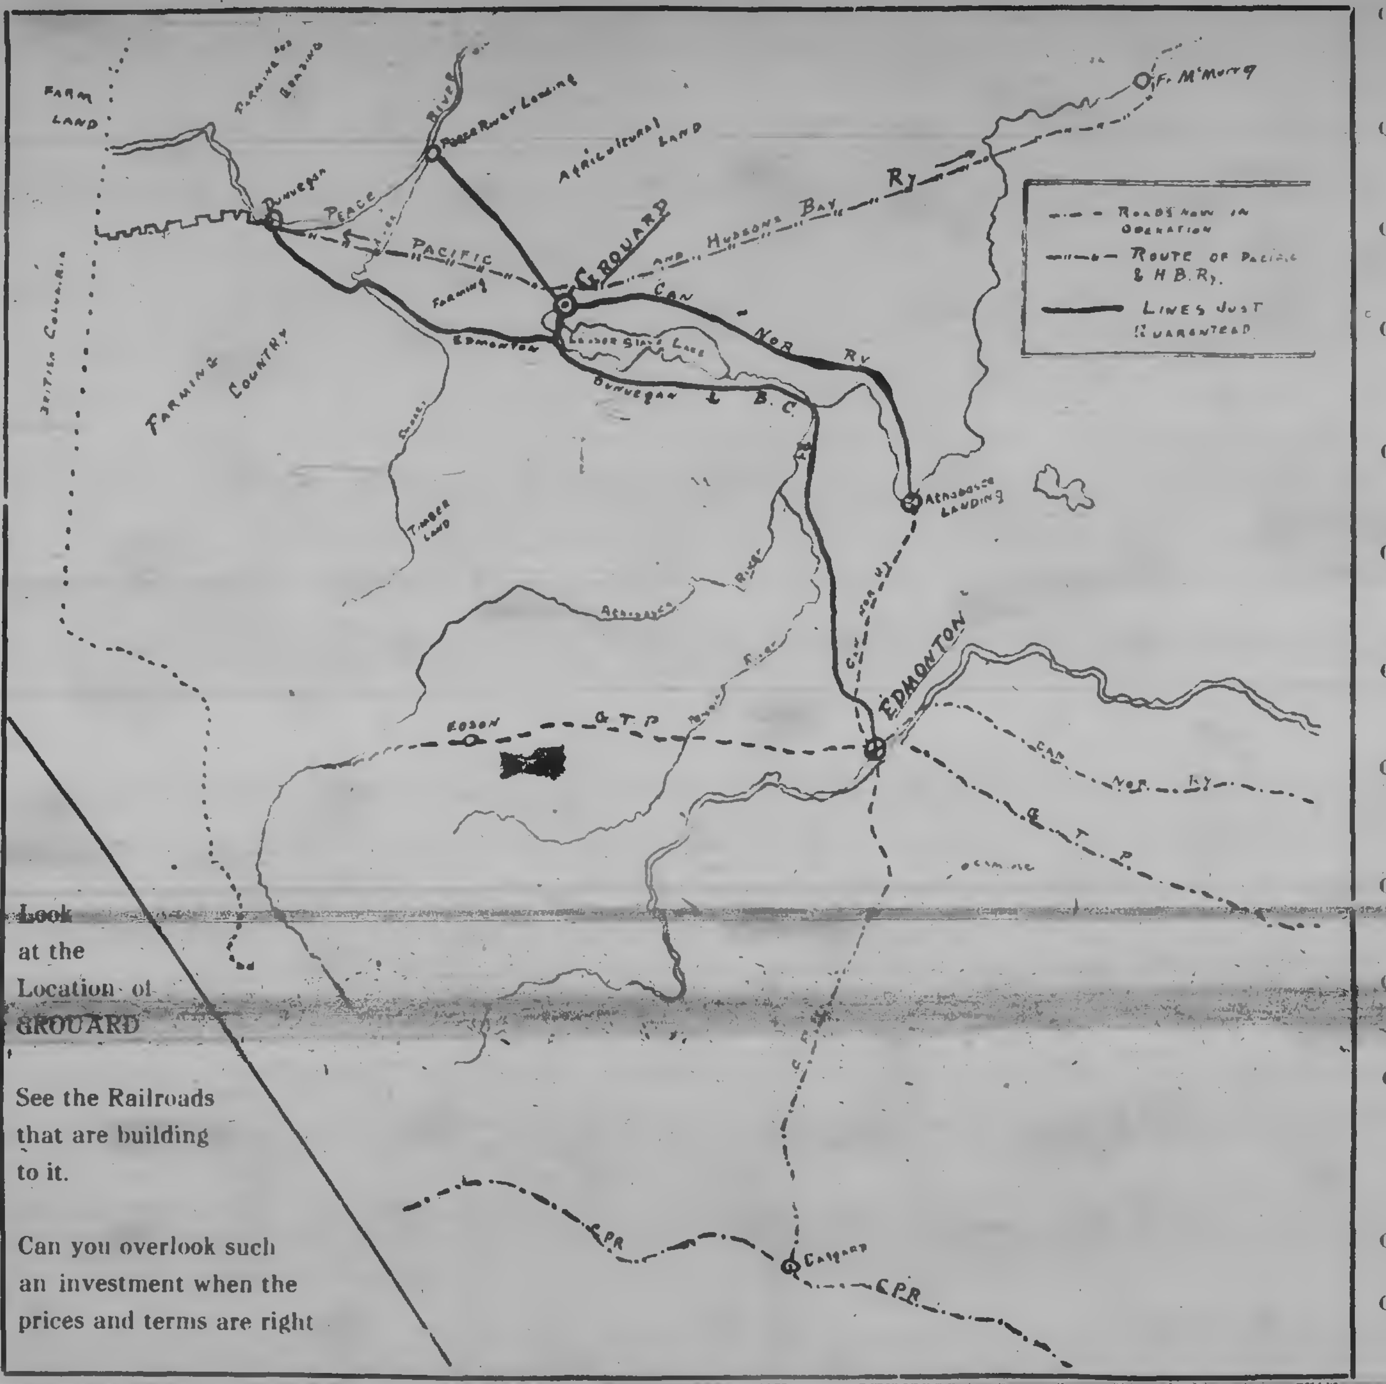
GROUARD is the place for the business man, capitalist, professional man, investor or farmer.

This is not a proposed townsite, but an established town of years standing.

Now that the Wonderful Peace River farming country has become the most prominent feature of the present time, and the settlers are pouring into that district, GROUARD has attained an importance as to location and possibilities never before attained by any town.

GROUARD IS ESTABLISHED—has a post office, stores, churches, government telegraph, telephone system, weather bureau, doctors, shops, saw mill, government land office for the far famed Peace River district, general stores of the Hudson's Bay Company, and the large firm of Revillon Bros., the Peace River Trading and Land Company, also the Bank of Commerce and Royal Bank have established branches there, with other banks to follow. You know banks do not go into a town, city or country where there is no business, or where the business will not increase. Follow the banks and you can never lose.

BUY LOTS IN GROUARD and WATCH THEM ADVANCE IN VALUE



Look at the Location of GROUARD

See the Railroads that are building to it.

Can you overlook such an investment when the prices and terms are right

GROUARD is the natural gateway to the Peace River country, containing 40,000,000 acres of good agricultural land.

GROUARD will be the trade distributing point for all the country of which it holds the key position.

GROUARD is the natural shipping point for the great cattle trade that will accrue to this Peace River country.

GROUARD is rich in the surrounding varied natural resources, and its property fulfils every requirement for safe and profitable investment.

GROUARD is the head of a waterway of approximately 3,000 miles of lake and river transportation.

GROUARD is so important that three railroads are heading towards it and building is being done as fast as man can do it.

GROUARD is so important that banks have already established there, and more are making ready to follow.

GROUARD has as its foundation the products and revenue that will accrue from millions of acres of the best agricultural land in Canada.

GROUARD will "stand up" under the most rigid investigation as to its resources and possibilities.

GROUARD is backed up by "THE GOLD MEDAL WHEAT DISTRICT OF THE WORLD.

GROUARD will be larger in a couple of years than most of the townsites that have been placed on the market for the last ten years, because it has something substantial behind it.

GROUARD is what we say it is and more too.

GROUARD is the place you cannot afford to overlook in your investments, and it will make money for you.

YOU are now having placed before you the first opportunity to invest in THE City of the Peace River District, backed up by the greatest area of the best agricultural land in Canada.

Three railways are heading towards Grouard. What other new towns or cities can point to such transportation advantages right at the start as this? Think of it: three railroads, making this a divisional point, also water transportation. Would these roads build there if Grouard was not going to be one of the most important points in Western Canada? This fact alone is sufficient to convince you this investment is one of merit.

The Canadian Northern Railway is already at Athabasca Landing east of Grouard and property bought at that point a year ago for from $100 to $300 per lot is now selling at from $1000 to $1500 per lot

Government Guarantee Railroads

Great Railroads make Great Cities

That is an accepted fact—it is indisputable. The whole history of America proves it. Now, the man who thinks of making an investment, if he is shrewd and far-seeing and anxious to safeguard his money in every way possible, will consider, not only the activity to be caused by the railway, but will consider the surrounding country, what it is, and what it will produce. Look at the key map above, and trace the Canadian Northern Railway from Edmonton to Athabasca Landing and ON TO GOURARD. This is one of the lines that is now being built. The road is already in operation to Athabasca Landing and construction from there west to Grouard is uder way. The Alberta Government within the last three weeks GUARANTEED THE NECESSARY BONDS FOR THE CONSTRUCTION of this road, thus making it absolute, and under such guarantee, must be in operation within a certain time.

LOOK AGAIN, and trace the line of the Edmonton-Dunvegan and British Columbia Railway. You will see Grouard on its line. The bonds for the construction of this line WERE ALSO GUARANTEED within the last three weeks, by the Alberta Government. Construction is now starting, and goes on with all possible speed. This line connects with the Grand Trunk Pacific at Edmonton.

Would the Government guarantee bonds for the construction of these railways if the country they were entering was not good? Would they go to Grouard if it was not important?

Railway Terminous on This Property

Again, trace the line of the Pacific and Hudsons Bay Railway which runs from the Pacific Coast in British Columbia, directly east to Fort Churchill on the Hudsons Bay. This road is being built by English capital. You will see this road runs through Grouard, and further the owners of this property have entered into an agreement with this railway, turning over to it some fifty acres of the property we are offering you, and the railway company have agreed to make their Grouard terminals consisting of station, freight sheds, and all other buildings, yards, etc., right on this property. This ensures the terminals for Grouard of the Pacific and Hudsons Bay railway right on our property.

Further, the main street of this commercial centre property runs down to the deep water frontage of the Lake, which is the head of an immense water transportation mileage, and we are turning over to the Town of Grouard sufficient water frontage for municipal owned docks and wharves.

Lots that sold in Athabasca Landing (look on map) a year ago at $200 to $350 are now being sold to-day from $1000 to $1500 each. Why? Because the railroad has just reached there, and they are wanted; the same thing will occur in Grouard shortly.

Your success in life, if you are a working man, depends largely on how you save and invest the few pennies, that you now throw away carelessly; if you are an employer, how you invest your dividends, your surplus money.

Trace back the real big fortunes of this or any other country and you'll find they started from real estate. The wealth of the country to-day is real estate.

Land—the "backbone of to-day's business. The land or property owner is the king among men. If you are tired of working on the dead level "get-no-where" of city life, if you are held down by the man "higher-up" or if you have surplus money to invest buy property; become an owner of real estate in a growing community, in a place where the property is and will be wanted for business purposes, and above all in a city or town backed up by an agricultural district and the railroads.

We offer you the opportunity. Save 17 or 30c a day, make your first step towards independence—a protection for your family, a sound investment.

We know that every lot in Grouard will be taken up in sixty days. Our sub-division is not large. Is part of the town.

We are sure if you knew what we know about Grouard and the Peace River Country you would not hesitate a single minute.

You are dealing with the right kind of people; ask the Quebec Bank at Vancouver, or the Bank of Hamilton, Winnipeg, or Bradstreets who we are. YOU ARE DEALING WITH A CLEAN CUT PROPOSITION. Ask the Board of Trade at Grouard, or the Managers of the Bank of Commerce, or Royal Bank at Grouard what it is.

You have read this bulletin, we have told you the story, it is now entirely up to you.

Are you going to let 17 or 30c a day stand between you and success.

Be an owner of property in Canada's coming great Peace River City.

Act to-day.

In giving quotations of Peterborough market prices, it is somewhat hard to segregate the "hog market." Judging by prices paid for everything on the local market, the word "hog" is not specific in application but general in practice.

FOR ASSISTANCE OF EMIGRANTS

British Society That Will Advance Part of Necessary Funds—Matrimonial Bureau

New impetus to emigration from Britain to her overseas dominions has been provided by the Empire Emigration Society, an undertaking organized to assist those who wish to emigrate but are unable to do so for lack of funds. Lord Ridley and Lord Stanhurst are actively interested in this society and act as trustees of its funds. Not the ill nourished and poverty stricken but the able bodied with some savings to their credit are the class of emigrant to whom chances are being offered. Soon after it was established, the Empire Emigration Society had over 1,500 people on its books with $10,000 at their disposal, who were anxious to save the balance in order to win through to hoped for prosperity in Canada, Australia or New Zealand.

The intending emigrants have to open an account with the Society with a minimum deposit of four dollars. Each subsequent payment must not be less than one dollar. As soon as the depositor has paid in half the necessary amount his passage is booked and arrangements made to supply him with employment when he arrives at his destination. Every class of work is dealt with, and steps are taken to help emigrants to follow their own callings overseas. Typical of the variety of applicants in touch with the Society are four cases the secretary selected at random. A nurse, who desires to go to British Columbia has enough money to pay her passage, but is in need of advice as to the best means of going; a stonemason, who means to emigrate as soon as he can raise sufficient funds and who has paid a first instalment of seven dollars; a widow, who is an expert dressmaker, and hopes to have saved enough by the end of June to go out to Canada; a doctor with some capital who wants to know of a colony where he may practice his profession and at the same time give his two sons a start in farming.

The Duke of Marlborough recently gave a broad hint to the surplus women of England to go to the dominions beyond the seas where men were waiting for wives. Said the Duke: "There are a million more women than men in England, and there are a million more men than there are women in the dominions." So, indirectly, the Empire Emigration Society is playing the part of marriage bureau for Canadian bachelors, and domestic helps all over the country are becoming infected with the travel fever after dreaming of more congenial careers in new lands.

FAMOUS FOLKS

Sir Charles Wyndham practised as a doctor before going on the stage.

Sir Edward Clarke's greatest hobbies are boating and piano-playing.

Violets have always been the favorite flowers of the ex-Empress Eugenie.

Stamp-collecting is one of the pastimes of Mr. Alfred Austin, the Poet Laureate.

Lord Charles Beresford collects ball programmes as a hobby, especially favoring those painted by lady artists.

Mme. Patti posseses an old doll called Henriette, which was given to her when she was seven years old for singing nicely.

Mr. Hall Caine makes a practice of visiting every place he intends to describe in a novel. When engaged on a story he writes on an average 1,500 words a day.

Mr. Louis N. Parker, the dramatist, was born in France, his father was an American, his mother an Englishwoman, his first language was Italian, and he was educated in Germany.

A GROTESQUE OFFERTORY

Mengo Cathedral, in Uganda, which was recently destroyed by lightning, was probably the largest edifice in Central Africa, being capable of containing nearly 5,000 people. It was consecrated about six years ago, and an offertory of grotesquely varied gifts was collected on the occasion. This consisted of 13 cows, four goats, 125 eggs, 130 fowls, 75,000 cowrie shells, and a number of coins. The cows, for lack of room, were not taken inside the Cathedral, but the goats were led up to the altar and presented to the bishop, while the fowls were brought in big bamboo crates.

MELANCHOLY IN FLOWERS

Curious, indeed, the doom assigned to two of the fairest of the spring flowers, for if primroses are forsaken the violet is a nun. Perhaps this atmosphere of gentle melancholy increases the affection inspired by these favorite flowers which seem dearer far to human kind than such rivals as the brilliant marsh marigold, [illegible] and the dangerous aconite.—Black and White.

On the Wrong Side

Of the goals obtained in the three chief English leagues this season, over thirty have been registered by players scoring against their own sides.

Tunes for Motor Horns

"Let's All Go Down the Strang," and other topical melodies, can now be given on motor horns by means of brass cylindrical records.

Wood vs. Iron Ships

A ship built of iron weighs about one-fifth less than a wooden vessel of the same dimensions.

Gum From Starch

The gum used on postage-stamps is made from potato starch.

Students' Fees

Last year the Carnegie Trust paid students' fees amounting to $242,000.

Judging by reports of the Winnipeg Hockey game, the Eatons were eaten by the Victorias.

Although the returns of St. Andrew's congregation vote in regard to church union, are not yet known, there is a majority in favor of the movement.

A local contemporary speaks of the loose enforcement of the license law in Peterborough. Is there a village, town or city in Ontario under Hanna's system where the law is better enforced, or where there is less drunkenness, in proportion to population?

SEVERE

A good story is going the rounds at a certain university regarding one of the sarcastic professors, who was recently conducting an oral examination in a very scientific way.

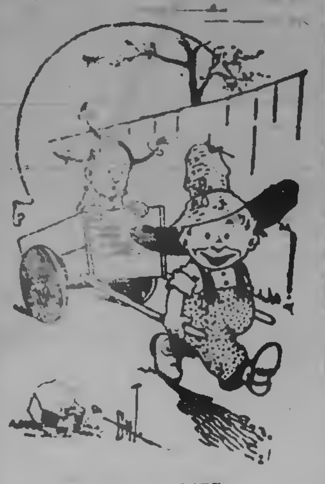
There was one student, handsome, easy and self possessed, who appeared to be utterly ignorant of the simplest [illegible] of the subject.

Professor W. put question after another to him, without receiving one [illegible] reply. Finally, the student [illegible].

"[illegible] very unfortunate, Professor; you never ask me anything I know."

The professor said nothing, but gravely tore off a tiny piece of paper from a convenient pad.

"Here, Mr. [illegible]" he said, handing it to the student, "write all you know. Take plenty of time—there's no [illegible]."



SUCH IS LIFE

She:—"Oh, Jimmy, you should have been a horse."

He:—"Would yer listen to dat! Dat's what comes of making a donkey of yerself fer de sake of de goils!"

HINTS TO TRAVELLERS

"John, a pedlar came around to-day selling stove polish. He was a very agreeable gentleman. Why, he talked so pleasantly about the weather."

"Really?"

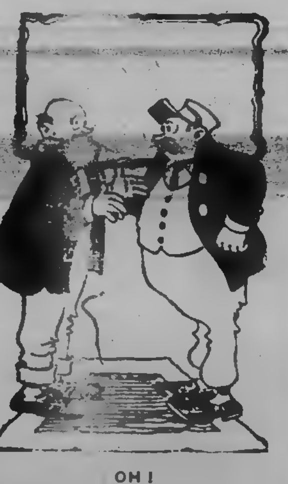
"Yes, and I bought a packet. Then he complimented the baby and I bought another packet."

"H'm!"

"Presently he said our hall was kept in better order than any in the neighborhood, and then I bought another packet."

"Great Scot!"

"Before he left he said he thought I was your daughter instead of being old enough to be your wife. Then I bought three additional packets. Oh, it doesn't do any harm to encourage a real gentleman when you meet one."



OH!

Householder:—"Do you guarantee that the meter registers the amount of gas we burn?"

Inspector:—"I'm not going to argue, sir. All I know is that it registers the amount of gas you've got to pay for."

LOST HER TRAIN

An Irishman was lately employed by one of our large railway companies as a porter. Shortly after he began his duties a woman went up to him and said:

"I have just lost the train; how long shall I have to wait for the next?"

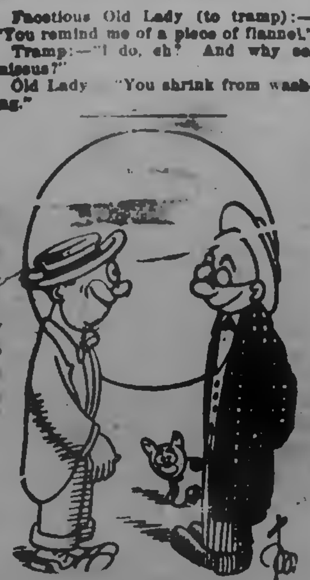
"Be jabers! you had better go and find the one you lost, else the company will be after yez," returned Pat.

SHRINKS FROM WASHING

Facetious Old Lady (to tramp):—"You remind me of a piece of flannel."

Tramp:—"I do, eh? And why so, missus?"

Old Lady:—"You shrink from washing."



EVEN AS YOU AND I

"Why does Phunny write so many jokes against motorists?"

We notice that hundreds of thousands of dollars are being voted towards steam services between various Canadian and Canadian and Foreign points. Just a few handfuls of these greenbacks would establish a street car service between the west and the eastern banks of the Otonabee, in this city.

HOME HINTS

When Making Mustard, add a few drops of vinegar if you wish it to keep.

Warm Dish Covers as well as dishes if you want your dinner to be served really hot.

Turnip Peelings should always be well washed, then added to soups to which they impart a delicious flavor.

Spanish Onion Salad.—A cold boiled Spanish onion makes an excellent salad if sliced and dressed with oil and vinegar in the usual manner.

Flies in the Larder are a pest in summer. Begin early in the spring to sponge the windows twice a week with a weak solution of carbolic acid and water. If this is done regularly it will keep away flies.

To Cook Salt Fish Nicely it should be soaked in cold water the night before it is used, with a few spoonfuls of vinegar. Place it in cold water to cover, and gradually bring to the boil. Simmer for a quarter of an hour.

Mahogany Stain is made thus: Into an earthenware jar put one pint of linseed oil, one ounce of alkanet root, and one ounce of rose pink. Let it stand twenty-four hours, stirring occasionally. Rub it well into the wood with a woollen cloth.

Burn all Kitchen Waste as far as possible in the closed stove. When the fire is red draw the fuel towards the front bars, place the refuse at the back of the grate, and if necessary, a little coal over. Open damper, and the rubbish will be quickly destroyed without smell.

Eggs and Cheese.—Cut some small squares of toast, butter them thickly, and put on each a slice of hard-boiled egg. Melt in a pan any scraps of cheese you may have, with a little milk. Season with pepper, salt, and made mustard. When smooth and thick, pour over the eggs and serve at once.

When Cooking Salt Meat, first wash it well in cold water, then place in a saucepan, cover with fresh cold water, and bring to the boil. Skim, and simmer gently till the joint is cooked.

Pastry Requires a sharp steady oven, where it can cook quickly. Careful watching is necessary, and a wise cook will test her oven with a piece of paper or thin slice of bread before commencing her work.

MOTHERS' MISTAKES

Don't Handicap Girls by Doing Things For Them

I know a mother, says a writer, who is so managing and capable that she never gives the girls a chance to show what they can do.

If one of them is going to make a blouse, she will say, "My dear, you'll only spoil the stuff; you'd better let me cut it out for you."

And it generally ends in mother making the blouse.

Or one of the girls will offer to help with the housekeeping. "Thank you, dear, but it's less trouble to do it myself; I know where everything is," says the managing mamma.

The mother who does this kind of thing is placing her girls at a serious disadvantage.

If they don't experiment and learn how to do things, how are they to know?

When they have homes of their own, and have to do things, it will possibly be a very serious thing for them to be so very incapable, and have to start learning duties they should by rights be proficient in.

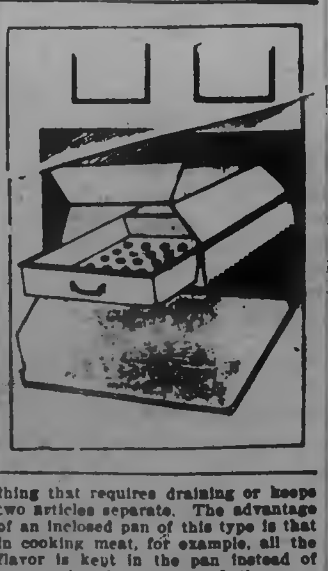
Don't make the mistake of handicapping the girls like that.

Let them have their share in the home duties, and, if they sometimes make mistakes, and even "spoil the stuff," the wise mother will comfort herself with the knowledge that it is all practice towards perfection.

CLOSED ROASTING PAN

Tray Slides In and Out and Cover Keeps the Flavor In

A combination pan that can be used either for roasting meat and potatoes or for baking bread has been invented by a Colorado man. The bottom portion is rectangular, and above it rises a slanting top like a mansard roof. A tray slides back and forth in the casing on slideways that run along the sides. The front end of this tray operates to close the lower half of the opening in the front end of the casing, and a hinged flap closes the upper half. Across the centre of the pan is a flat tray with perforations that allow the draining of liquid from anything that requires draining or keeps two articles separate. The advantage of an inclosed pan of this type is that in cooking meat, for example, all the flavor is kept in the pan instead of evaporating in steam, and the meat is done moister. Articles cooked in it require less attention than in an old style utensil, too.



Local Cheese Men to Meet.

The annual convention of the Peterborough Cheese and Butter Makers' Association, which will be held in the city council chambers on Wednesday, March 20th, at 1.30 p.m., promises to be one of the largest ever held by the Association. Gompers, Mitchell and Morrison on Trial at Washington.

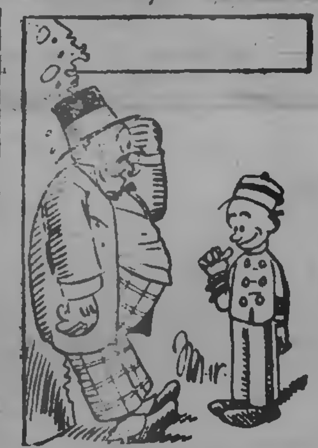
Washington, Mar. 12.—Samuel Gompers, John Mitchell and Frank Morrison, the three Federation of Labor officials, being tried in the District of Columbia Supreme Court before the full bench of justices, to-day were severely scored by Attorney Darlington, of the prosecutors, who characterized their alleged violation of the Buck Stove and Range injunction as "flagrant, defiant and conscious."

Mr. Darlington declared the case should have been entitled "law against anarchy," because of the position taken by the respondents that they would follow their own inclinations despite the opinions of the tribunals created by the constitution to interpret the law.

Pekin, Mar. 12.—The suffragettes of China, outdoing their Western sisters, are desirous of asserting their military valor. At Shanghai, the Chinese girls at the Chang Yu school wrote to the leader of the republican forces offering their aid as soldiers.

"Heaven has given women the same rights as man," the letter says. "Soon the Manchus will be chased out of China, but till now, no regiment of women has been formed. We wish to take a share with the men of China in crushing our enemies. The needle does not suffice for us. We ask for arms."



HOME DUTIES

Stage Manager:—"Where is the six-year-old child-wonder? The audience is getting impatient."

Door-keeper.—"She's gone down to the station. Her daughter was married to-day and she wanted to see her off for her honeymoon."

NOT AN IMPOSTOR

He was a poor, downtrodden specimen of humanity, and the heart of the millionaire merchant was touched. He stopped for a moment to listen to the beggar's plea.

"I'm starving, sir," wailed the unfortunate one, and tears stood in his eyes. "And this is the last thing we have in the world—my poor wife's wedding-ring!"

Then the merchant remembered. He looked more closely into the man's face, and, all of a sudden, became exceedingly mad.

"You—you scoundrel!" he spluttered. "Why, it was only last week I bought your wife's wedding-ring from you to save you from starvation! You're an impostor, sir! Get—"

"An impostor!" cried the weary one indignantly. "Oh, no, sir! You're quite mistaken! This ring belongs to my second wife—I was married again last Monday!"

PRESENCE OF MIND

It was the annual concert of the Slowcombe Philharmonic Society, and the young man who came from the city was obviously bored.

At last one singer tried him more than usual. Lines of pain showed on his face as he leaned forward to express himself audibly to his elderly neighbor, for the young man, being musical, felt the need of sympathy.

"Did you ever hear, in the whole course of your existence," he whispered, in disgust, "such horribly discordant, ear-splitting—"

The old gentleman frowned.

"That's my daughter, sir, and if—"

But the young man waved aside the interruption and, with scarcely a tremor, went on.

"Such ear-splitting chatter as these idiots behind us are making! Really, I can scarcely catch one word of the song!"

TOO MANY TRAINS

A railway guard busily engaged in getting his train ready to start accidentally trod on a lady's dress as she swept by.

"Oh, you clumsy man!" she exclaimed, the sudden weight from behind bringing her to a standstill. "Please be a little more careful."

"Beg pardon, madam," replied the guard, "but I can't possibly attend to two trains at once."

Of Interest to Local Poultry Men.

It is generally known that the Peterborough Poultry Association is a live institution and advancing poultry breeding in this city and county. It will interest the chicken fanciers to learn that last week Mr. P. A. MONEY AFFAIRS OF YOUR CHILD

The Advisability of Giving Them a Definite Allowance and Cultivating Thrift

One day last summer a mother took her children to a popular picnic park. After the fashion of children, they came to her at frequent intervals throughout the day with requests for money for pony rides, merry-go-round trips, ice-cream, and all the things that children think essential to their pleasure on such occasions. When the mother counted up at night, she was astonished to find how much money had been spent.

"I think," she said to her husband, "that our present method with the children will make spendthrifts of them. They have no idea of the value of money."

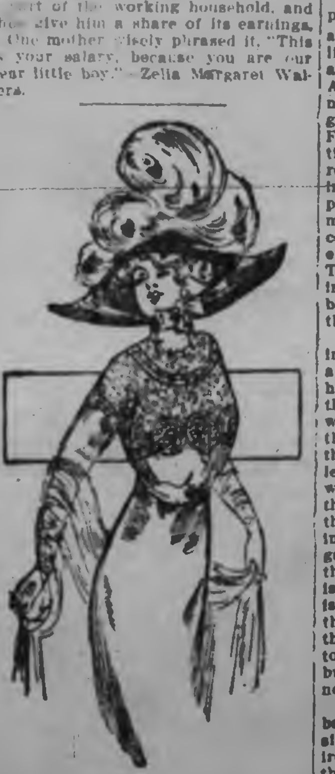
When next they were going to the park, the mother gave to each child a sum of money in his own pocketbook. She explained that this money was for the picnic, and when it was spent they could not have more. They considered the spending of money carefully, often consulting with their mother. They weighed different things, and decided which they would rather have, and, when the money was gone, there was no coaxing or whining.

The mother decided, too, that each child should have a weekly allowance, instead of coming to her with their little wants. The children were five and six years old, and they were given five cents a week each. The first week the money was all spent the first afternoon. They bought some marbles, and the rest went for candy. On Sunday they were sadly distressed because they had no coppers for Sunday school. Mother did not supply any, and they never forgot again. In a very short time they wanted things that cost more than five cents, and so they learned to deny themselves and save for a definite object. After that, at mother's suggestion, they put a nickel in the bank each week—that bank that was to take them through college by and by. Of course they made many mistakes, but the parents argued that it was better to make the mistakes with the coppers than with the dollars after awhile. When the other children first learned that they had money, they used to coax them into foolish expenditures, but after a few disappointments in getting things that they had planned, they learned to resist this temptation.

By the suggestion that can always be given in stories, the mother gradually trained them to buy less candy and satisfy their appetites with some harmless indulgence. When the children were a year older, their allowance was increased.

In one of the recent magazines, a writer argued against giving children an allowance, saying that it gave them the feeling that the world owed them a living. In my experience I would draw an inference exactly opposite. The child who is accustomed to receive [illegible] he asks for from his parents would be very likely to get this irresponsible feeling, but one who has a definite sum to depend upon, and knows that he must use it wisely, develops a sense of thrift. The child in a well-conducted home always has some little duties, and, while he should regard them as a labor of love and not feel that he is specifically paid for them, yet they make him, to the extent of his ability, a part of the working household, and thus give him a share of its earnings.

One mother wisely phrased it, "This is your salary, because you are our dear little boy."—Zelia Margaret Walters.



A HANDSOME BLOUSE

The semi-made kimona blouse is a boon to the woman who desires handsome effects but cannot afford the finished garments. All-over lace is one of the favorite materials for the separate blouse, as well as chiffon, and an unusually dainty design which brings out the beauty of the lace is shown in the sketch. The bolero effect is very smart and the arrangement of the band trimmings new and effective.

AN ORANGE PLANT

A lovely plant, suitable for window portable decoration, can be raised from the pips of a sweet orange. The pips should be taken out when the orange is very ripe, and sown in an ordinary flower-pot, filled with light soil. In a few weeks shoots will appear above the surface and develop into a fine hardy plant, which will remain green both summer and winter.

The King and Queen of Italy are to come from Rome to assist at the ceremony. The German Emperor will also be present. Already a large number of visitors have ordered rooms at the hotels. The scaffolding is now being removed from the

FLESH FLIES

Can Do No Damage If Given No Place to Lay Their Eggs

When the sheep's wool becomes filthy and the skin irritated, an ideal condition is made for the work of the maggot fly. And when the maggots get a start they create a more and more friendly harbor for their kind as they work and increase in numbers under the wool. A sheep infected with maggots is a most pitiful sight, helpless against the parasites eating out its flesh until the sheep dies, its flesh gnawed out in a most cruel manner. For the sake of humanity, if for no other reason, sheep should be saved from much suffering.

These flies can do no damage if not given a suitable place to lay their eggs. Sheep should be watched carefully, especially in warm damp weather, and dirty tag-locks or other filth clipped off and a little tar dabbed on if the skin is chafed. These maggots also get in their work under rams' horns. Indeed, a ram with heavy horns lying close to his head will hardly pass through a summer without infection unless the flies are kept away by putting some tar on the ram's head.

An infected sheep can be told by the fact that it refuses to eat, stands with its head down and most often by itself, and stamps its feet or jerks its head exactly as irritation by maggots would lead one to expect. The remedy is simple. Cut away the wool close. Clean out all maggots, using turpentine to wash them out. Smear the place thoroughly with tar. Then watch the sheep to see that the flies do not again start in the same place. Thoroughness in cleaning out the parasites is essential, for one left in will start the damage all over.

GOOD CHICKENS

Something to Keep them Busy—The Ideal Pen

Chickens that are penned up should have their houses cleaned out twice a week at least, and their runs dug up (to loosen the earth) once a week, which enables them to have a little exercise in the way of scratching. Their morning meal should consist of potato peelings and all scraps from the table, boiled down and thickened, after draining well, with barley meal, with a dash of pepper in, and when cooled down, given; their water vessels washed and filled. For mid-day meal, a good size cabbage, hung to allow them to get round it, and high enough for them to peck at, which keeps them busy for some considerable time, and, for a change, a swede hung is very good, too. For their last meal give barley, a little wheat, or darry, and occasionally, small Indian corn. A box kept in the run, with all fine ashes saved from the house on washing days, if sifted well, gives them a bath. A handful of peppercorns thrown in to them about once a month helps to keep them in good condition, and their houses should be limewashed occasionally.

CLEANING MEN'S CLOTHES

The Best Mixture for the Removal of Grease Spots

The cleaning of a dust-laden old coat reduces the average woman to despair, as it is hard work, and the easiest way to clean a coat or pair of pants is to pin them to the clothes-line and beat the dust out with a cane or limber switch. Then lay them out on a table and brush with a stiff brush. A coat, vest or pair of pants that is not much soiled will come out of a good gasoline bath looking like new. First brush and shake the garment until it seems perfectly free of dust, then remove the spots and put the garment in a wash-bowl or a large bucket and pour enough gasoline over the garment to saturate it thoroughly, then cover the bucket to keep the fluid from evaporating and leave it for two hours. The safest way to use the gasoline is in the open air. Clean the garments by pressing and squeezing between the hands, and hang over the line.

There is nothing better for removing grease spots from the cloth than a fluid composed of four parts of alcohol to one part of ammonia. When the garments are soiled enough to be washed, remove the buttons and baste the button-holes together; then put them in a strong pearline suds and let them remain for half an hour; then wash clean through this suds and put them through a lighter suds and rinse through clear water. There is nothing better than this suds for washing garments of any color, and it leaves the cloth soft and clean, and then it is much easier to wash a garment that is much soiled than to try to remove the spots from the fabric, and, after they are washed and pressed, the buttons can be sewed in place and the buttonholes washed over again if necessary.

When pants are beginning to get baggy at the knees, turn them wrong side out, lay one leg at a time on the ironing table, lay a wet cloth all over the knee portions and press until the cloth is dry, then turn right side out, fold in the centre and press from top to bottom over the damp cloth.

FISH PONDS ON THE FARM

That relief from the high prices of meats might be found in having fish ponds on farms, is the opinion expressed by an Omaha, Neb., paper. "Years ago," it says, "when times were not so good and when people were not enjoying the degree of prosperity that now seems to prevail throughout the land, there was great interest taken in stocking the small and larger streams with fish from the state and government fisheries. Thousands of farm fish ponds were built all over the country, in all states, and the commercial idea prevailed in the construction and stocking of these ponds. This was when the fish pond on the farm was viewed as an asset in the advertising and sale of the farm."

Made in Peterborough Show Booming

Members of the executive of the Peterborough Board of Health Association are busy with the local manufacturers with regard to exhibits for their "Made in Peterborough Fair," which they intend holding in the Armouries during the first week in June. Mrs. R. W. Travers, the secretary and Mrs. W. H. Bradburn, have already visited many of those whom they could interest in the proposition and they have received en-

SORE SHOLDERS, YOUNG HORSES

Large Collars are Usually the Cause—Colts Should be Gradually Toughened to Work

The care of the shoulders of young horses is one of the most important factors to keep in mind during the first few weeks of the spring work.

A horse can not do satisfactory work with shoulders that pain him every time he takes a step. The horse may be looked upon as a machine that is expected to do so much work, and if some of the mechanism is out of order, then the amount of work is lessened. But, also the animal must be looked upon as a creature with feeling and ambition, taking pride in its work, that is a willing, obedient, and, therefore, valuable servant, and should be properly cared for.

The first thing of importance to consider in the draft horse is the collar. Most injured shoulders are the result of poorly-fitting collars, and the fault usually lies in a collar being too large. It is a good idea to have a harness-maker fit the collars to your horses. He may be able to remove padding, and in other ways make the collar over so that it will fit nicely. Heavy collar pads are to be avoided if possible. They are hot and cause the shoulder to sweat; this keeps the pad and shoulder wet, and the skin becomes soft and blisters easily.

Dirty collars are probably as responsible for sore shoulders as ill-fitting ones. In the spring the horse's hair is long and holds large quantities of dirt and scales from the skin. He is soft from lack of work and sweats profusely. This forms a gummy dirt that adheres to the collar and makes, when dry, a hard, tough surface. The ordinary farm hand feels that his duty is done if he scrapes the dirt from the collar with the back of his jack-knife. This method, however, is not an especially good one for the leather of the collar, and a smooth surface is not left. A damp sponge used in the evening as soon as the collar is taken off will, in one or two minutes, remove the dirt. This may be followed by an oiled rag. If this is done, the collar in the morning should be soft and smooth.

Careless driving, jerking a horse out of the furrow and into it again, allowing him to work with his head around on one side, all tend to produce sore shoulders.

Of course, the first precaution to take is not to ask the colt to do a full day's work until he learns something about his work and ceases to fret. The shoulders will then gradually become toughened. It is a good idea to sponge the shoulders with cold water—just plain cold water. Alum water has been used to good advantage; also weak solutions of tannic acid. Alcohol tends to toughen the skin.

Sores on the top of the neck very frequently terminate in fistulas, while a [illegible] blister near the point of the shoulder is likely to become a callous and form what is known as a "cold abscess." Ill-fitting collars and poor driving are equally responsible for a condition known as "sweeny."

If an [illegible] and in spite of careful [illegible] on a horse's shoulder becomes [illegible], do not wait until a fistula has developed, or an abscess has formed or the animal is "sweened," but seek the advice of a veterinary while there is still a chance to check the progress of the injury. This is not the proper place to teach the treatment of such conditions after the injury has been done; it takes years of study and work to do that, but it is a good opportunity to impress upon the minds of horse owners that such unfortunate things may be entirely avoided.

LIME AND ITS USES

Helps Land to Digest Manure and Other Matter

Expressed simply and as a simile, the application of lime to land assists it to "digest" manure and other animal matter; it prevents the soil from becoming sour and callous; it causes it to yield up readily its full proportion of plant food; and it assists root action.

Although in these days of artificial manure lime is not so highly necessary as it was, an application will work wonders with most soils, particularly with those that have been neglected; and the small holder breaking up old pasture for the purpose of close cultivation will find an application almost essential.

Generally speaking, it is better to give light dressings frequently rather than a heavy dressing occasionally; and, further, you should buy from a reputable source, or you may obtain mixed with the material a quantity not effectually treated in the kiln. For light soils a ton and a half of lime to the acre should be ample, but heavy soils need more liberal treatment.

SORT OF SOW TO BREED FROM

In considering the efficiency of brood sows, Henry Wallace gives the following advice. Go over those that have had pigs the present year and ask them the following questions: How many pigs did you have this year? Were they all good ones, or did you have two or three choice pigs and were the rest inferior? How did you take care of those pigs? Are you a good suckler? Are you good-natured? Are you a good mother, or are you one of the nervous, fidgety kind, always worrying and fretting for fear somebody will hurt you and your precious piglets? If the brood sow on being interrogated, cannot give satisfactory answers to these questions, it is not worth while to scold her or give her a moral lecture. Just turn her into the fattening pen; for there is where she belongs.

How many hens do you have in your flock that do not pay their board? This may be the reason you do not find poultry profitable. Eliminate the unprofitable hens.

In niew of the stir over the bi-lingual school question, the Ne Temere decree and the Home Rule situation, unusual interest attaches to the annual gathering of the Grand Orange Lodge of Ontario West, which opens in London to-day, and will continue until the end of the week. It is expected that the meeting will be by far the largest in the history of the district.

The bi-lingual issue and the Ne Temere decree will be dealt with vigorously.

G.B. & S.R. Work Done.

The office staff of the Toronto Construction Company have completed their labours at Lindsay in connection with the construction work on the Georgian Bay and Seaboard Railway. Several of the staff have already left for their homes to enjoy a short vacation, and will likely be moved to some point along the lake front.

Water Commissioners Endorse Engineer.

At a meeting of the Water Commissioners, it was decided to inform John McDougall, Caledonian Iron Works Company, Ltd., that the Water Commissioners have decided to stand by the report of their engineer for the removal of the turbine pumping unit, and request the McDougall Co. to comply therewith.

Post Office Clock Rests Again.

That Post Office clock as a public utility is the most easily tired piece of mechanism in the city. The hands at 6.30 yesterday morning, and possibly earlier at 9.10. They had, in all probability retired from the activities of life during the night before. Then those hands stuck as other city clocks registered the fleeting hours. What is the matter with that clock anyhow?

Rev. Geo. Buskin Ends His Visit.

Rev. Geo. Buskin, 63 O'Hara avenue, Toronto, who has been engaged for many years in evangelical and Colportage Mission work, yesterday completed his twenty-first annual visit to Peterborough. During his sojourn here, this venerable Divine collected $20.25 for the cause he represents. Rev. Mr. Buskin left yesterday for Lindsay, on a similar mission.

Matthews Co. Invade Winnipeg.

As an illustration of the enterprise of a firm with large local standing, it might be noted that a Winnipeg dispatch says "The pork packing firm of Matthews, Laing and Company, of Hull, Peterborough, Montreal and Toronto, have decided to make entry into Winnipeg and have bought a $50,000 site where they will erect an eight storey warehouse building."

Before Cadi for Wife Neglect.

Another case of wife neglect was aired in the police court yesterday. Harold McDonald was charged with neglecting his wife and child.

Mr. G. N. Gordon, for the defendant, asked for an adjournment until Friday next. His worship advised that the case be settled out of court. He said that a term in jail would not help the woman who was now unable to work to support her child. Mr. Cochrane appeared in the interests of the Children's Aid Society.

Sons of England Social.

Last night the Sons of England Hall was comfortably filled with a fine array of Peterborough's youth and beauty. The "social" that brought these people together was given under the auspices of Lansdowne Lodge, No. 25, S.O.E. A fine musical program, both vocal and instrumental was enjoyed by all present. One feature of the evening was a carpet ball tournament between teams led by President Bro. Fred Smith, and Past President J. Runnett. The evening was rounded off by a nicely served supper.

Funeral of Former Apsley Man.

The funeral of the late Walter Lean formerly of Apsley, who died from an attack of typhoid fever in Port Hope, was held in Lakefield at the Methodist church. Interment was made in the Hillside cemetery. The late Mr. Lean was 33 years of age. He married Miss Sophia Moore of Dummer township. He and his wife resided in Lakefield for some time and then moved to Port Hope, where Mr. Lean died. The deceased was a member of the United Woodmen, Chosen Friends and Loyal True Blue Lodge.

Arrested for Stealing Valise.

Two young men were arrested by Detective Newhall yesterday afternoon on charges of stealing a traveller's valise from the G.T.R. station on Monday night. They will likely be tried before Magistrate Dumble this morning. The valise, containing razor strops, pliers, etc., was left by the alleged thieves alongside a woodpile in Wolstenholm's wood yard. The contents were removed after by parties unknown at present. There were several articles from the same valise left at the Grand Hotel yard, and the holders of these are requested to hand them over to Chief of Police Thompson.

Total Loss by Fire At Norwood.

The pretty little village of Norwood has had an excitement. On Tuesday morning the village fire bell clanged out a sonorous warning. The fire was found to be located at the residence of Mr. Geo. Reynolds, Quebec street. Mr. Reynolds had barely time to escape. It was found impossible to save any of the household effects and Mr. Reynolds had not even time to secure his pocket book which contained considerable cash. The origin of the fire is unknown. The house was not insured, and Mr. Reynolds will suffer a total loss of both house and contents.

HEALTH AND BEAUTY ADVICE

BY MRS. MAE MARTYN

Ada T.: Avoid all complexion creams which contain oil, as they make the skin shiny and cause hair to grow on the face. By stirring 2 teaspoonfuls glycerine and one ounce almozoin into ½-pint cold water you have a matchless cream-jelly for clearing, softening and whitening the skin. It is unsurpassed for cleaning the complexion and making it smooth and youthful looking. Use this morning and night and you need have no worry about the way your face will look.

Mrs. F. B.: Weight reduction is a very simple matter. These old-fashioned theories of violent exercises and starvation are all nonsense, and at the best furnish only temporary relief. To take off fat, use this remedy: Dissolve 4 ounces of parnotis in 1½ pints hot water and take a tablespoonful before meals. This simple, harmless remedy works wonders where many of the "sure cures" fail. It leaves the skin smooth and firm.

B. A. B.: Only healthy scalps produce beautiful, abundant hair. You must keep your scalp clean by shampooing as often as necessary. The following tonic will prove an unfailing remedy for dandruff, itching scalp and falling hair: Stir one ounce of quinzoin into ½-pint alcohol, then add ½-pint cold water. Rub this tonic into the scalp about twice a week. It will do wonders for your diseased scalp and make your thin, straggly hair thick, long and beautiful.

Elsie S.: That sickly look you have, besides your loss of energy and run-down condition, are due to a sluggish, impure blood, incident to the winter months. This is very common, but is easily overcome by taking before meals a tablespoonful of this simple system tonic: In ½-pint alcohol dissolve one ounce kardene, adding ½-cup sugar and hot water to make a quart. This is a wonderful blood purifier and strength-restoring tonic. There is nothing like it for giving one rich, red blood, energy and good health.

Belle: The reason your hair looks so dull and faded and is so hard to arrange is that you have made the usual mistake, of shampooing with soap. Any woman who uses soap shampoos cannot expect to have beautiful hair. It may clean the hair, but does not remove the pore-dirt from the hair roots. Your hair becomes stringy and unmanageable in a few days and you wonder why. Let soap shampoos alone and use a teaspoonful of canthrox dissolved in a cup of hot water for your shampoo, if you want your hair to dry evenly and quickly without streaking. Canthrox makes the hair very fluffy and bright, and gives to the scalp a feeling of pleasing freshness. You will not catch cold if you shampoo with canthrox and will find it makes your hair look so very nice.

J. M. S.: Cutting the hairs only makes them come in heavier. Get an original package of delatone and with a little of the powder mix enough water to form a paste. Put this on the hairy surface and after two or three minutes rub off, wash the skin and every trace of hair will have vanished. Druggists charge a dollar an ounce for delatone, but it never fails to do the work.

Mrs. V. G.: The woman who uses face powder not only is behind the times, but does herself a personal injury. Face powder is only a mockery to beauty, as it clogs the skin pores, causing wrinkles and other complexion ills. To have a perfect complexion, use a good lotion such as the following: Dissolve 4 ounces of spurmax in ½-pint witch hazel (or hot water), adding 2 teaspoonfuls glycerine. This lotion gives the skin a decidedly refined look of velvety smoothness. It removes the shine, immediately corrects sallow, freckled complexions and does not come off in the wind like powder does or rub off easily when a veil is worn. This lotion is a splendid beautifier and skin whitener.

S. D.: Yes, no factor is more important in a beautiful face than bright, clear, youthful eyes. You should use a good eye tonic. Get an ounce of crystos, dissolve it in a pint of water and use two or three drops in each eye daily. It will clear and strengthen your eyes, remove all signs of weakness and inflammation and make them bright and sparkling. For weak, dull, expressionless eyes I think this tonic simply wonderful. It is very soothing, and is fine for those who wear glasses.

Speed Not Altogether Modern.

The concurrent press of Canada has a long report of an ice-boat trip from Erie, Pa., to Cleveland, O. This reminds our older citizens of the winters, some forty years ago, when quite a number of Peterborough people used to go to Rice Lake every winter to enjoy ice-boating from Bewdley to the foot of the lake. There are more than two or three Peterborough residents living to-day who remember travelling the three miles between Gore's Landing and Harwood, in just as many minutes as miles. This goes to show, that with all the modern inventions, even including "bubble-waggons," speed is not altogether a thing of to-day.

Local Study in Natural History.

A somewhat amusing study in natural history was in evidence yesterday at the Montreal House, conducted by Mr. James Head. Mr. Head has two large owls in a big cage. He also has a fox terrier. The dog, with almost human sense, catches rats and brings a rat, when caught, to the front of the cage, leaving it on the floor for someone to give to the owls. Then in equally human line of thought, or perversity, when one gives the rat to the birds, it seems to regret its generosity and flies at the cage to recover its prey. The owls, however, quickly pass the rat into the department of the interior.

That Fire Brigade Embroglio.

Messrs. Menzies and Leahy, whose resignations from the local fire brigade was noted in a former issue, yesterday took their personal belongings from the fire hall. There seems to be some little misunderstanding regarding these two members. As the Times gets the story, the Fire, Water and Light Committee had decided during the evening to dismiss them, for reasons of their own. Some one acquainted the men with the Committee's intention and they forestalled dismissal by resignation. Chief Howard, however has nothing whatever to say against either man personally. Deputy Chief Grange is now back in his old position

Ice Question Again Discussed.

Once more the festive germ, supposed to have its habitat in ice, caused the local Board of Health to talk over Peterborough's ice supply.

Dr. McPherson, M.H.O., reported having interviewed Mr. Allin, the ice dealer. The chairman of the Board and the M.H.O. had thought that it would not be the best policy to oppose Mr. Allin too strenuously this year, owing to the fact that they had not given him extended warning of the proposed course. They had suggested cakes printed for use in the local refrigerators describing the kind of ice used, whether for cooling purposes only, or for placing in beverages or food.

Had Bad Sore Four Years

ZAM-BUK HAS HEALED IT!

Mrs. Wilson, 110 Wickson avenue, Toronto, says: "About four years ago a sore spot appeared on the right side of my face. This spot increased in size until it became about half an inch in diameter and very painful. I went to a doctor, but the ointment he gave me did not have any good effect. The sore continued to discharge freely, and was most painful. I had it cauterized, tried poultices and all kinds of salves, but it was no good, and I continued to suffer from it for four years!

"A sample of Zam-Buk was one day given to me, and I used it. Although the quantity was so small it seemed to do me some good, so I purchased a further supply.

"Each box did me more and more good, and, to my delight, before I had been using Zam-Buk three weeks, I saw that it was going to heal the sore. In less than a month it was healed!

"I know a lady in the east of the city, whose husband suffered for years with an open sore on his leg. On my recommendation, Zam-Buk was tried in that case. The other day, when I saw her, she told me it had healed the sore completely.

"My daughter, who lives in Lethbridge, Alta., has also used Zam-Buk with the same satisfactory results. I think it is, beyond all doubt, the finest healing balm known."

Such is the opinion of all persons who have really tried Zam-Buk. It is a sure cure for eczema, piles, abscesses, ulcers, scalp sores, bruises, and all skin injuries and diseases. 50c box, all druggists and stores, or post free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price. In case of skin disease use also Zam-Buk Soap, 25c tablet.

Why Local Citizen Came Here.

A local citizen, whose place of business is situated not a thousand miles from the former Montreal House, corner King and Aylmer streets, told The Times yesterday a rather amusing account of the manner in which he selected Canada, and this part of Canada in particular, as his destination when emigrating, some years ago, from England. It seems he had fully decided to go to Brisbane, Australia. His parents, however, advised him to come to Canada. Shortly before, the citizen referred to, was to have sailed for Brisbane, his parents received a letter from their oldest son, elder brother of the subject of this story, from Canada. This letter contained the information that the writer had purchased one hundred and fifty acres of land at Hall's Bridge, near Buckhorn. The old folks then strongly advised their son not to go to Brisbane, but to sail for Canada. They used the argument that he would surely get a position "on some department of the Buckhorn ranch." This settled the matter. The present local citizen changed his mind and came to this county. When he went back to Buckhorn and found the "ranch" consisted of rocks he foreswore the life of a ranchman.

LITTLE LOCAL LINES

Lansdowne Lodge, S.O.E. held a successful social in their hall on Hunter street last night.

The stores in the reconstructed, former American Hotel, are rapidly nearing completion, and are quite an improvement to that part of Hunter street.

According to the Ontario Government's report just issued, the County of Peterborough has 203,922 hens and poultry of the other sex. And still eggs are worth 30 cents a dozen.

During the year 1910, the County of Peterborough had 11,278 horses, worth $1,421,029; 19,277 milch cows worth $736,767; and 25,230 cattle of other kinds, worth $436,227.

Yesterday a valuable horse belonging to Mr. Daniel Mahoney, who lives near Apsley, died in the stable of the Windsor Hotel. The animal seemed to be all right in the morning, but was seized with paralysis of the kidneys and soon died.

Hamilton, Ont., has a coal famine. Several factories there have closed for lack of black diamonds. In Peterborough, we seem to have the coal; the only difficulty our citizens encounter with coal is raising the price to pay for it.

Much of the "Beautiful," under the searching and warm rays of the springtime sun, yesterday slunk away into the many sewer traps of the city. If the sewers can stand the pressure, its certain that our citizens will not mourn its loss.

A local professional man, yesterday speaking to a Times reporter, remarked "wasn't that election in Manchester, Eng., when Premier Asquith's candidate was defeated, a great surprise?" The scribbler replied: "Possibly no greater a surprise that recently struck Canada at the Dominion elections."

LIKE COMFORT?

Then what's the use of breaking down your vigor when there's a way to make and keep your daily life comfortable?

Most persons need all the vitality they can secure. Some have an excess and proceed to destroy it with one or more of the sedative drugs—among the most common of which are tea and coffee. They could use that vigor to "get ahead" in business or whatever pursuit they are engaged in, but, strange to say, many prefer to nullify it with drugs.

However, each one must make choice and pay the bill.

The one who can cut out tea and coffee when they are known to cause sleepless nights and nervous troubles will surely win the laurels.

The change from tea or coffee and their aches and ills to well-made with health and comfort is really quite easy.

POSTUM

Postum has a dark brown color which changes to rich, golden brown when cream is added, and the snappy, distinctive flavor (when made according to directions) is very like the mild, high grades of Java coffee.

The change brings refreshing sleep, drives out the tea and coffee troubles and the old condition of health and comfort returns.

INSOMNIA
Leads to Madness, if not Remedied in Time.

"Experiments satisfied me, some 5 years ago," writes a Topeka woman, "that coffee was the direct cause of the insomnia from which I suffered terribly as well as the extreme nervousness and acute dyspepsia which made life a most painful thing for me.

"I had been a coffee-drinker since childhood, and did not like to think that the beverage was doing me all this harm. (Tea is just as harmful because it contains caffeine, the same drug found in coffee.) But it was, and the time came when I had to face the fact and protect myself. I therefore gave it up, abruptly and absolutely, [illegible] at meals.

"I began to note improvement in my condition very soon after I took on Postum. The change proceeded gradually, but surely, and it was a matter of only a few weeks before I found myself entirely relieved. The nervousness passed away, my digestive apparatus was restored to normal efficiency, and I began to sleep restfully and peacefully.

"These happy conditions have continued and I am safe in saying that I owe them entirely to Postum, for when I began to drink it I ceased to use medicines." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

There's really no joy and comfort on earth quite so satisfying as the perfect poise of mind and body—generally yours for the taking.

Toronto, March 1st, 1912.

W. H. HILL, ESQ.,
Manager,
Sun Life Assurance Co.,
Peterborough, Ont.

Dear Sir,—I wish to thank the Sun Life Assurance Company, through you, for the prompt and very satisfactory settlement of my 15 year Endowment Policy, No. 61345, which matured and was paid me to-day.

I have also a 15 year Endowment maturing to-day in another leading Company.

The contrast, in the results, in favor of your Company is so marked that I want you to know it, but I am at a loss to know how such a difference could honestly occur. When I tell you that the profits in your Company are three and one-third times the profits in the other Company referred to, and this too notwithstanding I paid the other Company $1.15 per year more per $1000 than I paid you, you will realize my inability to comprehend the cause.

This is surely a tribute to the management of the Sun Life, and I am so well pleased I have applied for further insurance with you.

Incidentally, I would like to say a word for your loan privilege. As you are aware, I borrowed some money on my policy, a little over a year ago, which enabled me to obtain a substantial interest in a town site in the Northwest, and you will be pleased to learn that it has already yielded substantial gain and gives promise to pay hundreds per cent., so that it is impossible to fully realize the value of that Policy to me.

I thought as an old Peterborough boy you would be pleased to know I am delighted with the result.

Yours truly,
(Signed) ROBERT E. DOLAN.

ATTEMPTED ASSASSINATION OF KING VICTOR EMMANUEL

Three Shots Fired at Close Range But Providentially the Italian Monarch Escapes From the Deadly Attack of His Assailant

Would be Regicide Chooses For His Attempt the Anniversary of Late King Humberts Birthday

Queen Helena, Whilst in Danger Herself, to Save Her Royal Consort, Throws Herself in Danger

Rome, Mar. 14.—A dastardly attempt to assassinate King Victor Emmanuel of Italy was made by an anarchist in Rome this morning.

The would-be regicide chose for his attempt the anniversary of the birthday of the late King Humbert, the father of the present King, who himself died the victim of an assassin's blow at Monza on July 29, 1900.

BODY GUARD WOUNDED.

One of His Majesty's body guard, however, who was in the immediate vicinity of the King, was dangerously wounded.

The unsuccessful attempt to assassinate the King was made as His Majesty with Queen Helena were proceeding from the Palace to the Pantheon [illegible] in the annual memorial service in honor of the late King Humbert.

The royal carriage was preceded and followed by an escort of cuirassiers. The procession was passing along the Via Lata when three shots rang out from amid the crowd.

Consternation was on every face. The soldiers following the carriage immediately dashed forward and as they did so their commander fell from his horse.

KING REMAINED CALM.

The wounded officer was moved to one side by some of his men, while the others dashed up to the royal carriage, where they found the King and Queen sitting calm and unmoved.

Meanwhile the crowd seized the man who had fired the shots and attempted to lynch him. He was so badly handled that he was scarcely able to answer questions when he was handed over to the police.

The royal procession was not stopped for an instant but proceeded toward the Pantheon where the mass for King Humbert was completed without further incident.

After the conclusion of the service the King and Queen returned to the Quirnal along the same route as they had taken when the attempt at assassination was made.

On their arrival at the Palace, the King learned for the first time that the Commander of his escort, Major Lang, had been seriously wounded and his Majesty at once started for the hospital where he was lying to pay him a visit. He travelled in an open automobile and showed no signs of having passed through an ordeal.

PLAYED A LONE HAND.

The man who had fired the shots had in the meantime been taken to the police station, the policemen having great difficulty in passing through the crowds of people who showed intense anger and desired to wreck immediate vengeance.

At the police station in spite of the man's bad condition owing to the handling he had received from the crowds he was submitted to a keen interrogatory. He declared his name was Antonio Dalba, that he was 21 years of age and that he was a stone mason. He described himself as an "individual anarchist" and said that he had made the attempt on the King's life as a protest against the organization of society.

All the circumstances led to the belief that the assailant of His Majesty was not concerned in any plot of an organization, but that his deed was the outcome of his own individual aberration.

C. G. E. CO. ACQUIRES LAND

The Times was given, last night, to understand that the large plot of land, immediately to the north of the Canadian General Electric Works, including ten acres, has been purchased by that corporation. This clearly indicates a great enlargement of the present plant of this great Peterborough concern.

LAW STUDENT THROWS BRICK AT AN AUTO

Boston Mass., Mar. 14.—John Meigs Ewen of Lake Forest, Ill., Yale '10, a student at Harvard Law school, was fined $50 in the Cambridge district court yesterday for throwing a brick at a limousine automobile driven by Samuel Sulkins in Cambridge [illegible] driving a car owned by E. H. Johnson of Cambridge. One of the head-lights and the wind-shield were smashed and Sulkins was severely injured.

Sulkins gave chase, picking up Patrolman William B. Ginty, in his pursuit. They finally overtook the fleeing taxi in which Ewen was seated.

FRANCE HOPES FOR NEW PEACE PACTS

Paris, Mar. 14.—Action of the United States Senate on the arbitration treaties is regarded in semi-official circles here as tantamount to their virtual rejection. There is some hope, however, that new negotiations may be begun and that at a later period the United States Senate may restore the general arbitration treaties with Great Britain and France to a form which will be worth while.

PLUCKY EXPRESS AGENT KILLS TRAIN ROBBER

San Antonio, Texas, Mar. 14.—An express messenger named Truesdale balked the robbery of a Southern Pacific train near Sanderson early to-day, when he trapped two highwaymen who had held up the train and killed them. The robbers boarded the train a few miles east of Sanderson. The engineer under cover of the robbers' guns, was compelled to run two or three coaches ahead of the remainder of the train. One of the robbers took the express messenger, Truesdale, back and kept him under guard while the other robber started to rifle the safe and express boxes.

Truesdale employed the old ruse of signalling to an imaginary person back of his captor, when the robber turned, Truesdale grasped a mallot and before the highwayman could shoot, dashed out his brains.

EX-BANKER TRAVERS TO TAKE ANOTHER TRIP FROM THE PEN

Ottawa, Mar. 14.—Mr. W. R. Travers will be brought to Toronto from the Kingston Penitentiary next week to testify before the Commission of Enquiry into the affairs of the Farmers Bank. Sir William Meredith signed an order to that effect this morning.

When the inquiry was resumed this morning, Mr. John Knight, of Montreal, secretary of the Bankers' Association, told of an interview with Dr. Beattie Nesbitt and Mr. W. R. Travers in Toronto.

"It was a very unpleasant interview," he said.

"Did you examine the books of the bank?"

"Yes, such as they were."

"What was the result of your examination?" asked Mr. Frank Hodgins, K.C.

"I won't allow you to prove it that way," interrupted Sir Wm Meredith. "You must produce the books. That is elementary."

"Then I'm afraid Mr. Knight will have to come to Toronto," returned Mr. Hodgins.

NESBITT WAS BLUSTERING.

Mr. Knight protested that he could not swear to the documents seen four or five years ago. Asked to describe the interview, Mr. Knight said that Mr. Nesbitt had done a great deal of blustering and had told him the Bankers' Association had no business to concern itself with anything but circulation. Mr. Knight had persisted in his inquiries as to the missing $100,000 of the Government deposit, which should have amounted to $250,000. At a second interview Mr. Nesbitt was not present. Mr. Travers had shown Mr. Knight a deposit certificate for $80,000 from the Trust & Guarantee Co. of which Mr. J. R. Stratton was president.

SHORT WEIGHT COAL.

The City Council of Kingston amended the by-law so as to provide for the seizing of short weight coal. A resolution also asks for a report upon operating municipal coal yards as a public utility.

The old Industrial Commissioner's room has been assigned to Assessor Henry, who will be furnished with a fire-proof safe in which to keep his books. The matter of procuring a safe was left in the hands of the Mayor and Chairman.

THE SANITARY INSPECTOR.

W. R. Turner applied for the position at a salary of $700 per year, or would fill the dual position of sanitary and plumbing inspector at a salary of $900 per annum.

This appointment is left in abeyance until tenders for collection and disposal of garbage are received, as referred to below.

THE GARBAGE QUESTION.

The Committee had to hand one tender for an incinerator in which to burn garbage at an estimate of $5,500 without the necessary concrete foundation, which would bring the price of the apparatus up to over $6,000.

His Worship suggested that an effort be made to secure a man willing to contract for the collection of garbage, etc., within a given area, said contractor to assume all responsibility for the disposal of same. This would mean that such a contractor would have to furnish his own dumping ground. This method could be tried for a year, and a by-law submitted to the people at next election for authority to borrow money with [illegible] an incinerator.

The Mayor's views were acquiesced in, and the area to be covered this year by the garbage by-law as an experiment will be confined within the following boundaries: Smith street on the north, Dalhousie street on the south, the river on the east, and Reid street in the west. The Smith street boundary will extend westward to the G.T.R. track, down to London street, thence west to Reid street and south to Dalhousie.

The garbage will be collected from hotels, restaurants, fish and fruit stores and boarding houses catering to over five boarders, three times a week; from other stores within the fire limits, twice a week; from residential properties, twice a week during June, July, August, and September, and once a week during the other months.

The at present contemplated charges for collection will be as follows: For hotels, restaurants, fruit and fish stores, dry-goods, hardware and grocery stores, and boarding houses, 40 cents a month; for private dwellings, 15 cents per month. The fees to be charged against owners, lessees or occupiers of premises. The people served to provide their own boxes or barrels in which to keep garbage, refuse or ashes, and for each additional box or barrel over four collected at each round an additional 5c per box or barrel will be charged.

Medical Health Officer McPherson insists that all garbage be collected dry.

The chairman was authorized to advertise for tenders for the collection and disposal of garbage, refuse and ashes, within the foregoing district, said garbage, etc., to be removed in vehicles approved of by the Sanitary Inspector. Tenders to call for one year's service from May 1st, and will be received up to Friday, the twenty ninth March.

The charges for collection of garbage, etc., herewith given may be amended when a tender for collection and disposal is accepted, and the number of premises to be served accurately arrived at.

COLLECTION OF CARCASES.

Incidentally, chairman Ald. Duncan offered that the city is paying on an average of $7 or $8 a week for the removal of dead dogs and cats.

SIR GEORGE ROSS CONVALESCING AT HOT SPRINGS ARKANSAS

Hot Springs, Mar. 14.—"You may say for me that my condition is 95 per cent. improved, and that I feel that at my present rate of recovery, I will soon be able to get about as spry as anyone at my age," said Sir George W. Ross, former Premier of Ontario, this morning when showed a dispatch from Toronto to the effect that he was reported there as being critically ill in this city.

"I feel like a new man already as a result of the wonderful hot baths, they have here, and I have taken on a new lease of life," he said.

Sir George has been in Hot Springs for the past two months. He came here suffering from a malignant attack of rheumatism, and at the time of his arrival he was almost a dead man. He has taken the hot water baths daily, however, and is now so far improved that he expects to be walking around within two weeks or a month. In addition to the baths, Sir George enjoys daily an outing over the mountain sides, being wheeled in an invalid chair.

Lady Ross, who is here with him, says they expect to remain here about three months longer.

CHILD DROWNED IN A PAIL OF WATER

Hamilton, Ont., Mar. 24.—Norman Clansen, three-year-old son of Emil Clansen, Alexandria street, mountain top, was drowned yesterday afternoon in a pail of water into which he had fallen head first. The child was a cripple as a result of an attack of infantile paralysis and was left alone in the house while the mother went to a neighbor's. She was horrified to find on her return the child's head submerged in the water and his feet projecting from the pail. She pulled the child out and notified Dr. McIlwraith, who worked for an hour to revive the child with no success. After investigating the circumstances, he decided that an inquest was unnecessary. It is thought the child tried to drink from the pail, over-balanced and from its weak condition unable to withdraw.

CELEBRATED HIS 79TH BIRTHDAY

To-day, one of the oldest and best known citizens, in the person of Mr. William Snowden, celebrates his seventy ninth birthday. Mr. Snowden was born in 1833 at Newcastle-on-Tyne, England, and came to Canada in 1847. He first settled in Peterborough. As an instance of the difference in the prices of living and wages in these days and present conditions, it might be noted that Mr. Snowden's first job was with Mr. T. W. Milburn, of Smith, at $4 a month. Later on Mr. Snowden went into the lumbering business, and moved to Bobcaygeon, where he resided for some ten years. About twenty-eight years ago he leased the Phelan House from the late Edward Phelan. Here he conducted a profitable and high-class business. Later on Mr. Snowden built that fine structure on Charlotte street, known as the Snowden House. This hotel he conducted for some years, but finally leased it to Mr. D. Fraser. He also erected a fine block of stores on Simcoe street. During an active life's career Mr. Snowden has taken an active part in the steamboat business. He was employed by the late Capt. Sawers, grandfather of Rev. F. J. Sawers, on the steamer Victoria. This was before the locks were built at Bobcaygeon and at the time the steamer Ogemah was operated by the late Capt. Wallis. He was also a contemporary in business of Capt. Crandall of the steamer Woodman. Mr. Snowden has been married for forty three years, his bride being Miss Milburn.

The many friends of this active and progressive citizen will unite with The Times in wishing Mr. Snowden "many happy returns of the day."

CHARGED WITH THE STEALING OF ORE

Cobalt, Mar. 14.—The Provincial police arrested here yesterday afternoon George Kershaw and John Bellerby, on a charge of stealing ore from the mines. About a hundred pounds of practically pure silver was found in a trunk checked to Liverpool.

GOVERNMENT TO INTERFERE IF STRIKE IS NOT SETTLED

Compulsory Legislation Will be Enforced if Asquith Fails to Settle the Trouble

London, Mar. 14.—The delegates of the coal owners and the striking miners, who number over one million assembled again yesterday at the Foreign Office under the presidency of Premier Asquith who was supported by several members of the Cabinet for what must be the deciding joint conference between the masters and the men who are trying to reach a settlement of the coal dispute.

Obviously the period of general discussion has ended, and unless the disputants are in a position to give replies to Premier Asquith's proposals which will furnish a basis for the continuance of the negotiations with prospects of a settlement by mutual consent, compulsory legislation is bound to follow swiftly.

STRIKERS GOING HUNGRY.

The pangs of hunger are already affecting thousands of the workers, who have been thrown out of employment owing to the miners' strike. There are over one million of these men who have lost their work in consequence of the impossibility of running factories and mills without fuel and their families have to rely on their savings or on the small out-of-work pay provided by the trades unions. There are, however, a large number of these men unconnected with the coal trade, who do not belong to any trade union from which to draw benefits and those with their families are among the greatest sufferers.

FOUR MILLION AFFECTED

The magnitude of the strike is almost inconceivable. It has affected in a direct way, counting only the miners and the other men thrown thrown out of work with their families over four million people.

JEWS WILL TRY TO OVERTHROW THE QUEENS UNIVERSITY BILL

Mr. Jacobs, K. C., of Montreal, Has Been Retained---Opens His Campaign With a Statement Assailing College as "Intolerant and Narrow-Minded"

Montreal, Mar. 14.—The Jews of this city have retained Mr. S. W. Jacobs, K.C., to look into the law to see whether the Queen's University Bill cannot be upset on account of the clause in it which places Jews under a disability.

Mr. Jacobs has given the newspapers a red-hot interview on the subject. He has said:

AN INCONSISTENCY.

"Within the last few days we have seen the Province of Quebec worked up over the Keewatin Bill, because 116 Roman Catholics will be deprived of certain rights claimed to have been granted to Roman Catholics by the Act of 1875. Yet here we have an instance of a much more important character, where 100,000 Jewish citizens are publicly insulted, and no person seems to pay any attention to it, outside of those directly affected. The absurdity of the bill may be seen by placing together clause 3 and clause 20. Clause 3 reads:

"The Management and Discipline of the University shall be in every respect free from all denominational restrictions, and Clause 20 says that "the University shall continue distinctively Christian."

NARROW-MINDED SAYS JACOBS.

"It has been said the institution might fall into the hands of Jews. In answer to this objection, I would like the gentleman who made use of this statement to know that when the time comes that Jews will be [illegible] universities of this country, their ambition might soar a little higher than to wish to corral an institution which is showing such a narrow-minded and intolerable spirit as Queen's College."

"I notice, however, that no religious tests are to be applied to benefactors though it might be possible that a clause would be inserted denominating the money of Jews as unacceptable."

DAILY SKETCH INTIMATES THAT LLOYD GEORGE MUST GIVE WAY

London, Mar. 14. The Daily Sketch announces the information that Mr. Lloyd-George must go. There is a league in financial circles it says, to obtain the resignation or dismissal of the Minister whose financial policy has already inflicted heavy losses on a large section of the community, and for his attacks on capital. His election speech, it is said, has done not a little to bring about the present state of unrest. The paper says the movement was organized by a serious body of business men who have had enough of it and want no more.

SHOOTS ONE MAN THREATENS ANOTHER

Boston, Mass., Mar. 14.—Herman Lewinski, who walked into the offices of the stock brokerage firm of Richardson, Hill & Co., yesterday and shot Spencer R. Hill, a member of the firm, calmly told the police last night that he had also intended to shoot another member of the firm, Fred E. James. He was disarmed before he could cross the room to Mr. James.

At the hospital late last night it was said that the bullet which entered the right breast of Mr. Hill had not been removed. He had passed the day, however, without any alarming symptoms developing, and has not been put on the dangerous list. Belief that stock brokers were in a conspiracy to defraud him, and that they had swindled him out of $70,000 in the last twenty years, led Lewinski to adopt his plan of shooting the two men, according to his statement to the police.

HELD ON A SERIOUS CHARGE

Pittsburg, Mar. 14.—District Attorney Blakely had completed all arrangements early to-day for the trial of the Rev. Dr. W. D. McFarland, of Greenville, Tenn., indicted in connection with the death in this city of his former secretary, Miss Elsie D. Coe, who died as the result of a criminal operation. The aged educator and minister, former principal of the Pittsburg Central High School, conferred early with his lawyers, having come here from Tennessee, where he had charge of an aged Presbyterian Mission, without the formality of extradition. He expressed his confidence in an early acquittal, while the district attorney, who will personally prosecute the case, was confident his case was complete. Court officers have received scores of applications from ministers, educators, and former pupils of Dr. McFarland for admission the court room.

OIL OIL OIL

Oil is King--King of Fuel for all purposes

Without it the automobile could not exist. Just as soon as a supply can be depended on, ships on every ocean, sea, lake, and river, will be propelled by it. The British Admirality are building war-ships to be propelled by it. The great railway transportation companies are altering their locomotives to be driven by it. The cooking stoves and heating plants in every district where it can be secured are being made to use it—in fact the whole civilized world is crying out for it.

And we have it—have the piece of the earth's crust where it is bursting out and spilling over in such quantities that we are able to collect it from the surface of the pools, put it in bottles, and have it analyzed, and here is what the analytical chemist has to say of it:

THE RIVER CLYDE

A Few Notes About the Most Wonderful Waterway in the World

The Clyde is one of the most important shipbuilding districts in the world. Between Glasgow and Greenock there are about fifty shipyards, and their aggregate output has on two occasions exceeded 600,000 tons. During the last twenty years the total has rarely been less than 400,000 tons, and has frequently exceeded 500,000. Two Super-Dreadnoughts are at present under construction on the river, besides several cruisers and torpedo destroyers; and some of the most notable liners afloat, including the Lusitania, have been built and launched from the banks of the narrow waterway. The River Clyde is one of the most wonderful waterways in the world, particularly that part of it which extends from Greenock up to Glasgow bridge, a distance of nearly twenty [illegible]. At one time, a few hundred [illegible] ago, it was possible for pedest[illegible] to cross the river at various points without wetting a shoe. To-day, between the points named, there is a uniform depth of nearly [illegible] water.

Needless to say this great change [illegible] without a tremendous [illegible] of forethought, skill and [illegible]. As far back as 1566, [illegible] of the city's inhabitants [illegible] employed [illegible] clear away a formidable sandbank about two miles above Dumbarton, but although the people labored away for several weeks their efforts had little effect. The river continued to wash down the [illegible] from the upper reaches and the bank [illegible] as formidable as ever. It was about this time that a then well-known civil engineer was consulted as to the best method of making the river navigable for shipping. He informed the city authorities that it would be impossible to deepen the river, his theory being that as the bed of the river was deepened the water level would fall correspondingly.

Fortunately, the authorities did not allow themselves to be seriously influenced by this expert's opinion. After several more ineffective attempts had been made to solve the problem, a civil engineer from Chester, in 1768, experimented on a system of contracting the river by means of jetties, and removing the sand and gravel from within the narrow channel. In 1773, he contracted with the town council to make the river from Dumbuck upwards a depth of six feet [illegible] width of 300 feet at low water, [illegible] at a cost of $9,200. He succeeded in giving a depth of ten inches more than he bargained for, and he was rewarded by the town council with an additional sum of $6,000 and a silver cup. That may be said to have been the beginning of the great [illegible] of widening and deepening the [illegible], a work which has been prosecuted almost incessantly ever since.

THE PATAGONIAN INDIANS

Normally the Patagonian Ind[illegible] are a peacea[illegible] and kindly people [illegible] they are impuls[illegible]ve, capable of strong prejudices, very [illegible] vengeful, and often suspicious of [illegible] with good reason [illegible] to be trifled [illegible] strangers. They are not [illegible] influence [illegible] and when under the [illegible] of drink are brutal and dan[illegible] and [illegible] love for their children [illegible] They [illegible] to their own people [illegible] and kindness [illegible] numerous [illegible]. They are divided into [illegible] chief, tribes or groups, each having its [illegible] burdens of [illegible] cacique, upon whom the [illegible] government rest but lightly. The cacique of the tribe to which [illegible] belonged was then at another [illegible] They believe in a good and an evil spirit, whom they propitiate, and have many stories, myths, and superstitions connected with the sun, moon, and stars, while the slaying of horses and drinking of blood form a conspicuous part in their superstitious birth, marriage and death ceremonies, many of which are most repulsive.

OLD RIDDLES—NEW ANSWERS

What do lawyers do when they die?—A great favor, very often.

What is the oldest piece of furniture in the world?—The back seat.

When the clock strikes "13," what time is it?—Time to go straight home—if you can.

What do you put on the table, cut, but never eat?—Flowers, and certain kinds of cheese.

What animal has the most brains?—Your neighbor's infant son. (To hear him tell of it).

Why does a chicken cross the street?—Because the man over there has just planted some seeds.

What will make more noise than a pig under a gate?—The family upstairs (guaranteed).

What is even better than presence of mind in a railway accident?—Presidents of insurance companies.

INJUSTICE IN COURT.

"A convicted burglar, brought before a judge in Maine a few days ago, was sentenced to the penitentiary for two years. Thereupon the prisoner cursed the court. The judge promptly increased the sentence to five years. "I don't care if you make it ten," hotly retorted the burglar, with more profanity. Immediately the judge made it ten."—Cleveland Leader.

Now some of the newspapers of Canada and the United States think this man was used hardly. We think a man who had the nerve to pass such remarks under such circumstances deserved what he got.

THE APPOINTMENT OF MEDICAL HEALTH OFFICERS.

A few days ago a well-written letter appeared in The Times which earnestly urges the Whitney Government not to disturb the present system of appointing Medical Health Officers. We have not a word to say against the writer of that letter who signs himself "Sanitas", for we all know that self preservation is the first law of nature, and we are all alike in our love of life, and of all that makes life comfortable. But, in fairness to the local Legislature, it may be said that disinterested people everywhere, are in favor of the Medical Health Officer being a government appointee. Such a change would remove him beyond the suspicion of favoritism, and would enable him to discharge the duties of his office fearlessly, with equal rights to all, and special favors to none. Under present conditions the M.H.O. is not free. He has to please all parties, and no matter how honest his intentions may be, if he does his duty to the public he will be sure to offend some unfriendly critic, or some amiable suffragette, or perhaps some of his best clients, who in a good natured way, would like, just for this once, to evade sanitary rules.

It may be noticed also that as he is appointed by the local council he may at any time be removed at the pleasure or the caprice of that august body So that under present conditions the M.H.O. is handicapped in every direction. And outside of the large cities, it is well known that his salary is a mere pittance, and is altogether inadequate to make the M.H.O. independent enough to control and regulate the conflicting interests of the health department over which he may be appointed. In every sense we think the government appointment is the best.

Hamilton, Ont., has a coal famine. Several factories there have closed for lack of black diamonds. In Peterborough, we seem to have the coal; the only difficulty our citizens encounter with coal is raising the price to pay for it.

According to the Ontario Government's report just issued, the County of Peterborough has 203,922 hens and poultry of the other sex. And still eggs are worth 30 cents a dozen.

LIGHT THAT DOES NOT FAIL

A Volcanic Beacon in San Salvador Republic

The republic of San Salvador is the only goverment on earth that collects lighthouse fees on account of a volcano that it owns, and without the slightest cost of upkeep.

The volcanic beacon is about eight miles inland from the port of Acajutla, and its pillar of cloud by day and its fire sky by night are visible for many miles out to sea. It bursts forth every seven minutes, and is just as a [illegible] as any revolving light that warns mariners of danger in any part of the world.

This volcano has been keeping up this seven-minutes' service of eruptions ever since anyone can remember. It is a favorite amusement of visitors to sit by the hour during the lazy afternoons, and, watch in hand, to time the eruptions till they tire of the occupation and fall asleep. No one has ever caught the volcano napping, however.

Every vessel that puts in at Acajutla has to pay its lighthouse fee. There is no other lighthouse than the volcano, but that is a sufficient excuse for the Government of Salvador to make a charge for its services. The explosions that accompany the eruptions sound like detonations of heavy charges of dynamite, but, fortunately, they are not sufficient to shake the ground perceptibly more than about a mile or two from the summit of the crater.

COST OF TUBERCULOSIS

E. F. McSweeney's Estimate is $100 Per Family a Year

"Preventable disease, the greatest item in which is tuberculosis and the other expenses which grow out of it, costs each family on this continent at the minimum $100 a year." This is a verdict of a most thorough and cautious estimate by expert statisticians, and errs, if anything, on the conservative side. It is a sentence, the nugget of the discourse, taken from an address on "Tuberculosis as a factor in the increased cost of living," delivered at Denver by Mr. Edward F. McSweeney, chairman of the board of trustees of the Boston Consumptives' Hospital. The guess that preventable disease has been a large share of the growing weight of living expenses is not a new one, but the thoroughness with which the proofs have been searched out by Mr. McSweeney is novel and convincing. The nations have searched and found five major causes of this increase, namely, waste, extravagance, armed peace, inefficiency and the burden of crime, pauperism, accident and disease. By the most cautious estimate the yearly money cost of tuberculosis alone in the United States is $622,513.904, and on the present ratio of deaths annually from this disease, as compared with the deaths from all other causes, 10,000,000 of people now living will eventually die of tuberculosis. The constructive part of Mr. McSweeney's discourse deals with the proof that the treatment of incipient cases is a failure, because returning to bad conditions, they relapse; and that the prevention of contagion from the advanced cases is where the resistance must be focussed. New York is following this lead, and it has now been recognized by Germany. The rigid medical inspection of school-children is one means of prevention and "we will solve the tuberculosis question when we settle the problems of child labor, city congestion, long hours and bad factory and housing conditions." This critic is emphatic that the crusade is not one primarily for physicians and charity workers: "This is essentially a business man's crusade, and should be led by the Chamber of Commerce."

A FUNNY PROPOSITION

The Boston Transcript makes the very pertinent remark that man is a funny proposition, because, when he reads a medical book, he fancies he has every disease described; but when he reads the work of a moralist all the faults that are pointed out he sees, not in himself, but in his neighbor.

WHALING OFF NEW ZEALAND

Graphic Description of the Work of the Whalers with Their Deadly Harpoons

At the cry of "There she blows!" out go the steam launches to replace the nets, three in number, that suffice to close the narrow channel. These, unanchored, are allowed to float loose, the ends of each slightly overlapping. Kept taut by their own weight, they hang stretched on the float line, an invisible curtain of wire mesh barring the water run.

No human fastening, says the Wide World, has yet been invented that would stop the rush of a charging whale. The principal of the detached floating net is not to stop, but so to hamper the monster with a gossamer of wire rope that he falls an easy prey to the hunters. For this reason also the nets are so placed that on striking an entangled whale may race seaward or sound downward, carrying the enveloping net, without fear of disturbing the remaining two.

When the nets are in position the launches and attendant whaleboats, with their crews, take up their stations at some distance to watch for an upheaval and dancing floating line that marks the striking of a whale.

Often a whale's presence is first indicated by great masses of broken barnacles and torn sea grass that come floating upward to the surface as the whale, floundering among the rocks of the sea-floor, eases himself with delighted scratchings in the depths.

In the boats all is tense expectancy and ordered preparation. Harpoon guns are loaded and made ready, lines are carefully flaked down in the tubs, lances are looked to, and everyone is on the qui vive. Suddenly a sort of shudder runs through the sea. There are tossing billows and wild commotion made by the bobbing float lines. "Hurrah! she's struck!" is the cry.

Away go the boats, each racing to be the first fast to the struggling fish and so earn the bonus that rewards the winning crew. A mighty, grey black head, entangled in a clinging web of wire, rears from out the water. Up, up, it goes, till a huge bulk of body towers a good fifty feet in the air, its side fins thrashing wildly in a smother of foam. It curves in an arch, and then, like an arrow, down go whale and net together for the sound.

Not for long though. The upward drag of bunched net floats, and its necessity for breath brings the animal quickly to the surface—a spouting, snorting, wallowing mass; mad with rage, wild with terror of the unknown clinging horror that envelops it.

Bang! bang! go the guns from each boat in quick succession. Both irons are home and well-placed. A wild quiver of flukes and fins, and the whale either sounds again or races along the surface, towing the boats after it at express speed. But the net holds fast, and at each new effort for freedom the victim becomes more helplessly wound up than before.

Soon exhausted with futile struggling, the whale comes to rest, and there is a momentary cessation of the mad fight, as the leviathan pauses for breath. Huge panting air gasps are plainly audible at a distance of half a mile.

The crews are quick to seize the opportunity. With the lancemen ready in the bow the boats sweep in, one on either side. "Steady with the lance." "Now!" Eight-foot steel blades drive deep for the heart behind the pectoral fins.

A shiver, a hissing spout of [illegible] and blood, a wallow and roll of the huge wire-tangled carcass, flashes of red and white foam in the sunlight, and the black heave of a twentyfoot fin that for one dread instant, scimitar-shaped, a falling wall of bone and sinew, hangs over the boat and its occupants. The boat's crew back out like lightning just in time. Down crashes the mighty flail, missing its blow by a bare foot. There is a roar and clap of many thunders, and jetting spurts of spray leap high into the blue.

The boats, backed clear, still hang to the lines, the crews watching events and waiting the end. It may be that the dying whale will sound again or race in a final effort. But the lances have got home. A few more wallows of despair, the great tail flukes thrash the water with lessening force, and presently the huge body, inert, lifeless, lies quietly on the surface. Hawsers are made fast to the dead whale, and while the boats return to their stations to watch the remaining nets, it is towed by the launch to the jetty ashore.

A PECULIAR HYBRID

What has been aptly described as a hybrid between a needle and a frog has been grown by two eminent French scientists, M. Bataillon and M. Henneguy. The eggs of a frog have been fertilized purely by a mechanical stimulus, pricking them with a fine platinum or glass needle. The needle has been as remarkable in its effects as Aaron's rod, for the eggs have on being placed in sterilized water, developed into tadpoles just as though a male frog had fathered them into existence.

SALT FOR MANGOLDS

Best Results Obtained From Use of 10 Per Cent. Per Acre

That application of salt in addition to other fertilizers is useful for the mangold crop is generally acknowledged, but what is the most suitable quantity to apply is a question upon which there is considerable difference of opinion.

To obtain definite information on this point, the Harper-Adams Agricultural College has been conducting experiments for three years with quantities per acre of 2½ cwt., 5 cwt., 10 cwt. and 15 cwt. respectively.

The salt was applied in the middle of April and thoroughly worked into the soil by cultivating, harrowing and rolling three times before rowing up, the ridges being again split before sowing.

Special care has to be taken to ensure the salt being completely mixed with the soil, otherwise the seed is liable to be damaged.

The dressings were made across all the manurial and variety trial plots, and the weights are the average of the different plots. The result was the following:—The application of—

2½ cwt. produced an average increase, about 4 tons roots;

5 cwt. produced an average increase, about 5½ tons roots;

10 cwt. produced an average increase, about 8½ tons roots;

15 cwt. produced an average increase, about 4 tons roots.

The big application of 15 cwt. was tried for the first time last year, just to see what the effect would be.

The experiment seems to demonstrate that the quantity of salt that can be used with the best result is 10 cwt. per acre.

HORSES IN WINTER

Can be Kept on Straw as Well as on Hay

Professor J. H. Shepperd, of the North Dakota Agricultural College, answering a question recently about wintering horses on straw, says:

The North Dakota station did a considerable amount of work in horse feeding a number of years ago and made extensive trials with oat straw, as compared with hay, for roughage. In the trial it was found that some horses did about as well on it as they did on hay. While others were very much harder to carry, chiefly because their appetites for roughage were too light to cause them to eat enough of it. Aside from those dainty animals there was little trouble in keeping them up on oat straw as roughage.

The oat straw used was that of a normal season, which was coarser and more woody than that which had been obtained this year. The trial consisted of a period of sixty days' feeding with oats as the grain ration against a similar period with oats and hay, and sixty days' feeding with a mixture of half and half bran and shorts by weight with hay compared with sixty days' feeding bran and shorts with oat straw.

During the first thirty days winter conditions were present and the horses were used only about enough for good exercise. During the second thirty days they were worked at harrowing, discing and seeding and had nearly all of that work the last half of the month. The horses receiving oats and hay, as a ration required nine and one-third pounds of oats with hay to carry them, while those on oats and straw consumed eleven and one-half pounds of oats per day. During the thirty days that they had light work, the horses on hay gained 176 pounds and the three on straw 169 pounds. During the thirty days when they had heavy work one-half of the time, those on hay lost 340 pounds and those on straw 345 pounds.

The similar lots of horses fed on bran and shorts, half and half by weight, gained during the winter conditions, 88 pounds when fed hay, and 83 pounds when fed straw. When they were on the straw ration with heavy work for one-half of the month they lost 225 pounds, and on the hay ration 235 pounds.

These results indicate that horses can be carried almost as successfully on straw as roughage as they can on hay, provided enough aditional grain is given them to supply them with sufficient nourishment. The additional grain required is about one-fifth. If the feeder has facilities for chaffing the straw and will moisten it and mix the grain fed with it during the season when the animals are required to do very little work, a smaller amount of grain will carry them.

SUCKERS ON CORN

In the past suckers on corn were regarded as very undesirable, and oftentimes the small boy had to go through the cornfield and pull them off. Recent experiments show that suckering of the corn plant is merely a response to its surroundings. When the stand is thin there will always be plenty of suckers. The corn plants simply try to remedy the thin stand by suckering.

In an experiment several years ago where there were four plants in a hill eight suckers developed to each one hundred plants; where there were three in a hill, twenty-five suckers developed; where there were two in a hill seventy-six suckers, and where there was only one plant in the hill, 198 suckers developed to each one hundred plants. It was noticed that a large number of the suckers produced ears.

Another cause for suckering is the richness of the land. Rich, new land has been found to produce nearly twice the number of suckers as old, worn-out land. To some extent the tendency to suckers is no doubt inherited, but the main causes of suckering are the thinness of the ground and the weather conditions.

Experiments conducted for two years indicated that it paid to leave the suckers on. The average yield for two years of corn with the suckers left on was eighty-one bushels, while for corn with suckers pulled off it was sixty-four bushels.

STATUE OF THE KING

Mr. Arthur Rogers, A.R.C.A., is now engaged upon the creation of a colossal bronze statue of King George V. This, mounted upon a lofty pedestal, will stand at the summit of the main steps leading to the grounds of the Crystal Palace; thus his Majesty will seem to be always overlooking the Festival of the Empire. The King will be represented wearing his Coronation robes, and holding his sceptre in his hand. The sculptor was a prominent pupil at the Manchester School of Arts.

ARMY'S LATEST RECRUIT

Laura, the Coldstreams' Pet Pelican, Returns from Egypt

One of the latest recruits which the British Army has secured is Laura, the pet pelican of the Coldstream Guards. Laura has been brought home from Egypt by the famous regiment, and is now a favorite with all, except—and an important exception—Chinko, a pert little monkey, which is another pet of the Coldstreams'.

However, breaches of the peace are now uncommon between them, as Laura and Chinko do not often meet. The pelican is quite expert in the duties of a soldier. She occasionally wears the uniform, and does "sentry-go" in front of a box in quite the approved style.

A long, narrow beak of sword-like dimensions is an excellent substitute for the real thing, and more than one member of the regiment, not excepting Chinko, has felt its keen edge.

It is reported that Laura found England very depressing after the sunshine of Egypt, but is now getting more acclimatized and contented with her life in the regiment.

THE SQUIRREL'S CUNNING

Storing Its Winter Supply—Why It is a Game Bird Guard

Although the common red squirrel is one of the liveliest and most attractive of our wild creatures, a knowledge of its habits is more casual than intimate.

The past winter gave forest lovers an opportunity for studying squirrels to an extent seldom possible, as the mildness of the weather made neither for long nor deep hibernation. I was surprised at the number and variety of places where the little animal had stored its winter hoards. The smallness of these, too, was noteworthy, as they seldom contained more than a handful of foodstuff.

The larders were in hollow trees, old birds' nests, but most often in the ground a little below the surface, and although many of the hoards were at the foot of trees, the favorite place was in a field bordering a wood and about twenty or thirty yards from the edge. The latter is probably the safest larder of all, as marauding rats and mice do not venture so far outside the wood in winter.

After watching the squirrel going from one hoard to another, I have little doubt that its ability to find these is not a matter of memory or of instinct, but of smell. It is the same highly developed sense ,too, that makes the squirrel an accomplished truffle hunter (for truffles are a great squirrel dainty), and I think that it must have been their smelling abilities that brought squirrels to a peach house in which they did a lot of damage.

Squirrel cunning defeated the most cleverly laid traps and other attempts at capture and to save the fruit the unwelcome visitors had ultimately to be shot. The squirrel is one of the best game bird guards, and its winter stores have fed many a famished pheasant.

Beyond an occasional "chuck" the squirrel does not pay much attention to a mere man, but immediately it espies a fox or stoat on the prowl it chatters loudly in the greatest excitement, and game birds never fail to profit by their sentinel's warnings, apparently knowing that the squirrel is no idle alarmist.

Pheasants scratch up and devour the squirrel's winter stores when other food is scarce, and as "pug" always wastes ten times the quantity of food he consumes, and scatters nuts, acorns, also fruits and hedge berries which the game birds would not otherwise get, and which they thoroughly enjoy, it thus benefits them all the year round.

One of the prettiest sights is that of young squirrels taking their first lessons in climbing and jumping. Like most wild animals the squirrel can swim well when the occasion demands, but it does not love damp, and when passing through wet grass its tail is carried high and not foxwise, as it usually is when the squirrel is in motion.—From the Scotsman.

THE OLDEST FLAG

The flag of Denmark, a plain red banner bearing on it a white cross, is the oldest flag now in existence. For 300 years both Norway and Sweden were united with Denmark under this flag. In the year 1219 King Waldemar of Denmark, while leading his troops to battle against the Livonians, saw, or thought he saw, a bright light in the form of a cross in the sky. He held this appearance to be a promise of Divine aid, and pressed forward to victory. From this time he had the cross placed on the flag of his country, and called it the Dannebork that is, strength of Denmark.

THE MORNING TIMES

FRIDAY, MARCH 15, 1912.

THE CANADIAN CLUB.

As a sample of pessimism, and statements presented, that are clearly disproved by meetings of the Canadian Club of Peterborough, see what the Toronto Weekly Sun, "an independent journal" says, viz:

"The great expectations which were held of the Canadian Club movement seem to have failed. Close observation does not discover any new impulse of public duty or patriotism, or any development of opinion, which may be traced to its iterated words of wisdom. There is perceptible a greater apathy of public opinion and a clear tendency of the people to yield the direction of public affairs to the agents of wealth and selfish interest. One example of that is the undisputed advance of commission government. Another is the practical disappearance of public leaders and of platform debate. The millionaire presides, too, over the clergy, defining its creed and directing its work. If the Canadian Clubs are not responsible, they ought to have suggested a remedy or at least to have found a man, which perhaps they might have done, had they not denied themselves debate."

PROTECTION OF FISH AND GAME

Mr. Edwin Tinsley, Superintendent for Ontario, of Fish and Game says, there is urgent necessity, if the fisheries of the province are to be perpetuated, for the removal at once and for all time, of all interference during the close seasons with nature's perfect plan of reproduction. Close season should be applicable to the whole province, and no conditions or exigency should be an excuse for encroaching on the inadequate close seasons provided for present regulations. If artificial propagation has been the success claimed, why are the States where it has been in use for many years and close seasons ignored, compelled to procure spawn from our waters not procurable in their own waters, where fabulous numbers of fry are alleged to have been deposited annually for the last twenty or thirty years? The superintendent calls attention to the wisdom of allowing only one deer instead of two to be killed by a hunter. Express companies in 1909 carried 3,293 deer, and in 1910 only 2,468, a decrease of 1,145.

BILINGUAL SCHOOLS.

Dr. Merchant's report shows, as was expected, that there are many schools in the French districts of the counties along the Ottawa River and in Essex and Kent which are inefficient. The teachers are incompetent to teach English; many of them speak it with difficulty, some of them cannot speak it at all. There is, therefore, a double objection to these bi-lingual schools; the pupils are not taught to speak and write English; they are not taught any other subject well.

The Kingston Standard thinks that the first thing the Ontario Government should decide upon is a policy to be pursued with regard to these schools, the next is the best method to carry out that policy. Is it the intention of the government to instruct these children so that they shall speak and write English instead of speaking and writing French? That is the crux of the whole situation. If the government is determined that English shall be the tongue of the people of this Province, and that the boys and girls in these bi-lingual schools shall grow up English-speaking people, there ought to be no difficulty whatever in carrying out that determination except in so far as the government may be too late in coming to such a decision.

It is amusing to read the Liberal press on this subject. One would think that on Sir James Whitney and his colleagues rested the blame for the present deplorable conditions in these Ontario schools. These French schools in Eastern Ontario have not sprung up in a night. For the past [illegible] years, the French have been drifting over into Ontario and have been buying up the farms along the Ottawa Valley. The Liberal Governments which held power for thirty-five years are answerable for this incubus of bi-lingual schools. If the Ministers of Education under Mowat and his successors had done their duty we should never have had one of them. The time to check this business was in its infancy.

The Rev. R. J. Campbell, who recently visited this country and the United States, says that in the States the working man gets a fairer share of the results of labor than do the British workmen. You sometimes hear the expression "Oh, his head is absolutely empty." It struck one of our reporters yesterday that for a true sample of emptiness, nothing can, or could, exceed one of the big sleigh, or waggon loads of barrels that daily are taken to the Quaker Oats Company's factory. Such loads contain about 1,500 cubic feet of emptiness to be filled by a local product that helps to make Peterborough famous.

5 Years' Throat Trouble And Influenza Cured

EMINENT DOCTORS FAILED TO CURE—HAD GIVEN UP HOPE.

This Case Does Prove That When Catarrhozone is Breathed Every Trace of Catarrh Disappears.

Milford Haven, Da., Jan. 19—Every one in this neighborhood knows of the long suffering from influenza and catarrh endured by Mrs. D. Gurney. Today she is well. Her recovery is due entirely to Catarrhozone. This is her own statement: "I was a great sufferer from catarrh in the head, throat and nose, and endured the manifold tortures of influenza for five years. My life was despaired of. Catarrh was undermining my strength very fast. I used treatments from eminent doctors, but all failed to cure me. I had given up hope of ever being well. Then I read of a wonderful cure made by Catarrhozone. Immediately I sent for Catarrhozone, and before I had used one bottle I was greatly relieved. To-day I am cured. We would not be without Catarrhozone in our home—it's so sure in colds, coughs, bronchial and throat trouble. I feel it is my duty to publicly recommend Catarrhozone."

Get the large dollar size of Catarrhozone; it contains a beautiful hard rubber inhaler, and medicine that lasts two months. Smaller sizes, 25c. and 50c. each. Beware of imitations—accept only Catarrhozone, sold by all reliable dealers or by mail from The Catarrhozone Company, Kingston, Ont., and Buffalo, N. Y.

Fancy Prices for Dogs

It is not only in England and America that fantastic prices are paid for dogs, but in Germany fanciers will pay high prices. At the recent exhibition of dogs at Cassel a Frenchman offered 12,000 marks, about $3,000, for a police dog. The dog rejoices in the name of Tell, and the sum offered might be considered as conclusive evidence that Tell is worthy of his famous name, but this is not all. The dog belongs to Sergeant Decker, who refused the tempting offer, observing that his dog should not quit Germany at any price.

HAPPINESS A WELCOME VISITOR

When It Comes Along Say "Glad to See You"

When Happiness comes along, say, "Come in! Glad to see you. Sit down and stay as long as you can." That is better than saying, "Now, you move on! The last time you were here, calamity followed you. You can't fool me. You always have something up your sleeve."

We do not need recipes for happiness so much as sense to appreciate what we have.

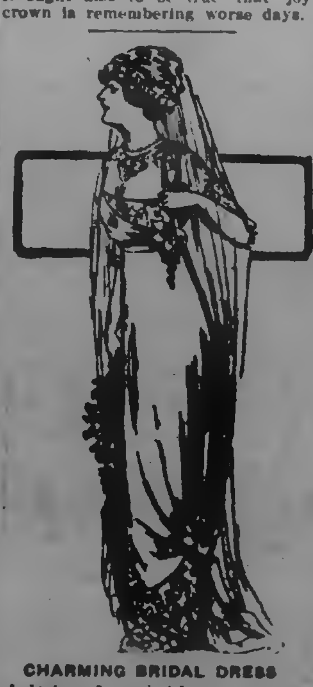
There are two great enemies to present enjoyment. To-day, we might say, full of waves of joy, which thrill ever through the world. To-day stands crucified between two thieves, To-morrow and Yesterday.

Out of yesterday came remorse and regret. Out of memory rise the foul mists to obscure to-day's sun. Alas! "It might have been!" also "What a fool I was!" likewise "Why did it ever happen?" Now, the one good thing about the past is that it is past, that it is there and not here. And that is the one thing which we forget.

On second thought, there is another good quality in the past, which is that a past mistake or sorrow is just as useful as a pedestal on which to erect to-day's joy as a past pleasure would have been—often better. It's a poor rule that won't work both ways; and if the lugubrious wail of Tennyson be true, that

"Sorrow's crown of sorrow
Is remembering happier days."

It ought also to be true that joy's crown is remembering worse days.



CHARMING BRIDAL DRESS

A design of unusual beauty and simplicity is shown in to-day's illustration. The bodice is of mousseline de soie, trimmed with a mixture of white and silver lace. The dainty girdle and tunic, as well as the train, are of soft white satin. The skirt is of lace. A wreath of orange buds is worn in the hair and holds the filmy veil in place.

A man with plenty of friends can always borrow money, but if he does, he soon won't have plenty of friends.

"The Beer with a Reputation"

O'Keefe's PILSENER LAGER

lives up to its reputation as the purest, most wholesome, most delicious lager brewed. None finer at any price, and few as good at double the price. 214

CALGARY

The City Of Opportunity

Capitol Hill

One of Calgary's close-in residential sub-divisions. City water is now in the adjoining divisions and sewer system is to be installed this spring. We expect these improvements in Capitol Hill this summer. Street car service is at present within two or three blocks of Capitol Hill. The City of Calgary has purchased Block 68, Capitol Hill, on which to build a large public school. A number of nice homes have already been built in Capitol Hill, and many more are in course of construction.

Lots in this sub-division are selling in pairs at $250 to $350 per lot. We offer you one block of forty lots, close to Block 68 at $216 per lot, on terms of Third Cash and Balance four, eight and twelve months, with interest at 8 per cent. on deferred payments. This block will readily sell for $300 per lot, or more, within the next six months. The block is high and level, and every lot is perfect. This is a gilt-edged investment. If you cannot handle it alone have some friend join you.

WE Want YOU To Read About GROUARD

The First City, Gateway and Commercial Centre of the Great

PEACE RIVER COUNTRY

Situated at the west end of Lesser Slave Lake controlling the entrance to the rich and fertile Lands of the great Peace River District. This is not a subdivision of a proposed townsite but part of an established town, first settlement and distributing centre of the Peace River Country

"I can forsee a very great future for Grouard"—a statement made by a party recently returned from there.

Farm lands and farming made Winnipeg, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Brandon, so you can imagine the future for GROUARD with forty million acres of the richest farm lands in the world behind it. The Peace River Country, at no great distant date, will be the home of a million prosperous farmers. Think of the business that will be done at GROUARD—the entrance and distributing center situated as it will be with rail and steamboat transportation. Hundreds of settlers are now going into the rich districts around GROUARD, now outfitting, trading and buying goods at GROUARD.

Read all of This Page

GROUARD is the place for the business man, capitalist, professional man, investor or farmer.

This is not a proposed townsite, but an established town of years standing.

Now that the Wonderful Peace River farming country has become the most prominent feature of the present time, and the settlers are pouring into that district, GROUARD has attained an importance as to location and possibilities never before attained by any town.

GROUARD IS ESTABLISHED—has a post office, stores, churches, government telegraph, telephone system, weather bureau, doctors, shops, saw mill, government land office for the far [illegible] stores of the Hudson's Bay Company, and the large firm of Revillon Bros., the Peace River Trading and Land Company, also the Bank of Commerce and Royal Bank have established branches there, with other banks to follow. You know banks do not go into a town, city or country where there is no business, or where the business will not increase. Follow the banks and you can never lose.

Look at the Location of GROUARD

See the Railroads that are building to it.

Can you overlook such an investment when the prices and terms are right

GROUARD is the natural gateway to the Peace River country, containing 40,000,000 acres of good agricultural land.

GROUARD will be the trade distributing point for all the country of which it holds the key position.

GROUARD is the natural shipping point for the great cattle trade that will accrue to this Peace River country.

GROUARD is rich in the surrounding varied natural resources, and its property fulfils every requirement for safe and profitable investment.

GROUARD is the head of a waterway of approximately 3,000 miles of lake and river transportation.

GROUARD is so important that three railroads are heading towards it and building is being done as fast as man can do it.

GROUARD is so important that banks have already established there, and more are making ready to follow.

GROUARD has as its foundation the products and revenue that will accrue from millions of acres of the best agricultural land in Canada.

GROUARD will "stand up" under the most rigid investigation as to its resources and possibilities.

GROUARD is backed up by "THE GOLD MEDAL WHEAT DISTRICT OF THE WORLD."

GROUARD will be larger in a couple of years than most of the townsites that have been placed on the market for the last ten years, because it has something substantial behind it.

GROUARD is what we say it is and more too.

GROUARD is the place you cannot afford to overlook in your investments, and it will make money for you.

YOU are now having placed before you the first opportunity to invest in THE City of the Peace River District, backed up by the greatest area of the best agricultural land in Canada.

Three railways are heading towards Grouard. What other new towns or cities can point to such transportation advantages right at the start as this? Think of it: three railroads, making this a divisional point, also water transportation. Would these roads build there if Grouard was not going to be one of the most important points in Western Canada? This fact alone is sufficient to convince you this investment is one of merit.

The Canadian Northern Railway is already at Athabasca Landing east of Grouard and property bought at that point a year ago for from $100 to $300 per lot is now selling at from $1000 to $1500 per lot.

Government Guarantee Railroads
Great Railroads make Great Cities

That is an accepted fact—it is indisputable. The whole history of America proves it. Now, the man who thinks of making an investment, if he is shrewd and far-seeing and anxious to safeguard his money in every way possible, will consider, not only the activity to be caused by the railway, but will consider the surrounding country, what it is, and what it will produce. Look at the key map above, and trace the Canadian Northern Railway from Edmonton to Athabasca Landing and ON TO GOURARD. This is one of the lines that is now being built. The road is already in operation to Athabasca Landing and construction from there west to Grouard is under way. The Alberta Government within the last three weeks GUARANTEED THE NECESSARY BONDS FOR THE CONSTRUCTION of this road, thus making it absolute, and under such guarantee, must be in operation within a certain time.

LOOK AGAIN, and trace the line of the Edmonton-Dunvegan and British Columbia Railway. You will see Grouard on its line. The bonds for the construction of this line WERE ALSO GUARANTEED within the last three weeks, by the Alberta Government. Construction is now starting, and goes on with all possible speed. This line connects with the Grand Trunk Pacific at Edmonton.

Would the Government guarantee bonds for the construction of these railways if the country they were entering was not good? Would they go to Grouard if it was not important?

Railway Terminous on This Property

Again, trace the line of the Pacific and Hudsons Bay Railway which runs from the Pacific Coast in British Columbia, directly east to Fort Churchill on the Hudsons Bay. This road is being built by English capital. You will see this road runs through Grouard, and further the owners of this property have entered into an agreement with this railway, turning over to it some fifty acres of the property we are offering you, and the railway company have agreed to make their Grouard terminals consisting of station, freight sheds, and all other buildings, yards, etc., right on this property. This ensures the terminals for Grouard of the Pacific and Hudsons Bay railway right on our property.

Further, the main street of this commercial centre property runs down to the deep water frontage of the Lake, which is the head of an immense water transportation mileage, and we are turning over to the Town of Grouard sufficient water frontage for municipal owned docks and wharves.

Lots that sold in Athabasca Landing (look on map) a year ago at $200 to $350 are now being sold to-day from $1000 to $1500 each. Why? Because the railroad has just reached there, and they are wanted; the same thing will occur in Grouard shortly.

Your success in life, if you are a working man, depends largely on how you save and invest the few pennies, that you now throw away carelessly; if you are an employer how you invest your dividends, your surplus money.

Trace back the real big fortunes of this or any other country and you'll find they started from real estate. The wealth of the country to-day is real estate.

Land—the "backbone of to-day's business. The land or property owner is the king among men. If you are tired of working on the dead level "get-no-where" of city life, if you are held down by the man "higher-up" or if you have surplus money to invest buy property; become an owner of real estate in a growing community, in a place where the property is and will be wanted for business purposes, and above all in a city or town backed up by an agricultural district and the railroads.

We offer you the opportunity. Save 17 or 30c a day, make your first step towards independence—a protection for your family, a sound investment.

We know that every lot in Grouard will be taken up in sixty days. Our sub-division is not large. Is part of the town.

We are sure if you knew what we know about Grouard and the Peace River Country you would not hesitate a single minute.

You are dealing with the right kind of people; ask the Quebec Bank at Vancouver, or the Bank of Hamilton, Winnipeg, or Bradstreets who we are. YOU ARE DEALING WITH A CLEAN CUT PROPOSITION. Ask the Board of Trade at Grouard, or the Managers of the Bank of Commerce, or Royal Bank at Grouard what it is.

You have read this bulletin, we have told you the story, it is now entirely up to you.

Are you going to let 17 or 30c a day stand between you and success.

Be an owner of property in Canada's coming great Peace River City.

Act to-day.

FOR ASSISTANCE OF EMIGRANTS

British Society That Will Advance Part of Necessary Funds—Matrimonial Bureau

New impetus to emigration from Britain to her overseas dominions has been provided by the Empire Emigration Society, an undertaking organized to assist those who wish to emigrate but are unable to do so for lack of funds. Lord Ridley and Lord Stanhurst are actively interested in this society and act as trustees of its funds. Not the ill nourished and poverty stricken but the able bodied with some savings to their credit are the class of emigrant to whom chances are being offered. Soon after it was established, the Empire Emigration Society had over 1,500 people on its books with $10,000 at their disposal, who were anxious to save the balance in order to win through to hoped for prosperity in Canada, Australia or New Zealand.

The intending emigrants have to open an account with the Society with a minimum deposit of four dollars. Each subsequent payment must not be less than one dollar. As soon as the depositor has paid in half the necessary amount his passage is booked and arrangements made to supply him with employment when he arrives at his destination. Every class of work is dealt with, and steps are taken to help emigrants to follow their own callings overseas. Typical of the variety of applicants in touch with the Society are four cases the secretary selected at random. A nurse, who desires to go to British Columbia has enough money to pay her passage, but is in need of advice as to the best means of going; a stonemason, who means to emigrate as soon as he can raise sufficient funds and who has paid a first instalment of seven dollars; a widow, who is an expert dressmaker, and hopes to have saved enough by the end of June to go out to Canada; a doctor with some capital who wants to know of a colony where he may practice his profession and at the same time give his two sons a start in farming.

The Duke of Marlborough recently gave a broad hint to the surplus women of England to go to the dominions beyond the seas where men were waiting for wives. Said the Duke: "There are a million more women than men in England, and there are a million more men than there are women in the dominions." So, indirectly, the Empire Emigration Society is playing the part of marriage bureau for Canadian bachelors, and domestic helps all over the country are becoming infected with the travel fever after dreaming of more congenial careers in new lands.

Mr. Louis N. Parker, the dramatist, was born in France, his father was an American, his mother an Englishwoman, his first language was Italian, and he was educated in Germany.

A GROTESQUE OFFERTORY

Mengo Cathedral, in Uganda, which was recently destroyed by lightning, was probably the largest edifice in Central Africa, being capable of containing nearly 5,000 people. It was consecrated about six years ago, and an offertory of grotesquely varied gifts was collected on the occasion. This consisted of 13 cows, four goats, 125 eggs, 130 fowls, 75,000 cowrie shells, and a number of coins. The cows, for lack of room, were not taken inside the Cathedral, but the goats were led up to the altar and presented to the bishop, while the fowls were brought in big bamboo crates.

MELANCHOLY IN FLOWERS

Curious, indeed, the doom assigned to two of the fairest o. the spring flowers, for if primroses are forsaken the violet is a nun. Perhaps this atmosphere of gentle melancholy increases the affection inspired by these favorite flowers which seem dearer far to human kind than such rivals as the brilliant marsh marigold and the dangerous aconite.—Black and White.

Last year the Carnegie Trust paid students' fees amounting to $248,000.

A somewhat amusing study in natural history was in evidence yesterday at the Montreal House, conducted by Mr. James Head. Mr. Head has two large owls in a big cage. He also has a fox terrier. The dog, with almost human sense, catches rats and brings a rat, when caught, to the front of the cage, leaving it on the floor for someone to give to the owls. Then in equally human line of thought, or perversity, when one gives the rat to the birds, it seems to regret its generosity and flies at the cage to recover its prey. The owls, however, quickly pass the rat into the department of the inte-

SEVERE

A good story is going the rounds at a certain university regarding one of the sarcastic professors, who was recently conducting an oral examination in a very scientific way.

There was one student, handsome, easy and self possessed, who appeared to be utterly ignorant of the simplest phases of the subject.

An Irishman was lately employed by one of our large railway companies as a porter. Shortly after he began his duties a woman went up to him and said:

Speed Not Altogether Modern.

The concurrent press of Canada has a long report of an ice-boat trip from Erie, Pa., to Cleveland, O. This reminds our older citizens of the winters, some forty years ago, when quite a number of Peterborough people used to go to Rice Lake every winter to enjoy ice-boating from Bewdley to the foot of the lake. There are more than two or three Peterborough residents living to-day who remember travelling the three miles between Gore's Landing and Harwood, in just as many minutes as miles. This goes to show, that with all the modern inventions, even including "bubble-waggons," speed is

To Cook Salt Fish Nicely it should be soaked in cold water the night before it is used, with a few spoonfuls of vinegar. Place it in cold water to cover, and gradually bring to the boil. Simmer for a quarter of an hour.

Mahogany Stain is made thus: Into an earthenware jar put one pint of linseed oil, one ounce of alkanet root, and one ounce of rose pink. Let it stand twenty-four hours, stirring occasionally. Rub it well into the wood with a woollen cloth.

Burn all Kitchen Waste as far as possible in the closed stove. When the fire is red draw the fuel towards the front bars, place the refuse at the back of the grate, and if necessary, a little coal over. Open damper, and the rubbish will be quickly destroyed without smell.

Eggs and Cheese.—Cut some small squares of toast, butter them thickly, and put on each a slice of hard-boiled egg. Melt in a pan any scraps of cheese you may have, with a little milk. Season with pepper, salt, and made mustard. When smooth and thick, pour over the eggs and serve at once.

When Cooking Salt Meat, first wash it well in cold water, then place in a saucepan, cover with fresh cold water, and bring to the boil. Skim, and simmer gently till the joint is cooked.

Pastry requires a sharp steady oven, where it can cook quickly. Careful watching is necessary, and a wise cook will test her oven with a piece of paper or thin slice of bread before commencing her work.

MOTHERS' MISTAKES

Don't Handicap Girls by Doing Things For Them

I know a mother, says a writer, who is so managing and capable that she never gives the girls a chance to show what they can do.

If one of them is going to make a blouse, she will say, "My dear, you'll only spoil the stuff; you'd better let me cut it out for you."

And it generally ends in mother making the blouse.

Or one of the girls will offer to help with the housekeeping. "Thank you, [illegible] trouble to do it myself. I know where everything is," says the managing mamma.

The mother who does this kind of thing is placing her girls at a serious disadvantage.

If they don't experiment and learn how to do things, how are they to know?

When they have homes of their own, and have to do things, it will possibly be a very serious thing for them to be so very incapable, and have to start learning duties they should by rights be proficient in.

Don't make the mistake of handicapping the girls like that.

Let them have their share in the home duties, and, if they sometimes make mistakes, and even "spoil the stuff," the wise mother will comfort herself with the knowledge that it is all practice towards perfection.

CLOSED ROASTING PAN

Tray Slides In and Out and Cover Keeps the Flavor In

A combination pan that can be used either for roasting meat and potatoes or for baking bread has been invented by a Colorado man. The bottom portion is rectangular, and above it rises a slanting top like a mansard roof. A tray slides back and forth in the casing on slideways that run along the sides. The front end of this tray operates to close the lower half of the opening in the front end of the casing, and a hinged flap closes the upper half. Across the centre of the pan is a flat tray with perforations that allow the draining of liquid from anything that requires draining or keeps two articles separate. The advantage of an inclosed pan of this type is that in cooking meat, for example, all the flavor is kept in the pan instead of evaporating in steam, and the meat is done moister. Articles cooked in it require less attention than in an old style utensil, too.

Ice Question Again Discussed.

Once more the festive germ, supposed to have its habitat in ice, caused the local Board of Health to talk over Peterborough's ice supply.

Dr. McPherson, M.H.O., reported having interviewed Mr. Allin, the ice dealer. The chairman of the Board and the M.H.O. had thought that it would not be the best policy to oppose Mr. Allin too strenuously this year, owing to the fact that they had not given him extended warning of the proposed course. They had suggested cakes printed for use in the local refrigerators describing the kind of ice used, whether for cooling purposes only, or for placing in beverages or food.

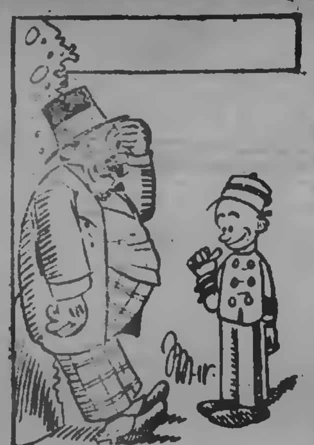
Gompers, Mitchell and Morrison on Trial at Washington.

Washington, Mar. 12.—Samuel Gompers, John Mitchell and Frank Morrison, the three Federation of Labor officials, being tried in the District of Columbia Supreme Court before the full bench of justices, to-day were severely scored by Attorney Darlington, of the prosecutors, who characterized their alleged violation of the Buck Stove and Range injunction as "flagrant, defiant and conscious."

Mr. Darlington declared the case should have been entitled "law against anarchy," because of the position taken by the respondents that they would follow their own inclinations despite the opinions of the tribunals created by the constitution to interpret the law.

Pekin, Mar. 12.—The suffragettes of China, outdoing their Western sisters, are desirous of asserting their military valor. At Shanghai, the Chinese girls at the Chang Yu school wrote to the leader of the republican forces offering their aid as soldiers.

"Heaven has given women the same rights as man," the letter says. "Soon the Manchus will be chased out of China, but till now, no regiment of women has been formed. We wish to take a share with the men of China in crushing our enemies." The needle does not suffice for us. We ask for arms."



HOME DUTIES

Stage Manager:—"Where is the six-year-old child-wonder? The audience is getting impatient."

NOT AN IMPOSTOR

He was a poor, downtrodden specimen of humanity, and the heart of the millionaire merchant was touched. He stopped for a moment to listen to the beggar's plea.

"I'm starving, sir," wailed the unfortunate one, and tears stood in his eyes. "And this is the last thing we have in the world—my poor wife's wedding-ring!"

Then the merchant remembered. He looked more closely into the man's face, and all of a sudden, became exceedingly mad.

"You—you scoundrel!" he spluttered. "Why, it was only last week I bought your wife's wedding-ring from you to save you from starvation! You're an impostor, sir! Get—"

"An impostor!" cried the weary one indignantly. "Oh, no, sir! You're quite mistaken! This ring belongs to my second wife—I was married again last Monday!"

PRESENCE OF MIND

It was the annual concert of the Slowcombe Philharmonic Society, and the young man who came from the city was obviously bored.

At last one singer tried him more than usual. Lines of pain showed on his face as he leaned forward to express himself audibly to his elderly neighbor; for the young man, being musical, felt the need of sympathy.

"Did you ever hear, in the whole course of your existence," he whispered, in disgust, "such horribly discordant, ear-splitting—"

The old gentleman frowned.

"That's my daughter, sir, and if—"

But the young man waved aside the interruption and, with scarcely a tremor, went on.

"Such ear-splitting chatter as these idiots behind us are marking! Really, I can scarcely catch one word of the song!"

TOO MANY TRAINS

A railway guard busily engaged in getting his train ready to start accidentally trod on a lady's dress as she swept by.

"Beg pardon, madam," replied the guard, "but I can't possibly attend to two trains at once."

MONEY AFFAIRS OF YOUR CHILD

The Advisability of Giving Them a Definite Allowance and Cultivating Thrift

One day last summer a mother took her children to a popular picnic park. After the fashion of children, they came to her at frequent intervals throughout the day with requests for money for pony rides, merry-go-round trips, ice-cream, and all the things that children think essential to their pleasure on such occasions. When the mother counted up at night, she was astonished to find how much money had been spent.

"I think," she said to her husband, "that our present method with the children will make spendthrifts of them. They have no idea of the value of money."

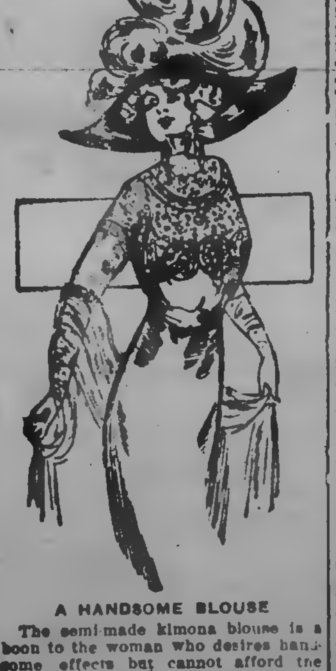
When next they were going to the park, the mother gave to each child a sum of money in his own pocketbook. She explained that this money was for the picnic, and when it was spent they could not have more. They considered the spending of money carefully, often consulting with their mother. They weighed different things and decided which they would rather have, and, when the money was gone, there was no coaxing or whining.

The mother decided, too, that each child should have a weekly allowance, instead of coming to her with their little wants. The children were five and six years old, and they were given five cents a week each. The first week the money was all spent the first afternoon. They bought some marbles, and the rest went for candy. On Sunday they were sadly distressed because they had no coppers for Sunday school. Mother did not supply any, and they never forgot again. In a very short time they wanted things that cost more than five cents, and so they learned to deny themselves and save for a definite object. After that, at mother's suggestion, they put a nickel in the bank each week—that bank that was to take them through college by and by. Of course they made many mistakes, but the parents argued that it was better to make the mistakes with the coppers than with the dollars after awhile. When the other children first learned that they had money, they used to coax them into foolish expenditures, but after a few disappointments in getting things that they had planned, they learned to resist this temptation.

By the suggestion that can always be given in stories, the mother gradually trained them to buy less candy and satisfy their appetites with some harmless indulgence. When the children were a year older, their allowance was increased.

In one of the recent magazines, a writer argued against giving children an allowance, saying that it gave them the feeling that the world owed them a living. In my experience I would draw an inference exactly opposite. The child who is accustomed to receive whatever sum he asks for from his parents would be very likely to get this irresponsible feeling, but one who has a definite sum to depend [illegible] early, develops a sense of thrift. The child in a well-conducted home always has some little duties, and, while he should regard them as a labor of love and not feel that he is specifically paid for them, yet they make him, to the extent of his ability, a part of the working household, and thus give him a share of its earnings.

One mother wisely phrased it, "This is your salary, because you are our dear little boy."—Zella Margaret Walters.



A HANDSOME BLOUSE

The semi-made kimona blouse is a boon to the woman who desires handsome effects but cannot afford the finished garments. All-over lace is one of the favorite materials for the separate blouse, as well as chiffon, and an unusually dainty design which brings out the beauty of the lace is shown in the sketch. The bolero effect is very smart and the arrangement of the band trimmings new and effective.

AN ORANGE PLANT

A lovely plant, suitable for window or table decoration, can be raised from the pips of a sweet orange. The pips should be taken out when the orange is very ripe, and sown in an ordinary flower-pot, filled with light soil. In a few weeks shoots will appear above the surface and develop into a fine hardy plant, which will remain green both summer and winter.

Post Office Clock Rests Again.

That Post Office clock as a public utility is the most easily tired piece of mechanism in the city. The hands at 6.30 yesterday morning, and possibly earlier at 9.10. They had, in all probability retired from the activities of life during the night before. Then those hands stuck as other city clocks registered the fleeting hours. What is the matter with that clock anyhow?

FLESH FLIES

Can Do No Damage If Given No Place to Lay Their Eggs

When the sheep's wool becomes filthy and the skin irritated, an ideal condition is made for the work of the maggot fly. And when the maggots get a start they create a more and more friendly harbor for their kind as they work and increase in numbers under the wool. A sheep infected with maggots is a most pitiful sight, helpless against the parasites eating out its flesh until the sheep dies, its flesh gnawed out in a most cruel manner. For the sake of humanity, if for no other reason, sheep should be saved from much suffering.

These flies can do no damage if not given a suitable place to lay their eggs. Sheep should be watched carefully, especially in warm damp weather, and dirty tag-locks or other filth clipped off and a little tar dabbed on if the skin is chafed. These maggots also get in their work under rams' horns. Indeed, a ram with heavy horns lying close to his head will hardly pass through a summer without infection unless the flies are kept away by putting some tar on the ram's head.

An infected sheep can be told by the fact that it refuses to eat, stands with its head down and most often by itself, and stamps its feet or jerks its head exactly as irritation by maggots would lead one to expect. The remedy is simple. Cut away the wool close. Clean out all maggots, using turpentine to wash them out. Smear the place thoroughly with tar. Then watch the sheep to see that the flies do not again start in the same place. Thoroughness in cleaning out the parasites is essential, for one left in will start the damage all over.

GOOD CHICKENS

Something to Keep them Busy—The Ideal Pen

Chickens that are penned up should have their houses cleaned out twice a week at least, and their runs dug up (to loosen the earth) once a week, which enables them to have a little exercise in the way of scratching. Their morning meal should consist of potato peelings and all scraps from the table, boiled down and thickened, after draining well, with barley meal, with a dash of pepper in, and when cooled down, given; their water vessels washed and filled. For mid-day meal, a good size cabbage, hung to allow them to get round it, and high enough for them to peck at, which keeps them busy for some considerable time, and, for a change, a swede hung is very good, too. For their last meal give barley, a little wheat, or darry, and occasionally, small Indian corn. A box kept in the run, with all fine ashes saved from the house on washing days, if sifted well, gives them a bath. A handful of peppercorns thrown in to them about once a month helps to keep them in good condition, and their houses should be limewashed occasionally.

CLEANING MEN'S CLOTHES

The Best Mixture for the Removal of Grease Spots

The cleaning of a dust-laden old coat reduces the average woman to despair, as it is hard work, and the easiest way to clean a coat or pair of pants is to pin them to the clothes-line and beat the dust out with a cane or limber switch. Then lay them out on a table and brush with a stiff brush. A coat, vest or pair of pants that is not much soiled will come out of a good gasoline bath looking like new. First brush and shake the garment until it seems perfectly free of dust, then remove the spots and put the garment in a wash-bowl or a large bucket and pour enough gasoline over the garment to saturate it thoroughly, then cover the bucket to keep the fluid from evaporating and leave it for two hours. The safest way to use the gasoline is in the open air. Clean the garments by pressing and squeezing between the hands, and hang over the line.

There is nothing better for removing grease spots from the cloth than a fluid composed of four parts of alcohol to one part of ammonia. When the garments are soiled enough to be washed, remove the buttons and baste the button-holes together; then put them in a strong pearline suds and let them remain for half an hour; then wash clean through this suds and put them through a lighter suds and rinse through clear water. There is nothing better than this suds for washing garments of any color, and it leaves the cloth soft and clean, and then it is much easier to wash a garment that is much soiled than to try to remove the spots from the fabric, and, after they are washed and pressed, the buttons can be sewed in place and the buttonholes washed over again if necessary.

When pants are beginning to get baggy at the knees, turn them wrong side out, lay one leg at a time on the ironing table, lay a wet cloth all over the knee portions and press until the cloth is dry, then turn right side out, fold in the centre and press from top to bottom over the damp cloth.

FISH PONDS ON THE FARM

That relief from the high prices of meats might be found in having fish ponds on farms, is the opinion expressed by an Omaha, Neb., paper. "Years ago," it says, "when times were not so good and when people were not enjoying the degree of prosperity that now seems to prevail throughout the land, there was great interest taken in stocking the small and larger streams with fish from the state and government fisheries. Thousands of farm fish ponds were built all over the country, in all states, and the commercial idea prevailed in the construction and stocking of these ponds. This was when the fish pond on the farm was viewed as an asset in the advertising and sale of the farm."

Rev. Geo. Buskin Ends His Visit.

Rev. Geo. Buskin, 63 O'Hara avenue, Toronto, who has been engaged for many years in evangelical and Colportage Mission work, yesterday completed his twenty-first annual visit to Peterborough. During his sojourn here, this venerable Divine collected $20.25 for the cause he represents. Rev. Mr. Buskin left yesterday for Lindsay, on a similar mission.

SORE SHOLDERS, YOUNG HORSES

Large Collars are Usually the Cause—Colts Should be Gradually Toughened to Work

The care of the shoulders of young horses is one of the most important factors to keep in mind during the first few weeks of the spring work.

A horse can not do satisfactory work with shoulders that pain him every time he takes a step. The horse may be looked upon as a machine that is expected to do so much work, and if some of the mechanism is out of order, then the amount of work is lessened. But, also the animal must be looked upon as a creature with feeling and ambition, taking pride in its work, that is a willing, obedient, and, therefore, valuable servant, and should be properly cared for.

The first thing of importance to consider in the draft horse is the collar. Most injured shoulders are the result of poorly-fitting collars, and the fault usually lies in a collar being too large. It is a good idea to have a harness-maker fit the collars to your horses. He may be able to remove padding, and in other ways make the collar over so that it will fit nicely. Heavy collar pads are to be avoided if possible. They are hot and cause the shoulder to sweat; this keeps the pad and shoulder wet, and the skin becomes soft and blisters easily.

Dirty collars are probably as responsible for sore shoulders as ill-fitting ones. In the spring the horse's hair is long and holds large quantities of dirt and scales from the skin. He is soft from lack of work and sweats profusely. This forms a gummy dirt that adheres to the collar and makes, when dry, a hard, tough surface. The ordinary farm hand feels that his duty is done if he scrapes the dirt from the collar with the back of his jack-knife. This method, however, is not an especially good one for the leather of the collar, and a smooth surface is not left. A damp sponge used in the evening as soon as the collar is taken off will, in one or two minutes, remove the dirt. This may be followed by an oiled rag. If this is done, the collar, in the morning should be soft and smooth.

Careless driving, jerking a horse out of the furrow and into it again, allowing him to work with his head around on one side, all tend to produce sore shoulders.

Of course the first precaution to take is not to ask the colt to do a full day's work till he learns something about his job and ceases to fret. The shoulders will then gradually become toughened. It is a good idea to sponge the shoulders with cold water—just plain cold water. Alum water has been used to good advantage; also weak solutions of tannic acid. Alcohol tends to toughen the skin.

The injuries to the top of the neck very frequently terminate in fistulas, withers, etc. A blister near the point of the shoulder is likely to become a [illegible] "cold abscess." Ill-fitting collars and poor drivers are equally responsible for a condition known as "sweeny."

If an injury occurs and in spite of careful attention a horse's shoulder [illegible] has developed, or an abscess has formed, or the animal is "sweened," then seek the advice of a veterinary while there is still a chance to check the progress of the injury. This is not the proper place to teach the treatment of such conditions after the injury has been done; it takes years of special work to do that, but it is a good opportunity to impress upon the minds of horse owners that such unfortunate things may be entirely avoided.

LIME AND ITS USES

Helps Land to Digest Manure and Other Matter

Expressed simply and as a simile, the application of lime to land assists it to "digest" manure and other animal matter; it prevents the soil from becoming sour and callous; it causes it to yield up readily its full proportion of plant food; and it assists root action.

Although in these days of artificial manure lime is not so highly necessary as it was, its application will work wonders with most soils, particularly with those that have been neglected; and the small holder breaking up old pasturage for the purpose of close cultivation will find an application almost essential.

Generally speaking, it is better to give light dressings frequently rather than a heavy dressing occasionally; and, further, you should buy from a reputable source, or you may obtain mixed with the material a quantity not effectually treated in the kiln. For light soils a ton and a half of lime to the acre should be ample, but heavy soils need more liberal treatment.

SORT OF SOW TO BREED FROM

In considering the efficiency of brood sows, Henry Wallace gives the following advice: Go over those that have had pigs the present year and ask them the following questions: How many pigs did you have this year? Were they all good ones, or did you have two or three choice pigs and were the rest inferior? How did you take care of those pigs? Are you a good suckler? Are you good-natured? Are you a good mother, or are you one of the nervous, fidgety kind, always worrying and fretting for fear somebody will hurt you and your precious piglets? If the brood sow on being interrogated, cannot give satisfactory answers to these questions, it is not worth while to scold her or give her a moral lecture. Just turn her into the fattening pen; for there is where she belongs.

How many hens do you have in your flock that do not pay their board? This may be the reason you do not find poultry profitable. Eliminate the unprofitable hens.

Total Loss by Fire At Norwood.

The pretty little village of Norwood has had an excitement. On Tuesday morning the village fire bell clanged out a sonorous warning. The fire was found to be located at the residence of Mr. Geo. Reynolds, Quebec street. Mr. Reynolds had barely time to escape. It was found impossible to save any of the household effects and Mr. Reynolds had not even time to secure his pocket book which contained considerable cash. The origin of the fire is unknown. The house was not insured, and Mr. Reynolds will suffer a total loss of both house and contents.

Fitzgerald, of Toronto, being in the chair. Among those present representing Peterborough were W. S. Davidson, Dan McCabe and Manager Curtis Templin.

Mr. Cornelius O'Brien's Death.

Yesterday morning, Mr. Cornelius O'Brien, a life-long and respected resident of the township of Douro, passed away in St. Joseph's Hospital, at the age of sixty-five years. The funeral will take place on Saturday morning at nine o'clock from the family residence, Douro, to St. Joseph's church and thence to St. Joseph's cemetery, Douro.

A Lecture on Art.

Last night a most interesting lecture was given at the Public Library on "J. M. W. Turner, the Man and his Art." The address was given under the auspices of the Woman's Art Association, by Rev. F. J. Sawers, rector of St. Luke's church. The talented divine displayed a thorough knowledge of art and was listened to keenly by all present.

Mr. Alex. Dawson Laid to Rest.

Rev. Robt. Pogue, pastor of St. Paul's church, conducted a very impressive service at Little Lake cemetery yesterday afternoon, when the mortal remains of the late Mr. Alexander Dawson were interred. A large number of Peterborough friends attended the funeral. Messrs. Ed. and George Dawson of Vanton and Geo. Dawson, of Montreal, were present at the ceremony.

Do You Advertise in The Times?

Dr. Cook's advertisement declares that he is the discoverer of the North Pole. You have to watch the "ads." these days to get the news. By the way, do you, Mr. Merchant, advertise in The Times? There are no North Pole stories in our advertising columns. There is only good straight heart to heart business talk that will mean dollars for every cent you pay for space and printers ink!

A Social Evening.

The girls of the Frazer Mission Band of St. Paul's church, gave a social evening last night in the lecture room of that church. A choice program of vocal and instrumental music was rendered. The following ladies took part: Miss Florence Scott, Miss Laura Logan, Mrs. Perrin, Miss Bessie Logan, Miss Ida Sanderson and Mrs. Herbert Gillespie. One feature of the evening was a "guessing contest," which created much amusement.

Returns After Long Absence.

Mr. Albert M. Marshall, representative of the National Sewing Machine Co. of Belleville, Ill., was in the city yesterday. He was thirty years [illegible] Sewing Machine Co. in Peterborough and has not been in the city for twenty-five years. He is greatly impressed with the appearance of Peterborough and expresses regret at ever having left it, on account of its progressive and modern appearance.

Manager Templin Signs.

Messrs. Dan. McCabe and Walter Davidson of the local ball club have returned from Hamilton highly pleased with the success of the annual meeting of the Canadian League and with the prospects for the season. The most pleasing feature was that negotiations for the release of Manager Templin from the Berlin Club were satisfactorily concluded and the Reading, Pa. player signed a Peterborough certificate, being the first player to actually enter into a contract.

Regular Visitors Return.

Some of Peterborough's regular summer visitors have returned and are now busily engaged in housekeeping operations. The visitors referred to are locating their summer homes to the south of Victoria Park, or, to be exact, in St. John's Church grounds. Yesterday morning their vociferous family disputes, and gossiping over "yon dead horse," as they carried twigs into the pine trees, kept people in that vicinity awake from sunrise. Still, this is a slight symptom that the seemingly interminable winter may end soon.

Funds for Local Normal School.

The Supplementary Estimates of the Ontario Government contain the following: Normal School, Peterborough—To increase salaries of Department Masters, $160; Drawing Master, $40; Music Master, $50; Instructor of Manual Training, $40; Instructor of Household Science, $30; and Stenographer and Librarian, $50, a total of $370.00. For the same institution is included, painting and decorating $2,000; tool house $900; unpaid accounts, 1911, $170.64, a grand total of $3340.64. There is also an item described as "Purchase of additional property." This item has no specified sum attached.

Firemen's Mascot Has Gone.

Davey, the Fire Hall mascot, an Irish, wire-haired terrier that was purchased for the men of the brigade from Mr. Dumble, when only one month old, has passed into the sweet subsequently. Once he was seriously injured by the hose wagon and it was deemed advisable to have him destroyed. The police were summoned to shoot him, but on their arrival he had disappeared pro tem. Recently he has made trouble. His teeth seemed to have an affinity for men's trousers and clothing in general. So Davey has gone the way of all flesh, whether human or canine.

BRIGHT BARNARDO HOME PAPER.

The Times is in receipt of a bright little booklet entitled "Ups and Downs," issued by Mr. Alfred B. Owen, Canadian Manager for the Barnardo Homes. The booklet is handsomely illustrated throughout and contains an interesting account of the voyage to Canadian shores of children on the S.S. Sicilian. From a local view-point, the only disappointment is the absence of reference to Peterborough and the Margaret Cox Home.

Truth Told in a Jest.

An old saying is that "many a truth is told in a jest." This was exemplified yesterday afternoon. A Times reporter met a local lawyer, bag in hand, on his way up the hill to the Court House. The scribe naturally asked "what court is in session, to-day?" In response the barrister said, "Oh, there's no court on. A number of motions are discussed in Judge's Chambers; that's all." Our reporter, in fun asked, "I suppose these motions, or whatever they may be called, are to stick clients for bigger fees?" The counsel-learned-in-the-law, smiled and said, "I guess that's about the size of it!"

Port Hope Turns Down Hospital.

Port Hope Guide: The Counties Council turned down the bequest of $100,000 from the late John Helm for a counties hospital, an action which is considered as almost criminal. A bequest of $100,000 from the late John Helm, a property valued at $40,000 and an additional grant of $10,000 from the town of Port Hope to establish an hospital almost on the dividing line of the counties, was thrown out. As a result Toronto to receive $60,000, and the balance is equally divided between Port Hope and Cobourg. Such things might happen in China, but to actually occur in these counties seems almost incredible. It is a clear case of spite on the part of Cobourg. The throwing over of this bequest meant $20,000 cash to Cobourg, but more important than that "it would beat Port Hope out of the Hospital."

We Want Our Lakes Replenished.

The fifth annual report of the Game and Fisheries Department, for 1911, has just been received by The Times. This Government blue book displays the advance made in recent years in such classes of information. Instead of the old fashioned "dry-as-dust" statistics, this report contains many colored pictures of various game fish. One point, however, that strikes a local fisherman, and his name is Legion, is this: A detailed statement is given of the waters in this Province stocked with bass, trout, etc., but none of these Government raised game fish "fingerlings" seem to have been placed in Stoney or the connecting Kawartha Lakes. If Peterborough is to retain or increase its annual crop of summer visitors, we must have our upper lakes furnished with fish. The average summer visitor enjoys the scenery, but he wants now and then, to find something on his hook more interesting than an old shore, a rusty tomato can or even a long [illegible] weed.

LITTLE LOCAL LINES

The Property Committee met last night.

St. John's church choir held a rehearsal last night of the numbers to be given at the choral recital on Tuesday next.

Whilst the average local citizen rejoices to see the snow going, the horse attached to a heavy load, if it has "horse sense" and could speak, would cuss the heavy roads!

Ottawa authorities sent out the pleasing (?) information that the cost of living in Canada, increased three per cent. in February and still on the rise.

Kingston and Peterborough have the same rate of taxation, 22 mills. This rate, however, this year, in Peterborough includes a general tax for street watering.

Although the bright rays of the sun yesterday caused a few thousand tons of snow to trickle into the sewers, spring seems to still sit carefully in the lap of winter.

The largest and best Varnum Carpet Cleaner in the city can be rented by the day. Just the thing for Spring house cleaning. For particulars Phone No. 274.

Whilst the British navy spent $220,427,000 on its ships during the past year, it's dollars to doughnuts that the average cosmopolitan knows as much about Peterborough canoes as he does of any ship in the whole navy.

Yesterday morning at 8 o'clock, a somewhat unique sight was seen on Water street. A complete house, not a doll, or dog house, but a home for human (and possibly insect) life was being transported, at a fairly rapid rate, on a carter's sleigh.

Is it not time that the bi-lingual school question receive more general attention. The Times was yesterday in receipt of a Saskatchewan newspaper printed and edited by an Englishman. However, this paper, mainly printed in English had news from their country correspondents printed in French.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Rev. W. C. Allen, M.A., Rural Dean Millbrook, was in the city yesterday.

Mr. J. H. Davidson, of Cobourg, was in Peterborough yesterday.

Mrs. T. C. Elliott, McDonnel street will not receive again this season.

Mr. J. J. Jeffrey, of Port Hope, was in the city yesterday on business.

Mr. and Mrs. H. Orchard left for Rochester yesterday after spending a week with the former's parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. Noyes, of Concession street.

Mr. H. B. Davidson, of Port Arthur, and Mrs. E. Davidson, of Norton, Alta, were in the city yesterday for the purpose of attending the funeral of their father, the late Mr. Alex. Dawson.

Lindsay Warder: Mrs. R. McGill Hood, her son Archie, Miss Jennie Browne, Mr. R. A. Browne and Mr. C. G. Brown, were in town from Peterborough, also attending the late Mrs. Morrison's funeral, who was an aunt of the visitors.

DIED.

MACLEOD—On Tuesday, March 13, Norman Wallace Sutherland Macleod, 15 months old son of Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Macleod.

Nixon Discharged—Others Fined.

At yesterday's session of the police court, a number of liquor cases were heard. Mr. Haverson, K.C., of Toronto, represented the defence, with the exception of the case of the Palace which was looked after by Mr. G. N. Gordon. License Inspector Stewart was present, but left before the cases were concluded. The chief who had laid the complaints, conducted the prosecution.

The first case dealt with was that of a wine clerk at the Palace Hotel. He was charged with supplying liquor to Hanlon Howard, contrary to the provisions of the Indian Act. Howard belongs to the Hiawatha Reserve. The defendant pleaded guilty. He was fined $50 and costs.

The case of Bruce Lee, bartender at the Grand Hotel, who was charged with supplying liquor to a minor, was next heard.

Mr. Haverson, counsel for the defence, pleaded not guilty to the charge.

The boy in question related what occurred on the evening on which the alleged contravention of the License Act was committed. The witness, who gave his age as seventeen, entered the bar of the Grand Hotel on the evening of March 8th. Witness consumed several drinks of lager and whiskey. Bruce Lee supplied the lager. Whiskey was supplied by William Evans, another of the bartenders.

Mr. Haverson asked that the case be dismissed.

His Worship imposed a fine of $13.05 in each case of the two charges against Bruce Lee and William Evans, the two bartenders at the Grand Hotel. They were given ten days to pay it in.

ANOTHER INDIAN CASE.

Charles R. Nixon pleaded not guilty, through Mr. Haverson, to a charge of supplying liquor to one Hanlon Howard, an Indian, belonging to the Hiawatha Reserve.

The Indian testified that on Saturday last he came into the city, got drunk and, some time during the afternoon was arrested. He pleaded guilty to the charge, in the Police Court on Monday, and specified the Palace Hotel as the source from which he secured the booze.

The case against Mr. Nixon was dismissed and a fine of $5 imposed in the case of Hanlon Howard, charged with being drunk contrary to the provisions of the Indian Act.

TURN THE IDEA AROUND

A little thought will show you how vastly your own happiness depends on the way other people bear themselves towards you. The looks and tones at your breakfast table, the conduct of your fellow workers or employers, the faithful or unreliable men you deal with, what people say to you on the street, the way your cook and housemaids do their work, the letters you get, the friends or foes you meet—these things make up very much of the pleasure or misery of your day. Turn the idea around, and remember that just so much are you adding to the pleasure or the misery of other people's days. And this is the half of the matter which you can control. Whether any particular day shall bring to you more of happiness or of suffering is largely beyond your power to determine. Whether each day of your life shall give happiness or suffering rests with yourself.—Onward.

Mothers!

WILSONS INVALIDS' PORT

(A la Quina du Pérou)

possesses wonderful reconstructive qualities as a tonic and tissue builder.

Many physicians strongly urge its use for the debility which follows maternity and also for nursing mothers. It is positively free from anything of an injurious nature and can be used with perfect safety even for a small child as long as directions are followed.

You can safeguard the children against croup and colds by always keeping Wilson's Invalids' Port at hand. It is pleasant to the taste and its ingredients are of proven value for throat and lung troubles. It is wonderfully successful in the prevention of croup, whooping cough and other fatal diseases of the children.

Always have Wilson's Invalids' Port in the house. In the hour of emergency, when coughs and colds seize your child, you will be glad you have followed this advice.

Dr. J. F. MACAULAY, C.M., Grand Manan, N. B., says:
"I used "Wilson's Invalids' Port" in my own family, my wife being very weak and anaemic with no appetite, following maternity, and was highly pleased with results. I gave her in all three bottles. I have since prescribed it in about a half dozen cases. Especially beneficial is your wine in convalescence from severe La Grippe cases. I would consider it an excellent tonic wine, mild and palatable."

Proven Oil Lands
Consisting of 240 Acres, King's County,
Coalinga, California, U.S.A.

Why You Should Buy Dominion Oil Now and What We Intend to Do With Your Money

You should buy Dominion Oil because it is a first-class investment. Because it is a field where every oil perfection is to be found. Because the properties are surrounded by producing wells, some of them the greatest the world has ever known.

Because it is estimated that under every acre of California oil lands lie over five hundred thousand barrels of oil.

Because there are the world's greatest corporations buying property all around the Dominion Oil Company's land, and these same companies have many producing gushers.

Because the Directors of this Company are men whose records are above reproach.

Because to-day is the logical time to buy these shares.

Because the Dominion Oil Company has a well that is down 2480 feet in a field that is surrounded by producing wells, and may strike oil almost any week now.

Because pipe lines run through the property, thus making their wells in line for rapid shipment of oil to market.

Because the supply is hardly keeping up with the demand.

Because on all sides of their property many companies are drilling wells that will prove up all the Company's holdings and increase their value.

Because the Company's stock may be withdrawn from the market at any time.

Because this is a Canadian Company, whose charter is the best in the land.

Because oil wells require but little expense to operate and the earnings are almost all profit.

Because this Company desires to sell only 100,000 shares now, and they are Treasury Shares.

Because this is an oil company and not a stock selling one.

Because no matter what your question may be, this company can answer to your complete satisfaction.

WHY WE WANT TO SELL SOME OF THESE SHARES.

We want to push every bit of development necessary [illegible] holdings.

Because we only want to sell 10 per cent. of this Company's shares.

Because this is not a promotion scheme, but one in which the Directors of the Company have invested large sums of money.

Because this Company has gone to work and is proving its value now, with its own money, and wants to keep on doing so.

Because we would prefer to have many hundreds buy shares rather than just a few rich men.

We want to keep on selling this stock for development purposes, and then to use the money for actual payment of such bills.

Because we want to sink as many wells as possible, and just as soon as possible.

These are reasons why we want to sell. If we strike oil soon we will not have to sell more of this stock, for the production will take care of the expenditures. When this time arrives we probably will at once withdraw all offers for sale from the market.

This Company only a short time ago offered its stock for sale in a broadcast manner. The response on the part of the public was more than we expected. We are now of the opinion that we will be entirely sold out before the expiration of a brief period.

These shares are being sold to some of the most conservative and level-headed bankers and business men in this country.

There are now being offered for public subscription 100,000 shares of the Treasury Stock at 50c per share, which will leave 400,000 shares still in the treasury. It will be the aim of the Directors to maintain and keep as large a treasury balance as possible in both money and stock available to meet at all times any and all contingencies that may arise and thus effectually safeguarding the interests of all shareholders.

This is your opportunity to make good in the great oil industry of California. If you have $100.00 to invest it will pay to investigate this proposition. If you have $5000.00 you cannot afford to overlook it. Write us at once, for Illustrated Prospectus, which will give you full particulars of this sterling investment, which will be mailed to you without obligation or any expense on your part.

SATISFIED POLICY-HOLDER

(Copy)

Toronto, March 1st, 1912.

W. H. HILL, ESQ.,
Manager,
Sun Life Assurance Co.,
Peterborough, Ont.

Dear Sir,—I wish to thank the Sun Life Assurance Company, through you, for the prompt and very satisfactory settlement of my 15 year Endowment Policy, No. 64345, which matured and was paid me to-day.

I have also a 15 year Endowment maturing to-day in another leading Company.

The contrast, in the results, in favor of your Company is so marked that I want you to know it, but I am at a loss to know how such a difference could honestly occur. When I tell you that the profits in your Company are three and one-third times the profits in the other Company referred to, and this too notwithstanding I paid the other Company $1.15 per year more per $1000 than I paid you, you will realize my inability to comprehend the cause.

This is surely a tribute to the management of the Sun Life, and I am so well pleased I have applied for further insurance with you.

Incidentally, I would like to say a word for your loan privilege. As you are aware, I borrowed some money on my policy, a little over a year ago, which enabled me to obtain a substantial interest in a town site in the Northwest, and you will be pleased to learn that it has already yielded substantial gain and gives promise to pay hundreds per cent., so that it is impossible to fully realize the value of that Policy to me.

I thought as an old Peterborough boy you would be pleased to know I am delighted with the result.

Yours truly,
(Signed) ROBERT E. DOLAN.

WILL BE A GENERAL STRIKE OF ANTHRACITE COAL MINERS IN THE STATES ON THE FIRST OF APRIL

NEGOTIATIONS ARE FRUITLESS WILL STRIKE IN THREE WEEKS

Conference in New York Broke Up During Afternoon With Refusal to Accept Men's Terms

"All Negotiations With the Anthracite Coal Operators Are Off Declared John P. White, President of the United Mine Workers

Leading Coal Mine Owner Says No Progress is Being Made With Negotiations to End Cool War

New York, Mar. 15.—Reiterating demands for a recognition of the union, an increase of twenty per cent. in wages, a shorter working day and other changes, the United Mine Workers of America replied to the proposition offered them by the anthracite coal operators. The proposition is declined and no mention is made of the miners' willingness or unwillingness to compromise.

ENGLISH MINERS GROWING RESTLESS.

London, Mar. 15.—William Johnson, member of parliament for the Nuneaton Division of Warwickshire, one of the miners' leaders, was obliged to leave the conference at the Foreign Office this afternoon because he had [illegible] information that the miners in his district threatened to get out of hand as they were so discontented with the amount of the strike pay.

From many other districts come evidences of the growing desire of the miners to return to work, more particularly among the non-unionists, who are not receiving any strike pay.

Further extensive restrictions of the railroad service were put in force to-day, and the London and Northern and Great Eastern Railroad companies are having their locomotives fitted for the burning of oil as rapidly as possible in order to cope with the possibility of not obtaining a coal fuel. In many places the street lamps are no longer lighted. Even in the city of Birmingham the municipality was obliged to cut off 7,000 street lamps last night.

The shortage of coal is such that the military authorities have started troops to fell trees in Woolmer forest in order to provide fuel for the military camp at Borden in Hampshire.

SHORTAGE IN TORONTO.

"Undoubtedly there will be a shortage of coal in Toronto," declared an official of the Conger Coal Company in speaking of the Threatened strike.

"If the strike lasts the soft coal market will suffer severely and prices will be stiffened all round. We have a fair amount on hand at present."

The Milnes Coal Company are confident of handling their trade in any event. There is a great quantity held at the Suspension Bridge due to freight congestion, and this will soon be coming in.

They think the city's coal supply will last through this winter all right.

THE FRENCH LANGUAGE.

Now that there is so much controversy regarding bi-lingual schools, it seems that the Fathers of Confederation, as British subjects, made a mistake in specifying that the French language be allowed on the floor of Parliament. This, in itself might be tolerated as a sop to Quebec. However, when one sees the scores of thousands of public documents issued from day to day by the Dominion Government printed in French and distributed throughout totally English speaking communities, the expense is somewhat appalling. Not only is this expense a formidable item, but is a direct obstacle to unity of the bond of union between all the Provinces under the impelling argument of a common language.

TORE DOWN POLES OF THE TORONTO ELECTRIC LIGHT CO'Y

Toronto, Mar. 15.—The Toronto Electric Light Company not having made any application to the city for approval of the location of the eight or ten poles which it erected obtaining the necessary permission of the city, the Engineer's Department set a gang of men to work yesterday to dig the poles up again.

The company will be notified of this action and may also be billed for the cost of the work of removing the poles.

"If Toronto Electric Light Company has the right to put up poles in that way we want to know it. We must know where we stand," said Mr. G. G. Powell, Assistant City Engineer.

Victoria Lane runs off Wilton avenue, just east of Victoria street.

NO INTERFERENCE FROM COMPANY.

At an early hour this morning a gang of about a dozen men set to work to pull down the poles and by noon the only evidence that poles had been erected were eight or ten gaping holes which, by the way, the city's men were careful to cover up to avoid any possibility of an accident.

The work of uprooting the poles was completed without interference on the part of the company.

ANOTHER DEADLOCK NOW ON IN THE BRITISH STRIKE OF MINERS

London, Mar. 15.—No meeting occurred yesterday between the disputants in the coal war which is paralyzing industry throughout the British Isles and also seriously affecting trade and intercourse with all Europe.

Another deadlock has been reached in the negotiations but the Premier is strenuously endeavoring to bring the parties together again.

Representatives of both the miners and the coal owners were at the Foreign Office yesterday morning, but did not meet in conference. Premier Asquith and several of his colleagues in the Cabinet consulted with the miners, but at noon nothing had been accomplished.

Sir Hugh Bell, a leading colliery owner and iron master, said at noon "We are not getting on at all."

An agreement could be reached, it is said, in five minutes in the Federal area of England, which comprises three quarters of those concerned in the strike, if the Miners' Federation would consent to such an agreement. This may possibly yet influence the situation, as there can be no question that the feeling of discontent is growing among the miners.

SIR DONALD MANN DENIES THAT C. N. R. PURCHASED PROPERTY

A Toronto dispatch says, "Sir Donald Mann has denied purchasing property, as alleged for the C.N.R."

The above denial was in reference to a report published yesterday that the C.N.R. was obtaining the block from Toronto to Church streets and from King to Court.

"We have not considered our new building yet," said Sir Donald. "We own this building we are in and the property from King to Court streets. About the new building, I don't know yet."

Messrs. Davidson and McCrea have secured, it is said, all but two of the remaining lots in the block to Church street.

MR. ARTHUR HAWKES OBJECTS TO IMMIGRATION CONDITIONS

Montreal, Mar. 15.—That Canada cannot afford to be represented in Great Britain by real estate schemes was the statement made here yesterday morning by Mr. Arthur Hawkes of Toronto, Special Immigration Commissioner, who has returned from England, and is here to hand in his report to the Government. It will go to the Minister of the Interior on Monday, and may be considered this session.

Correcting the rumor that had gone abroad that he had thrashed an immigration agent at Liverpool with his fists, Mr. Hawke explained the man was offering work in this country as a reward for the purchase of Western real estate.

"The incident should be a warning to Canada that she cannot afford to be represented in Britain by men of that stamp," said Mr. Hawkes. "I found too much of that kind of thing going on over there, and it is injuring the country's reputation."

MR. CROTHERS IS CONSULTED RE CUT IN WAGES OF G.T.R. MEN

Ottawa, Mar. 15.—A conference was held here yesterday between Hon T. W. Crothers, Minister of Labor, and representatives of the railway unions, in regard to the recent action of the Grand Trunk in slashing the pay of certain classes of the company's employees, more particularly branch lines and local runs. The railway men were represented by Jas. S. Murdock, vice-president of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, and Samuel Berry, president of the Brotherhood of Railway Conductors.

The situation was talked over and it was decided that the representatives of the men should go to Montreal to corner with the officials of the company. As the company is not likely to voluntarily go back on its recent action, the Department of Labor is almost certain to be asked to appoint a board to inquire into the dispute under the Industrial Disputes Act.

LOCAL WITNESSES LEAVING TO TESTIFY AT BREEN DIVORCE

The Times has been given to understand that two or three local residents leave this week for New York to give evidence in the Breen divorce case. It will be remembered that Mr. Breen, coachman and trainer for Hon. J. R. Stratton, a few years ago married a daughter of Mr. Richard Croker, former Tammany Boss of New York. A suit for divorce was begun. Judgment was given and an appeal was the consequence. The coming trial is to be held on Monday, March 18th.

The people of Peterborough will be glad to note that our city holds a place in the Scout movement, and should take an interest in encouraging the boys. His Honour Judge Huycke, and Mr. J. H. THE CHURCH UNION VOTE IN PORT HOPE

The vote on Church Union in St. Paul's Church, Port Hope, was very small, and the result was a majority of 15 against the Union. The vote was as follows: Elders for 3; against, 5; members for, 49; against, 57; adherents for, 3; against, 8.

LINDSAY FIREMEN GET RAISE IN WAGES

The members of the Lindsay Fire Brigade have been given an increase of $25 each in pay. If any public servants deserve recognition, and the funds of a municipality will permit of it, the first public employees to receive recognition are firemen and police. Both do work that the average citizen hears little about, unless he or his immediate friends are concerned, and both risk life and limb in the public welfare.

DIRIGIBLE BALLOONS FIRST USED IN WAR

A despatch from Tripoli says: For the first time in history a big dirigible balloon has been used for scouting purposes by the Italian army in actual warfare. The great airship floated far out over the desert and the aviators were able to get a good view of the Arab's position. When the dirigible left camp the warships in the harbor fired a salute. Afterward a second dirigible was sent up and the two, working in unison, sailed over the enemy's camp at Zansur, dropping bombs en route. It is reported that many were killed and injured by the explosives.

GIRL GETS A MILLION AND LARGE ANNUITY

New York, Mar. 15.—Miss Margaret Cameron, ward of the late Edward Hawley, whose real name is Emma Sturges, has been deeded by the financier's heirs $1,000,000 and allowing a life income of $25,000 a year according to a statement made to-day by John B. Stanchfield, attorney for the heirs.

Settlement was made, Mr. Stanchfield said, in accordance with a letter written by Mr. Hawley some time before his death, requesting that generous provision for Miss Cameron whom he sometimes introduced as his niece, be made.

Announcement also was made that the Hawley heirs have agreed upon a ten year trusteeship for the estate. This trusteeship will not include the part deeded to Miss Cameron, which consists of Mr. Hawley's city house.

GERMAN WARSHIPS TO BE TRANSFERRED

A despatch from Berlin says: The Taeglich Rundschau announces that a cruiser fleet of six small ships and four Dreadnoughts are to be transferred in April from Kiel to Wilhemshafen, and will be permanently stationed in the North Sea. The journal explained that the transfer has nothing to to with Anglo-German relations, declaring that Germany is only following England's lead.

BRITISH LION GROWLS OVER ALLEGED AID TO THE REBELS

United States Government Accused by Capitalists of Fomenting the Rebellion

New York, March 15.—The United States Government is receiving strong protests from representative Mexicans against the interference of United States citizens in the Mexican political information. These protests are reinforced by remonstrances from British and other foreign capitalists having important interests in Mexico.

FURNISHING REBELS WITH SUPPLIES.

The complaint is that the rebel forces are continually furnished with supplies from the United States by way of El Paso on the Texas border. It is maintained that but for these supplies the rebels would have to lay down their arms.

But for this extraneous aid drawn from American sources President Madero would long since have established order. As it is the nation is kept in perpetual turmoil, and much resentment is felt against the unwarranted outside influences which are responsible. Should the Mexicans as a people conclude that the United States has designs against them, the Government and rebel forces would join hands to resist the foreigner.

SOME MORE LEMONS

Handed Out by The Catholic Register of Toronto.

It is Hicks, not Hincks, they are trying for exaggeration in Cobourg, and therefore the quality of justice is not strained to such an extent.

• • •

Rev. C. O. Johnston, the Dr. Cook who "discovered" the bogus Jesuit Oath, has accepted a call to Hamilton, Ont. And after Hamilton, Coboconk!

• • •

"Home rule is an excellent thing for Ontario and the other Provinces of Canada in which Protestants and Catholics live side by side. Why should it be a bad thing for Ireland?" Asks the Globe, and its friend Hocken is dumb as an oyster.

• • •

The new tug which was named after Mayor Geary is built on the narrow-gauge plan and will be run by orangeade and Belfast ginger ale. It is a vessel of very deep draught but not of greater pulling power, except with the fodgey.

• • •

[illegible] land are not all Ireland, or even all Ulster; nor are the Orangemen of Toronto (even with Mayor Geary thrown in, ears and all) entitled to speak for all Canada. The Windsor Record truly observes "What license has a crowd of Orangemen in Toronto to claim a monopoly on this loyalty business? Is a man who happens to favor Home Rule any less loyal for doing so? Has it reached a pass in this country where a man who believes in local autonomy and civil and religious liberty must be classed as disloyal for holding such opinions? No, not by a jugful. Toronto just likes to have the rest of the country laugh at her once in a while." And soon the spectacle will be too disgusting even for laughter.

• • •

"By and by we may reach in Canada that happy stage when the bride and groom can line up in front of a nickle-in-the-slot machine and embark upon the matrimonial sea by a mere turn of the handle. It would be the crowning triumph of what is known as "civil marriage."

• • •

Mr. William Maclean, M. P., owner and managing editor of the Toronto World, declares that the Catholics of Canada are no more entitled to matrimonial privileges than are the Mormons. He further lets it be understood that he will have a Federal marriage law, even if he be forced to discontinue the weekly Mormon pastoral, which decorates the columns of the Sunday World at so much per. "Our own Billy" would be a great statesman, if he could be only kept from talking and writing.

MILLIONAIRE'S SON IN A RUNAWAY MATCH

Palm Beach, Mar. 15.—Roy E. Pierce, son of Henry Clay Pierce, the Standard Oil magnate, whose home is in New York, eloped last night with his step-sister, Miss Virginia Burroughs. Pierce is about 24 years old and his bride is a couple of years his senior. The groom, since coming to Palm Beach a month ago, had a former marriage with Mrs. Irving Chapman, a Boston actress, declared void. His runaway match very much upset his father, who had brought about the annulment of the former union, and thereby paid Mrs. Chapman $100,000.

ARMED AUTOMATON TO FIGHT BURGLARS

New York, Mar. 15.—Edward J. Gaynor, testifying to-day before a Sheriff's jury in proceedings called to [illegible] Haslett, the elderly Brooklyn recluse said that Haslett was in constant fear of burglars and that to protect himself he erected on the stairway in his home, an automaton in whose mailed hand there was a sharp sword. "With springs and devices, he meant to lower the sword if an intruder came up the stairs." said the witness. "He had a string attached to the affair and ran this string up two flights of stairs to his bedroom."

Gaynor added, that the old man insisted on an elaborate code of signals before he would admit him to the house.

Los Angeles, Cal., March 15.—J. B. McNamara, who is serving a life sentence in the San Quentin Penitentiary, is dying from tuberculosis, and J. J. WE Want YOU To Read About GROUARD

The First City, Gateway and Commercial Centre of the Great

PEACE RIVER COUNTRY

Situated at the west end of Lesser Slave Lake controlling the entrance to the rich and fertile Lands of the great Peace River District. This is not a subdivision of a proposed townsite but part of an established town, first settlement and distributing centre of the Peace River Country

"I can forsee a very great future for Grouard"—a statement made by a party recently returned from there.

Farm lands and farming made Winnipeg, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Brandon, so you can imagine the future for GROUARD with forty million acres of the richest farm lands in the world behind it. The Peace River Country, at no great distant date, will be the home of a million prosperous farmers. Think of the business that will be done at GROUARD—the entrance and distributing center situated as it will be with rail and steamboat transportation. Hundreds of settlers are now going into the rich districts around GROUARD, now outfitting, trading and buying goods at GROUARD.

Read all of This Page

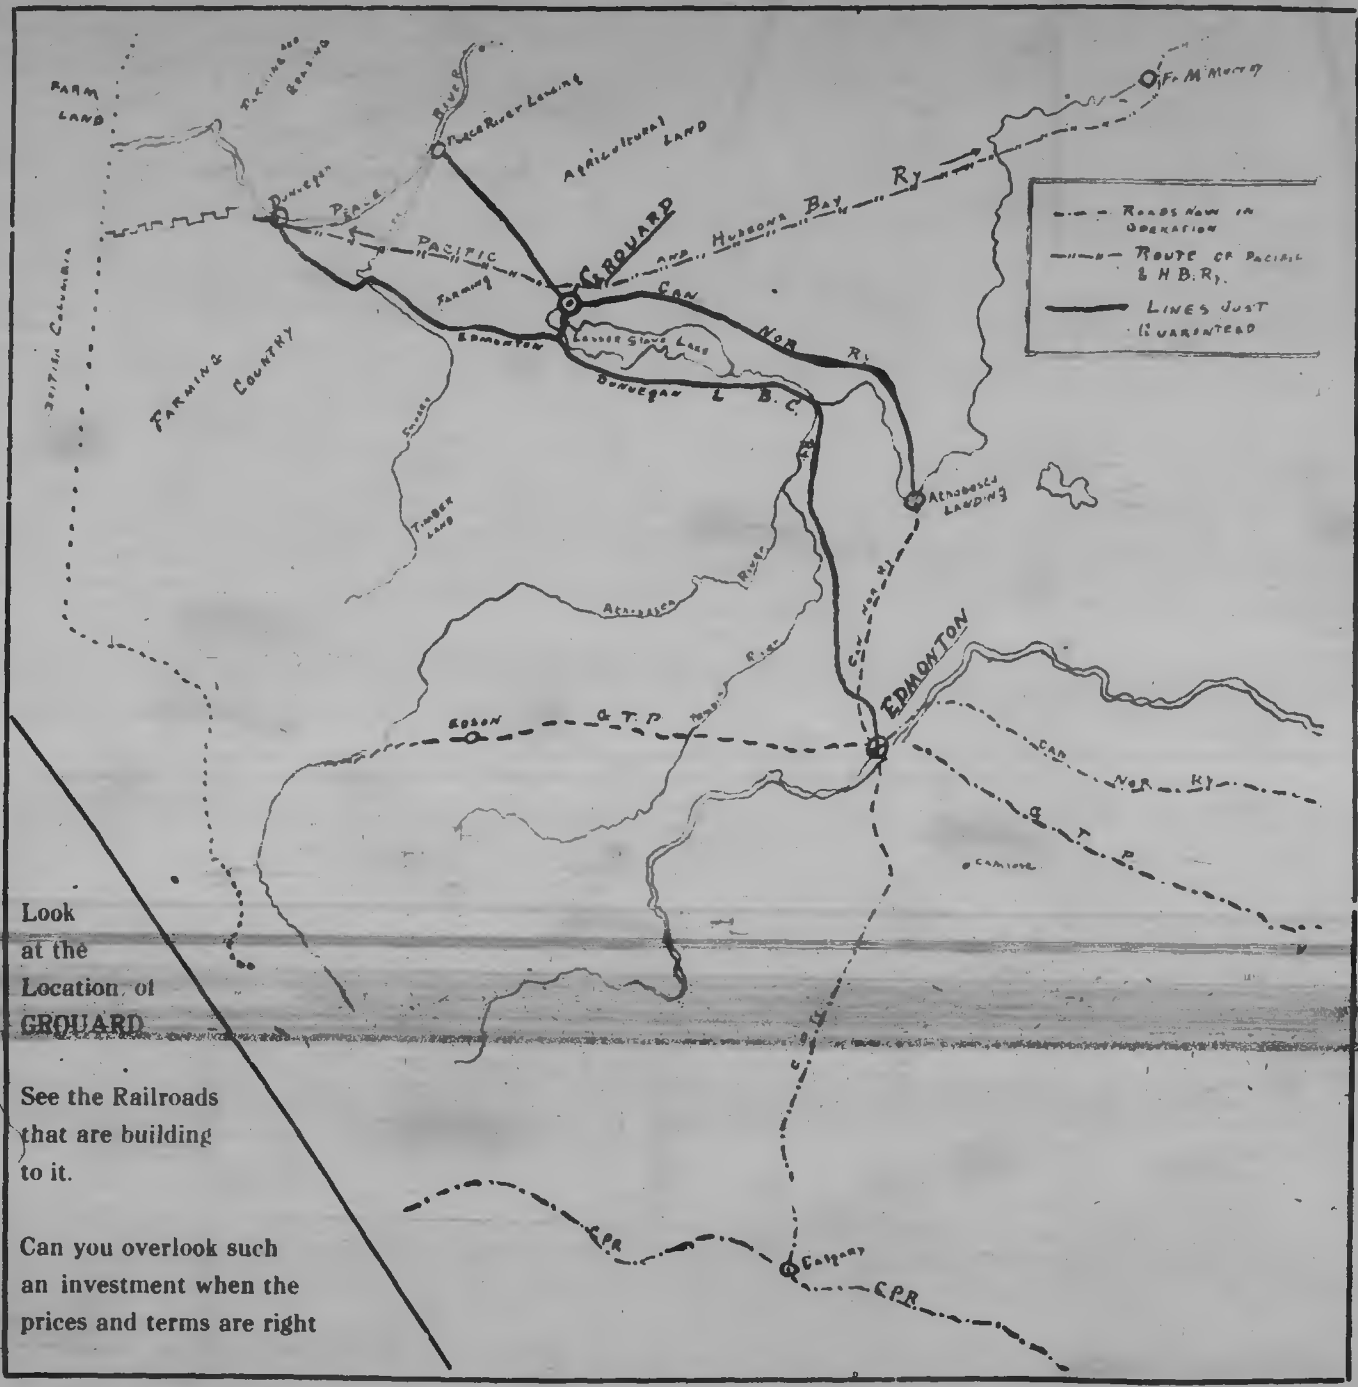
GROUARD is the place for the business man, capitalist, professional man, investor or farmer.

This is not a proposed townsite, but an established town of years standing.

Now that the Wonderful Peace River farming country has become the most prominent feature of the present time, and the settlers are pouring into that district, GROUARD has attained an importance as to location and possibilities never before attained by any town.

GROUARD IS ESTABLISHED—has a post office, stores, churches, government telegraph, telephone system, weather bureau, doctors, shops, saw mill, government land office for the far famed Peace River district, general stores of the Hudson's Bay Company, and the large firm of Revillon Bros., the Peace River Trading and Land Company, also the Bank of Commerce and Royal Bank have established branches there, with other banks to follow. You know banks do not go into a town, city or country where there is no business, or where the business will not increase. Follow the banks and you can never lose.

BUY LOTS IN GROUARD and WATCH THEM ADVANCE IN VALUE



Look at the Location of GROUARD

See the Railroads that are building to it.

Can you overlook such an investment when the prices and terms are right

GROUARD is the natural gateway to the Peace River country, containing 10,000,000 acres of good agricultural land.

GROUARD will be the trade distributing point for all the country of which it holds the key position.

GROUARD is the natural shipping point for the great cattle trade that will accrue to this Peace River country.

GROUARD is rich in the surrounding varied natural resources, and its property fulfils every requirement for safe and profitable investment.

GROUARD is the head of a waterway of approximately 3,000 miles of lake and river transportation.

GROUARD is so important that three railroads are heading towards it and building is being done as fast as man can do it.

GROUARD is so important that banks have already established there, and more are making ready to follow.

GROUARD has as its foundation the products and revenue that will accrue from millions of acres of the best agricultural land in Canada.

GROUARD will "stand up" under the most rigid investigation as to its resources and possibilities.

GROUARD is backed up by "THE GOLD MEDAL WHEAT DISTRICT OF THE WORLD.

GROUARD will be larger in a couple of years than most of the townsites that have been placed on the market for the last ten years, because it has something substantial behind it.

GROUARD is what we say it is and more too.

GROUARD is the place you cannot afford to overlook in your investments, and it will make money for you.

YOU are now having placed before you the first opportunity to invest in THE City of the Peace River District, backed up by the greatest area of the best agricultural land in Canada.

Three railways are heading towards Grouard. What other new towns or cities can point to such transportation advantages right at the start as this? Think of it: three railroads, making this a divisional point, also water transportation. Would these roads build there if Grouard was not going to be one of the most important points in Western Canada? This fact alone is sufficient to convince you this investment is one of merit.

The Canadian Northern Railway is already at Athabasca Landing east of Grouard and property bought at that point a year ago for from $100 to $300 per lot is now selling at from $1000 to $1500 per lot.

Government Guarantee Railroads

Great Railroads make Great Cities

That is an accepted fact—it is indisputable. The whole history of America proves it. Now, the man who thinks of making an investment, if he is shrewd and far-seeing and anxious to safeguard his money in every way possible, will consider, not only the activity to be caused by the railway, but will consider the surrounding country, what it is, and what it will produce. Look at the key map above, and trace the Canadian Northern Railway from Edmonton to Athabasca Landing and ON TO GOURARD. This is one of the lines that is now being built. The road is already in operation to Athabasca Landing and construction from there west to Grouard is uder way. The Alberta Government within the last three weeks GUARANTEED THE NECESSARY BONDS FOR THE CONSTRUCTION of this road, thus making it absolute, and under such guarantee, must be in operation within a certain time.

LOOK AGAIN, and trace the line of the Edmonton-Dunvegan and British Columbia Railway. You will see Grouard on its line. The bonds for the construction of this line WERE ALSO GUARANTEED within the last three weeks, by the Alberta Government. Construction is now starting, and goes on with all possible speed. This line connects with the Grand Trunk Pacific at Edmonton.

Would the Government guarantee bonds for the construction of these railways if the country they were entering was not good? Would they go to Grouard if it was not important?

Railway Terminous on This Property

Again, trace the line of the Pacific and Hudsons Bay Railway which runs from the Pacific Coast in British Columbia, directly east to Fort Churchill on the Hudsons Bay. This road is being built by English capital. You will see this road runs through Grouard, and further the owners of this property have entered into an agreement with this railway, turning over to it some fifty acres of the property we are offering you, and the railway company have agreed to make their Grouard terminals consisting of station, freight sheds, and all other buildings, yards, etc., right on this property. This ensures the terminals for Grouard of the Pacific and Hudsons Bay railway right on our property.

Further, the main street of this commercial centre property runs down to the deep water frontage of the Lake, which is the head of an immense water transportation mileage, and we are turning over to the Town of Grouard sufficient water frontage for municipal owned docks and wharves.

Lots that sold in Athabasca Landing (look on map) a year ago at $200 to $350 are now being sold to-day from $1000 to $1500 each. Why? Because the railroad has just reached there, and they are wanted; the same thing will occur in Grouard shortly.

Your success in life, if you are a working man, depends largely on how you save and invest the few pennies, that you now throw away carelessly; if you are an employer how you invest your dividends, your surplus money.

Trace back the real big fortunes of this or any other country and you'll find they started from real estate. The wealth of the country to-day is real estate.

Land—the "backbone of to-day's business. The land or property owner is the king among men. If you are tired of working on the dead level "get-no-where" of city life, if you are held down by the man "higher-up" or if you have surplus money to invest buy property; become an owner of real estate in a growing community, in a place where the property is and will be wanted for business purposes, and above all in a city or town backed up by an agricultural district and the railroads.

We offer you the opportunity. Save 17 or 30c a day, make your first step towards independence—a protection for your family, a sound investment.

We know that every lot in Grouard will be taken up in sixty days. Our sub-division is not large. Is part of the town.

We are sure if you knew what we know about Grouard and the Peace River Country you would not hesitate a single minute.

You are dealing with the right kind of people; ask the Quebec Bank at Vancouver, or the Bank of Hamilton, Winnipeg, or Bradstreets who we are. YOU ARE DEALING WITH A CLEAN CUT PROPOSITION. Ask the Board of Trade at Grouard, or the Managers of the Bank of Commerce, or Royal Bank at Grouard what it is.

You have read this bulletin, we have told you the story, it is now entirely up to you.

Are you going to let 17 or 30c a day stand between you and success.

Be an owner of property in Canada's coming great Peace River City.

Act to-day.

DAIRY HINTS

A cow should be at her best from five to seven years of age.

Harsh treatment, dogging and abuse invariably decreases the milk supply.

Whey [illegible] of fresh is worth seven cents per one hundred pounds as a food.

There is not a first-class cheese or a pound of [illegible] butter made from inferior milk.

Milk [illegible] wet hands is a menace to good [illegible] and [illegible] can never be kept clean.

Stagnant water or filth of any kind in the pasture or vicinity of stables will taint the milk.

Too high temperature causes the butter to come in lumps of a soft nature instead of in form granular kernels.

There is no reason why farm butter should not be as valuable as the best creamery butter if made under right conditions.

Pure milk can be obtained only through healthy cows, pure feed, pure water, pure air, and sanitary methods of handling.

A coating of whitewash on the stable walls is of inestimable value to the health of the cows and the purity of the milk supply.

A silo is absolutely necessary to the economic production of milk on a large scale. Thousands of successful dairymen have proved this. It is no longer an experiment.

Salt should always be available to cows. Its use increases the digestibility of the food, the amount of water consumed, and hence the flow of milk is increased also.—Canadian Farm.

How to Be Miserable

If you wish to be miserable, think about yourself, about what you want, what you like, what respect people ought to pay you; and then to you nothing will be pure. You will spoil everything you touch, you will make misery for yourself out of everything which God sends you; you will be as wretched as you choose.—Charles Kingsley.

LUNCH-ROOMS FOR WOMEN

Lunch-rooms for women employes are rapidly growing in popularity in every up-to-date factory. A short time ago this was looked upon as an unnecessary luxury, but the progressive employer of to-day realizes the advantage gained by considering the comfort and health of his employes, and a bright, clean lunch-room is a stimulus to a higher standard of service and loyalty.

ANCIENT BULLION

Portion of Soudan Treasure Trove for Ontario Museum

Charles T. Currelley, director of the new museum of Toronto University, has received word that a good sample of the treasure trove of royal bullion, brought to light recently by Professor Garstang, of Liverpool University, England, in the course of his excavations at the ancient City of Meroe, in the Soudan, Africa, which existed about the time of Christ, was on its way to the museum. The bullion belonged to the ancient kings. Mr. Currelley related the very interesting circumstances associated with this sensational find. "Shortly after the time of Christ," he said, "the Soudan had a sudden burst of energy and greatness that those who have followed the Mahdi and Khalifa in recent times can understand, at least, to some extent. The great centre of this period was the town of Meroe, in the Soudan. Here great monuments were built and work was done that is surprisingly skilful and beautiful, though, of course, it is impossible to say how much of it was actually done by the Etheopians, or the Soudanese themselves, or how far it was the result of imported slave or free labor from Northern Africa, or, in fact, from anywhere on the Mediterranean. For some time Professor Garstang, of Liverpool, has been carrying on most sucessful excavations at Meroe, and last year the Royal Ontario Museum received, through the kindness of Mr. Robert Mond, of London, England, who is partially financing the expedition, some exquisite pieces of the ceramics of this period. This last winter Professor Garstang discovered the ancient treasure house of the Kings of Meroe, and there was still in the place a quantity of the royal bullion in gold nuggets, dust, etc., to the value of many thousands of dollars. It is probable that this new gift of a portion of bullion is also through the kindness of Mr. Mond.

"One is apt to speculate as to what happened to that ancient Minister of Finance and to the whole staff of clerical and manual helpers, or in any way why a large mass of such portable treasure should have been left for nearly 2,000 years. At any rate, we are very glad that a part of it will find a home in Toronto"

Mr. Currelley added that the records of ancient history threw very little light on the existence of the City of Meroe. There is a script at the ancient site of the once great city, and two men have been working on it, but so far have not been able to make head or tail out of it.

ECONOMY OF GOOD ROADS

The Cost of Haulage is Enormously Decreased

The value of good roads becomes evident when we look at the financial side of the problem. The cost of hauling one ton one mile is nine cents [illegible] the United States; the difference is largely one of road bed. If we apply these figures to hauling, say, 5,000 bushels of wheat five miles, the cost in Europe would be $67.50, in the United States $187.50, or $120 more. It will be safe to say that where 5,000 bushels of wheat is raised, as much more hauling will be done which would represent another $120, or $240, the extra outlay caused by poor roads. This is only one item. Good roads increase the value of the land—$5 an acre is putting it too low, but at that it amounts to $1,600 for a half section—then the convenience and the ability to market at any time, so that advantage can be taken of the highest prices. The man in town realizes the value of good roads, and he gets them. He paves the sidewalks and streets. He knows that they will increase his business, his comforts and social advantages, but no more so than in the country for the farmer.—North Dakota Agricultural College.

THE HIGHEST DIGNITY

There joined the police force of London a young Scotchman but recently arrived from his native land. Being detailed one day to block the traffic on a certain thoroughfare where members of royalty were expected to pass, he was accosted by a lady hurrying to keep an appointment who thrust her head from the carriage window to remonstrate with him over the delay. "I canna let you pass, ma'am," answered the man of the baton. "But, sir, do you know who I am. I am the wife of a Cabinet Minister." "It diana mak no difference, ma'am," he answered. "I couldn'a let you pass if you were the wife of a Presbyterian minister."—Presbyterian Standard.

A PECULIAR HYBRID

What has been aptly described as a hybrid between a needle and a frog has been grown by two eminent French scientists, M. Bataillon and M. Henneguy. The eggs of a frog have been fertilized purely by a mechanical stimulus, pricking them with a fine platinum or glass needle. The needle has been as remarkable in its effects as Aaron's rod, for the eggs have on being placed in sterilized water, developed into tadpoles just as though a male frog had fathered them into existence.

PLEA FOR BOYS IN OUR HOMES

Foster and Develop the Love of Home Which Often Lies Dormant in Boys' Hearts

It is deplorable that all mothers cannot be made to realize how important the atmosphere of a boy's room becomes to him as he grows from boyhood into manhood. They seem to think that anything is good enough for the boys, providing it is dark enough not to show dirt, and sufficiently substantial to stand the wear and tear to which it will be subjected.

Sometimes the furnishings are not even selected for those admirable qualities, but are taken haphazard from the leftovers as occasion seems to demand, and the consequence is that boys are brought up with the idea that their own room is the one place in the home that is utterly void of that personal touch which goes so far toward making "atmosphere." This thought remains permanently fixed in their minds as one of the disagreeable features of their boyhood.

Boys should have an opportunity to exercise their own judgment and taste to a certain extent, because they can always be guided by a tactful mother in order to avoid any glaring blunders, and this would undoubtedly afford great opportunities for the development of any special ideas or natural aptness they may have in decorating and furnishing that would be a great benefit to them in later years.

So many young men seem to be so utterly devoid of any artistic ideas in regard to decoration or furnishing, and possess only a crude conception of what constitutes good taste in such matters. Generally speaking, that phase of a boy's education is greatly neglected. If his surroundings are all that they should be, then his difficulties in that direction are materially lessened. If the circumstances are not so favorable, however, no amount of time or trouble would be wasted in trying to develop their ideas along those lines. They are quite likely to have pronounced ideas in regard to colors and grouping, and, as they grow older, if not corrected, it generally takes the form of a love for brilliant colors, glitter and gauds, and all the impossible combinations that appeal to the uneducated taste.

Many times one sees a young married couple trying to adjust their widely divergent ideas in regard to the furnishing and decorating of their home. This difficulty would have been avoided if the same attention had been paid to the boy's education in furnishing and decorating during his formative years, as has been given to the girl's as a matter of course. Encourage your boys to make a study of good pictures.

Never go into a boy's room and change the position of any articles of furniture to suit your own ideas without first having a consultation with the occupant of the room. There is nothing one can do which will produce a [illegible] of insecurity in regard to one's goods and chattels, than this habit which is so strong in some mothers. Let the boy have the feeling that that particular spot is his own inviolate place, where he is small master of all he surveys. Nearly all boys will respond to the feeling of responsibility by an increased manliness and interest in their home life and the proper care of their furnishings.

If it is at all possible, provide a small iron cot in place of a bed. This should be covered with denim or some of the inexpensive cotton stuffs, and, with several prettily covered pillows thrown carelessly around, the result is always pleasing to the boy.

Let us do anything and everything we can to foster and develop the love of home, which very often lies dormant in our boys' hearts. And at the same time we should cultivate their artistic sense in every possible way, while we are educating them in all the cardinal virtues. It is only by giving them a sense of proprietorship in their homes that we may be able to exert the necessary influences over their future lives that is the fondest desire of parents.

Give the boy his own place of refuge, teach him to keep it tasteful and tidy, and this responsibility will engender habits of neatness that will last him all his life. When mother goes to see her boy, let her always tap at the door and ask if she may come in. This little courtesy will teach him that he is also a full-fledged member of the family, with his own interests and privileges, and the result will be the making of a very satisfactory man.—Charlotte Wharton Ayres.

THE VALUE OF LOVE

It Forgives Wrongs Again and Again and Then Again

If you always think sweet thoughts and dwell on love, then you need never fear anything in this world. Begin to practise love. Love will prevent you from making foes whose evil influences may bar your way in life. Love is the key to success, the royal road into the hearts of all. If you want to get on in the world, learn to be good-tempered and to love. If you "get on" without love, you will never really know what happiness is. Make your resolution to-day. "I will not be easily offended, nor proud, nor conceited. I will never actively resent bad treatment, but I will endeavor to be gentle and patient, and try to do good to those who wrong me." Love is patient, gracious, long suffering, and forgives wrongs again and again.

NEED OF FRESH AIR

The need of fresh air in the home should not be forgotten. This is not meant to apply merely in a physical sense. Widen the interests of the family by reading, by visiting with your neighbors, by taking a trip, if possible, to one of the great cities. Fill the home with fresh air, and fill the life with fresh interest.

STATUE OF THE KING

Mr. Arthur Rogers, A.R.C.A., is now engaged upon the creation of a colossal bronze statue of King George V. This, mounted upon a lofty pedestal, will stand at the summit of the main steps leading to the grounds of the Crystal Palace; thus his Majesty will seem to be always overlooking the Festival of the Empire. The King will be represented wearing his Coronation robes, and holding his sceptre in his hand. The sculptor was a prominent pupil at the Manchester School of Arts.

RICH ADORNMENTS

Toronto Women Are Said to Wear About $3,000,000 Worth

The Trader and Canadian Jeweller says that $3,000,000 represents the investment of Torontonians in gold and jewelled adornments. There is a lady in Toronto, the paper says, who owns a necklace worth $25,000. It is not astonishingly gorgeous to look at. The same lady has the finest collection of gems in Toronto, but it is the most valuable ornament in the city, the total value of which is estimated at between $125,000 and $150,000. It includes various sets of ornaments and one ring, set with a ruby and two diamonds, worth $2,000. Not half a dozen pieces in the collection are of diamonds only. The husband of this lady has a rare collection of jewels himself, including a pearl tie-pin and a set of diamond-studded cuff-links worth $6,000. At least half a dozen Toronto ladies have jewellery worth from $50,000 to $60,000. Continuing with the pearl necklaces, we find that few are owned between the range of the two already mentioned and those worth $5,000—not more than half a dozen. These are valued at about $10,000 apiece. Five thousand dollar pearl necklaces are owned by from twenty to twenty-five society women, and $1,000 necklets of the same gems are quite numerous. With the latter we come to the younger set of Toronto's Four Hundred. Wealthy men here apparently think nothing of presenting their daughters with ornaments of this price, for the $1,000 pearl necklaces number fully fifty, as many of these being owned by maids as matrons. Below this price these ornaments are not popular with the fastidious wealthy. However, about one hundred pearl necklaces worth between $1,000 and $500—most of them costing nearer the latter figure.

Most Toronto women who buy necklaces—the most popular of all ornaments—that are worth less than $1,000, go in for diamonds. The diamond necklaces are nearly all of the festoon pattern, and they are very brilliant, their settings adding materially to their display. About two hundred and fifty of these, ranging in cost from $750 to $3,500, are worn in Toronto, most of them being worth something nearer the former sum than the latter. One lady has a diamond necklace which cost $8,000. It is not a festoon, but a single string of stones, and is the most valuable necklace of the fascinating, sparkling gems in the city. The most costly all-diamond ornament of any kind worn in Toronto is owned by the wife of a millionaire prominent in society. It is a magnificent corsage piece, and is reputed to be worth $12,000.

THE MORNING TIMES

SATURDAY, MARCH 16, 1912.

MUST WATCH OTTAWA.

The Nationalist party in Canadian politics is aggrieved, and probably with reason, against the Nationalist members of the Cabinet who refused to vote as directed upon the Keewatin boundary question, and great public meetings are being held in Montreal and elsewhere, when Messrs. Bourassa, Lavergne, and others, will deliver addresses showing how the Ministers referred to have been untrue to their pledges. The Nationalists hope that enough political energy will be developed during the campaign to compel the three Cabinet members to resign. To those outside of Quebec the movement appears to be both weak and foolish, and there seems to be scarcely a possibility of its achieving the result aimed at. But it is much easier to arouse racial and creedal prejudices than to allay them, and the Nationalist movement can be viewed only with regret by patriotic Canadians. The arraying of French against English and Roman Catholics against Protestants is not a thing to be viewed with unconcern, and in an empire which is British cannot result in any good to French-speaking citizens. But it will undoubtedly, and necessarily, cause all English-speaking Protestants to keep close watch upon Ottawa, lest by any possibility political considerations should cause the Government to yield in any degree to the Nationalist demands. Already the change of name in certain post offices in Ontario from English to French has aroused considerable hostile comment and is not viewed very favorably by many English-speaking citizens. The Government cannot afford to cater to the Nationalist spirit.

BACK TO THE LAND.

A Lindsay citizen remarked a few days ago, "If you want to get rich, get back to the land." The "raison d'etre" of this remark is the present awful price of potatoes. The humble, but nourishing "Irish apple" now sells at prices reminding one of smuggled diamond necklaces. Just consider! Potatoes at $1.75 to $2.00 a bag! One possible factor in this extravagant price is just a wee extra percentage of profit demanded by the farmers of the present day. The agriculturists, than whom there is not a freer, more independent, and more honorable class in the business life of the world, now demand things as necessities, that, a few years ago, they would have regarded as extravagant and Utopian luxuries. The farmer of to-day does not, as he did when eggs were 5 cents to 10 cents and chickens 20 cents a pair, come into town behind a pair of lowing oxen. No! "Buck" and "Brisco" have long since passed into money paid for beef. Now-a-days, the average farmer drives into the city in a stylish, up-to-date vehicle, drawn by a $350 to $500 team of horses. His lady relatives and friends have the very latest thing in fashionable clothing, "rats" (or whatever the name is for the latest hair improver is?) under a $20.00 hat. Now, there is no blame, but all credit due to the progressive farmer for his ambition and enterprise. He shows the advantage of school and farm education. But, who is paying for it? Is not the young man who prefers to enter a factory and work all his life for wages, as much of his life as is any use to his employer, instead of, as we prefaced this article "getting back to the land?" There are thousands of young men, many of them admittedly ly wage, and in too many cases the indifferent mechanics, who for the week nightly pool room or show, might take up land and get rich. It is not intimated that every farmer gets rich. Still, on one side of the scale of probability put the future of the average mechanic. On the other side of the same scale put the same man, with the same intelligence and interest in his work. Take both men, if they live, at the age of seventy. Right here is another point for passing thought: Which is most likely to attain three score and ten? The man living in confined quarters, breathing in, daily, iron or grain particles, flying from the machines, or the man who turns out every morning in [illegible] growing grain yellowing to a golden harvest? To resume. At the age of 70 which man, under present prices and conditions is most likely to have himself and leave his family comfortably situated, as far as this world's goods go?

Editorial Notes

Those four desperate convicts, who tried to escape at Toronto, whilst en route to Kingston penitentiary, upon their arrival there probably received as pleasing a welcome as the "active partisan," on the other side of the political fence gets from the elected supporter of the Government.

That the Provincial Legislature is in dead earnest regarding a strict censure of the kind of films shown, or to be shown at the moving picture houses is assured by their appropriation in the supplementary estimates, as follows: Board of Censors of Moving Pictures—Salaries, $1,000.00; rent, operators, etc., $1,000.00; film stamps, $2,000.00; contingencies, $1,000.00.

As quite a number of local citizens, every fall, go to New Ontario after deer and moose, it is of interest to note that the local Legislature has amended the game laws relating to that part of the Province as follows: "The close season in the Districts of Thunder Bay, Fort William, Rainy River and Kenora shall be from the first of May to the first of March following."

That the Borden Government does not, as is claimed by some of its opponents, take an interest in the manufacturers to the exclusion of the farming community is again proved. A Saskatchewan dispatch says that because a number of districts in the West have been so badly affected by frost last fall that the oats are unfit for seed, the government had men out scouring the country to get good seed oats to supply the districts affected. The Government has secured 10,000 bushels of American Banner oats at a good price.

By the recently revised Municipal Act, where a municipal corporation has heretofore guaranteed or shall hereafter guarantee the payment of the principal or interest of any bonds or debentures and default is made in payment of the principal or interest of the bonds or debentures by the person primarily liable therefor the council of such corporation may agree with any bank or person for temporary advances to meet the amount of such default in any one year pending the collection of the amount of such default by a general rate on all the rateable property in the municipality.

The Ontario Government is considering a bill, whereby boys under 15 years of age, will be debarred from entering or loitering in pool rooms. In this city one can see callow youths, cigarette in mouth, breathing out vulgar, and, too often, blasphemous language, in the local pool rooms. Such boys cannot, in common sense and reason, afford the [illegible] an hour, charged for playing pool or billiards. Who pays the bill? The new act forbids, under heavy penalties, any billiard or pool room proprietor allowing boys under 18 years of age to either play or remain in such places.

ESKIMOS SEEK HIGHEST PRICES

The Northern Huskies are No Longer Giving Things Away, and Demand Top Money

A lady tourist who was making a collection of native curios at Fort McPherson, the most northerly fur-trading post in Canada, had provided herself before leaving civilization with a small outfit of beads, needles, etc., in the hope of bartering them to good advantage with the aboriginals. Seeing some ivory carvings in a "husky" tent this lady intimated that she wished to acquire them, and offered in exchange first a few packages of needles, and then some beads, both of which were inspected and decorously handed back to her with a shake of the head.

After some talking the Esquimaux said her would sell for a pipe and some tobacco. This looked easy, as the curios were cheap at $6 to $7, and the lady went to the Hudson Bay Company's store and bought $1 worth of tobacco and a 50 cent pipe. These were handed to the "husky," who courteously looked them over, and then handing the pipe back remarked: "Tobacco good, pipe no good.' The upshot was that the lady had to invest $5 in a pipe to obtain the coveted curios.

The most sought for articles of Esquimaux manufacture is the ivory cribbage board, made out of a walrus tusk. These make both useful articles and handsome ornaments. The sides and ends are usually covered with carvings of wild animals, such as walruses, whales, foxes, wolves, etc., and the work is in many cases extremely well executed.

A few years ago these cribbage boards could be bought for a comparatively trivial sum, but now, owing to a number of tourists having paid absurd figures for them, the price has mounted to an almost prohibitive figure; from $50 to $100 being asked for almost any specimen, while for an unusually well-carved board an Esquimaux will not accept less than $125. Other interesting articles produced by the "huskies" are bead and shell earrings, soapstone candlesticks, sealing spears, ivory fishhooks and sinkers, and patchwork mats manufactured from a mixture of splices of wild goat, seal and deerskins sewn together in a regular and not unbeautiful pattern.

The trade with the Eskimo is conducted on somewhat different lines to that with the Indians. For a number of years past whaling schooners hailing from San Francisco have made their winter quarters at Herschel Island, so as to be ready to commence hunting these valuable mammals as soon as open water appears. Their crews have dealt largely with the Eskimos in furs and curios, paying small prices and in return selling them flour, bacon, tea, etc., for considerably less than the mere cost of transporting such articles into the country by the McKenzie River route. However, the schooner owners, finding that but little of the profit accruing from the transactions found its way into their pockets, have largely put a stop to the carrying of goods for trading purposes.

As a result a considerable number of the Eskimo make their way by first open water from Herschel Island and the country east of the McKenzie River delta to the trading posts on the lower river. On arrival they barter their furs for whatever pleases them, and then something special—a sewing machine, steam tug, or what not—catches a husky's eye, and he at once wishes to purchase it. If it is not for sale he at once orders one like it to be brought in next year. This the trader interested agrees to accomplish, and the question of price then comes up. Now the price is not put to the native in dollars, as that would not involve a sufficiently remunerative transaction. Instead the trader says—in taking an order for a phonograph, for instance, "You must bring me five lynx skins, twenty white foxes, and two mink." "Very good," replies the husky, and the deal is closed. He arrives at the post the following summer with the pelts called for, and he is an angry man if his phonograph has not turned up.

A short time ago an Eskimo purchased a steam tug, which he is now an adept in operating, and was charged therefor 100 white foxes, two No. 1 silver foxes, thirty lynx and fifty mink. As the vessel cost but $1,200 at the [illegible], the transaction was [illegible] profitable.

I remember a Boston foreman who said to me, when I told him I was leaving for Chicago, 'Well, I suppose you will get a job out there, but remember, boy, a rolling stone gathers no moss.' 'Moss, sir, I replied, 'is for ruins.'" is the price at which lots in Oakland Park, Winnipeg, may now be purchased. This price cannot be duplicated in Winnipeg, for quality of offering. Oakland is within three and one-half miles of the city hall. It is in the line of fastest growth. It is only one or two years from incorporation in the city limits. These lots, that are now offered at from $100 to $350 each, depending upon location, will be worth, in my opinion, based upon ten years' experience as a successful real estate operator in Winnipeg, more than double this price in two years' time

DRUG STORES ON SHIPS

As a result of representations made by the General Shipowners' Society, London, the Board of Trade is now reconsidering the scale of medicines prescribed for use on board ships. It has been found that many of the drugs which vessels are compelled to carry are never used, while others which should form part of the medical equipment of every ship, are omitted. With a view to assisting the Board of Trade to arrive at a decision on the subject medical officers of the leading steamship lines have formulated a modern list of supplies which there is reason to believe will be adopted. In drawing this up regard has been had to faster passages now made by steamers as compared with the days of sailing ships, when the existing scale was prescribed.

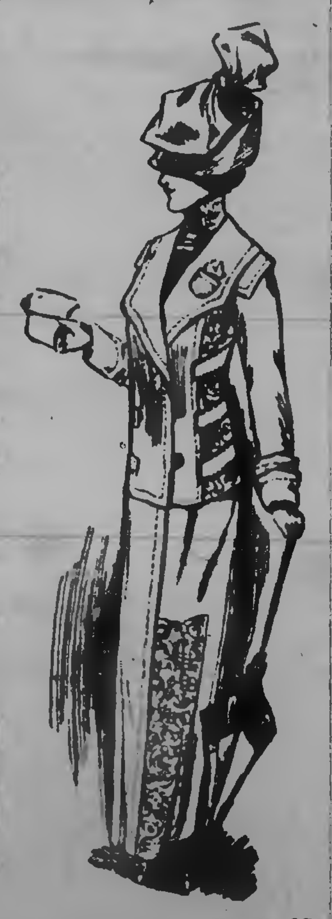
NEW YORK CENTRAL LINES



SMART COOL LINEN AND LACE SUIT

The new linen suits are unusually attractive with their smart, short coats and narrow skirts. The linen model illustrated to-day shows linen lace introduced in a most attractive way on both coat and skirt. The straps of linen on the coat connect the two sections and take away the effect of patching that would result if the underarm section was just a plain inset of lace. The skirt is in one piece and in habit-back style. The double effect on collar and cuffs is new and smart. The pale coral color of the linen forms a pleasing contrast to the linen-colored lace. The hat is a French model and developed in ecru straw, faced and trimmed with coral colored velvet.

Nasal Discharge Proves Catarrah is Active

THE PURE BALSAMIC ESSENCES OF CATARRHOZONE AFFORD SUREST AND QUICKEST CURE.

Catarrhozone is certain to cure because its healing vapor is carried with the breath direct to the seat of the chest, nose or throat trouble. Being composed of the purest balsams and pine essences, it immediately allays irritations, facilitates the ejection of mucous, soothes and stimulates the lungs and bronchial tubes. The marvel of the age in curing winter ills—that's what thousands say about Catarrhozone. There is nothing so sure to cure, and to those in fear of changeable weather—those who easily catch cold—those who work among lung-chilling surroundings, or where dust, impure air, fog, or damp can affect them—let them get Catarrhozone and use it several times daily—it will cure every time.

BAD CASE CURED IN TWO DAYS.

"I was unfortunate enough to catch a bad cold from sitting in a draught in my bare head," writes Miss Nora E. Jemieson, well known in Sangre Grande, Td. "An acute condition of catarrh developed in my nostrils, and for three days my eyes and nose ran most copiously. The usual remedies entirely failed to relieve. I read in the Mirror newspaper about Catarrhozone, and sent to Smith Bros.' drug store for a dollar outfit. In two days Catarrhozone cleared out my nostrils, cured the sneezing, coughing, and all traces of catarrh."

Large size Catarrhozone, sufficient for two months' use, guaranteed, price $1.00; smaller sizes 25c and 50c. Beware of imitations, and substitutors, and insist on getting "Catarrhozone" only. By mail from the Catarrhozone Company, Buffalo, N. Y., and Kingston, Ont.

A BACHELOR'S DOWRY

M. Vassalleff, a St. Petersburg millionaire, bequeathed his whole fortune to provide poor engaged couples with the means of getting married and setting up in a comfortable home of their own. In his will he explained that his relations were rich enough already without any of his money; therefore he left them none. But that he wished to enable poor girls to marry. "The reason that so many beautiful women never get a husband is solely because the young men of the present day have no self-respect. They do not look for beauty, but for money, when they seek a wife," said he. "I love all women, especially those who have to work for their living, and that is why I want to help them to get married, for I consider a single life is the saddest thing on earth."

MAKING HENS LAY

Prof. Elford Tells What a Quebec Woman Has Done

Prof. F. Elford, Macdonald College Quebec, says: For the future of the poultry industry we must look to the farmer. No. 100-acre farm should be without 100 hens. These 100 hens should yield at least $300 a year. I have no sympathy with the man who says poultry does not pay when he gives his fowl no care whatever.

As a sample of what poultry can be made to yield, I will tell you what Mrs. Shepherd, a lady living near Montreal, has done. From a flock of 40 hens she has a revenue of $300 a year. She keeps a good uniform lot of pure bred hens. She makes a specialty of winter eggs and gets the best price for a fancy article. In the spring she sells eggs for hatching. Her cockerels are sold for breeding purposes. She changes her hens every year, believing that pullets make the best winter layers.

When I was a boy on a farm in Huron county, Ontario, the poultry were considered a bother and were left to the women folk. Then, hens were not expected to lay in the winter. On that farm to-day there is one of the finest poultry plants in Ontario. About $1,500 worth of poultry produced was marketed last year. This affords some idea of the possibilities in the poultry industry.

THE PRODUCTION OF EGGS

Some Good Hints on Getting the Hens to Work

Along about December it is more than probable that fresh eggs will be in fairly active demand, and will, if the experiences of other years be any guide, continue so during winter. Of course everyone who keeps hens wants to profit by this condition, but the difficulty is in getting the hens started to lay. Early pullets are seldom depended upon to produce all the eggs, and the idleness of the older hens is excusable on account of their moulting at a time when the market for eggs is strong is one of the features of poultry-keeping that needs remedying. The intensive operator meets the difficulty by compelling the hens to moult in late summer, and thus gets the flock down to business early in the fall. To accomplish this he reduces the feed allowance to the minimum for a week or ten days, and also limits the range for exercise. At the end of th[illegible] the birds are quickly brought back to full feed, which has the effect of causing them to shed their feathers, after which laying soon begins. The [illegible] is so simple and has proved so effective that it is well worth trying, even where only a f[illegible]

THE CLEVER INDIAN

How He Made Himself Numerous and Effected His Escape

A member of the Canadian Mounted Police tells a good story of the cleverness of an Indian. One snowy morning a band of Crees awoke to find that about a dozen of their ponies had been stolen during the night. Pursuit was immediately organized, and in the course of an hour the trail was struck. The band followed it for thirty miles or more, till it entered a river, and headed for a little wooded island.

Smoke was rising from the trees, and an opening, apparently the mouth of a cave, was in plain view. Presently a Piegan Indian showed himself in front of the opening. He was in warpaint, and at his heels was a dog.

Pretty soon the dog scented the Crees, who were lying low, and began growling and barking. The Piegan looked up, glanced about him a moment, and then instantly entered the cave. In about ten seconds another Piegan came around the rocks and also went in; then another, and another, and another. The Crees lay silently in the bushes, counting, till upwards of fifty Piegans had come around the rocks and gone into the cave, and still they kept coming. Each carried a rifle.

When at last seventy men had disappeared in the cave, the superstitious and cautious Crees concluded that the evil spirit had something to do with it. So thoroughly were they filled with this idea, that even when reinforcements arrived, which was in a few hours, they were reluctant to attack the island.

That night, however, one Cree, less credulous than the others, crossed over the ice to investigate. On approaching the supposed cave, he found that it was no cave at all, but simply an opening leading some ten feet into the rock, where it made a turn and came out on the other side.

There was the remnants of a single camp-fire, the ponies were gone, and not an Indian was in sight. The clever Piegan thief, by making the circuit of the passage and the end of the island seventy times, had so deceived his pursuers as to gain the time necessary for his escape.

KING'S CREAM HORSES

Interesting Facts About the Famous Hanover Creams

Of all the King's horses that find a home at the Royal Mews at Buckingham Palace, the most interesting, perhaps, are the "Hanoverian creams."

The first creams to come to England were brought from Hanover by King George I, and the strain has remained pure and unbroken ever since. The beauty of the creams lies in their magnificent manes and tails, otherwise [illegible] thick-set and sturdy-looking [illegible] Hanover, these horses were used as draught horses, but these English descendants of theirs are very pampered creatures.

Every day they are exercised on the soft tan of the Royal riding-school, but except on State occasions they have no real work to do.

There are eleven cream-colored horses at the Royal Mews.

Their training begins when they are four years old, and about a year after that they are ready to be harnessed to the State coach. Their coats are polished till they shine like satin and their manes and tails are carefully brushed and braided with blue ribbon.

The trappings of the creams are a mass of crimson Russia leather and brass, and weigh 126 pounds to each horse; and it takes two grooms to lift each set of harness and set it upon their backs.

GET RID OF USELESS HENS

Hens that have been laying for two seasons should be got rid of as soon as they cease laying, and, if possible, before they begin to moult. When they once have commenced to drop their feathers they rapidly lose flesh and are of little value for eating. The cocks should be separated from the hens at this time. They are fierce and spiteful when moulting, especially ill treating some of the hens at feeding-time. The cocks will take longer than the hens to grow their new feathers, particularly the sickles. The poultry must have access to shelter during rainy weather. A thorough soaking may do much mischief. Sometimes when a fowl is thick in the moult it will be seen constantly pecking at one special place on its body. This may be caused by one or more of the new feathers failing to pass through the skin and causing [illegible] irritation. If a needle is passed under the covered end of the feather it [illegible] enable it to be drawn above the [illegible]

DECIDED BY THE SNAKES.

Have you ever been to the Isle of Man? If so, you will know that it takes a steamship three hours to get there from England, for the isle has water all round it, and it is just about half-way between England and Ireland.

Long ago, before anyone went there for a holiday, some men once began to quarrel about the Isle of Man. Some of them said it belonged to England and others said it belonged to Ireland.

At last one of the men said, "Let us bring some snakes to the isle, and then we shall know. For if they live, the isle must belong to England; if they die, the isle must belong to Ireland."

You will remember, of course, that good St. Patrick killed all the snakes in Ireland, so if the Isle of Man really belonged to Ireland, the snakes that the men were going to take there would soon die, for good St. Patrick said that there would never be any more snakes in Ireland.

Well, the men got some snakes, and they carried them to the Isle of Man, and there they kept them to see what would happen. And after they had watched them for ever so long they saw that, instead of the snakes all dying, they got bigger and bigger, and fatter and fatter!

Indeed, it seemed as if the air of the Isle of Man was doing the snakes as much good as it does to boys and girls who go there! So the men who had said that the isle was English now said, "You see, we were right after all."

I think they must have taken the snakes away again, though, for when I was in the Isle of Man a little while ago I never saw even one, and a big policeman whom I asked said he had never seen one either!

POPULATION OF UNITED STATES

An Increase of 21 Per Cent. in the Last Ten Years

The population of the United States last year, according to the census, was 91,972,266. The following table shows the growth of the neighboring Republic during recent years:—

1910	91,972,266	30.89	21.0 p. c.
1900	[illegible]	25.11	[illegible] p. c.

1860	31,443,099	10.89	35.6 p. c.

*Rate of increase over [illegible]

Thus the increase of continental United States during fifty years was 193.5 per cent. It is evident that the most rapid growth in population was during the decade from 1850 to 1860, which shows an increase of 35.6 per cent.—Monetary Times.

Extremity and Opportunity

Mr. Bryce, Ambassador at Washington, heard with satisfaction the news about the abolition of birching at Eton. "I am afraid," he says, "that some of the masters of Eton have hitherto believed too strongly in the theory that a pupil's extremity is a teacher's opportunity."

EVEN HEADACHES ARE QUICKLY CURED

WHEN YOU CURE THE KIDNEYS WITH DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS.

The Cured Kidneys Strain all Impurities Out of the Blood and the Result is Good Health All Over the Body.

STORNOWAY, Compton Co., Que., March 15.—(Special)—The number of different ailments that Dodd's Kidney Pills have cured would be a cause of constant surprise were it not for the explanation that Dodd's Kidney Pills cure the kidneys, and as everybody knows the kidneys are the point from which disease starts, or good health is assured.

If the kidneys are right all impurities will be strained out of the blood. If the kidneys are not right the impurities remain in the blood to rot, and the blood carries the poison to all parts of the body.

David Bourque, of this place, states: "For headaches there is nothing to compare with Dodd's Kidney Pills. They have relieved me of all pain."

Strong healthy people are not bothered with headaches. It is weak rundown people who suffer from them. And in nine cases out of nine the weakness comes from impure blood, caused by disordered kidneys. Dodd's Kidney Pills cure headaches, backaches, rheumatism, lumbago, and similar diseases by curing the kidneys. Cured kidneys make good health all over the body.

OLD PAPERS USEFUL

Moths Kept Away by Printers' Ink—Other Household Uses

The mere fact that moths cannot read is no reason why they should detest newspapers, but they do, nevertheless. It isn't exactly the newspaper or it's editorial policy that moths dislike. It is the ink used in the printing that makes the moths stay away. That is why, in the absence of moth-proof bags and cedar chests, some housewives pack away their furs and woollens wrapped in newspapers at the end of the winter season and find that is a satisfactory way of preserving them against the ravages of moths. There is nothing better than old newspapers for use under the carpets for the same reason.

Old newspapers have many other uses as well. Wetted in water, they serve to clean grates splendidly. Crushed newspapers are excellent to clean lamp chimneys. Newspapers dipped in lamp-oil are useful for cleaning windows. Laundry irons not much soiled can be rubbed on old newspapers and thus made fit for use. Dipped in lamp-oil, they are splendid to rub the outside of the dish-pan. They keep it bright and shining. Torn in shreds, slightly dampened, and scattered over the carpet, they keep down dust when sweeping. They clean the sink of its grease and sediment; nothing is better, for the greasy paper can be at once burned after use.

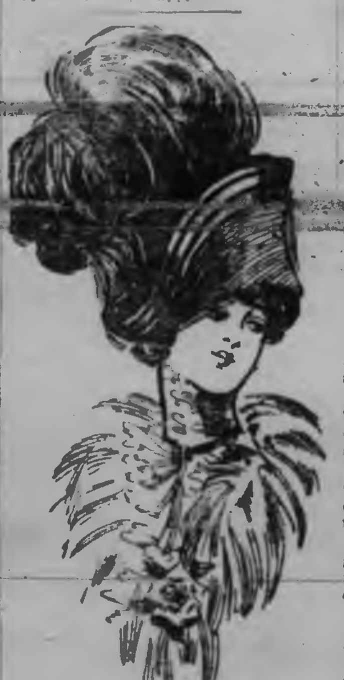
Many times folded newspapers will serve as a mat to stand hot and blackened pots or kettles on and save soiling the kitchen table. The kitchen stove is kept bright after the cooking [illegible] with old papers, and this [illegible] polishings. If the worst come to the worst you can even read some of these old newspapers. Many of them are quite interesting.

FOR MARRIED COUPLES

Is Their Dwelling a House or a Home?

Jealousy is the destruction of love. Love, to be true and noble, must be capable of welcoming every happiness befalling its object, no matter what or through whom it is bestowed. Jealousy is not love, nor has it any part or place connected with love.

Married couples should ask themselves whether they have a home—or is it a house—four walls where you sleep and eat? Married couples, make your home a real home. Share each other's friends; share each other's happiness and sorrows. That is the way to be truly happy.



A FRENCH MODEL

The French model shown in illustration is very pleasing and is developed in black crin, with blue and black stripes about the sharply upturned brim. The trimming consists solely of shaded blue and black feathers. The same model is shown in cerise and black, and is strikingly handsome.

Substitutes for Soap

Some families get through such a quantity of soap that doubtless they will be glad to hear of a few hints for saving in this item. For rough cleaning, soft soap is a saving of nearly one half. The best way to keep soap hard is to cut it in pieces, and store it in a dry place. Two ounces of pearl ash used with a pound of soap makes the soap go much farther. A little pipeclay dissolved in the water, or rubbed with the soap on the clothes, will do the washing with half the labor and a quarter of the soap. Pipeclay makes hard water nearly as soft as rain water.

Easily-Made Bread

Mix a small teaspoonful of brown sugar with half an ounce of fresh German yeast, and dissolve it in a breakfast-cup of warm water. In a dry earthenwere pan put three pounds of flour, a teaspoonful of salt, and a pint and a half of water. Make a hole in the centre of the flour, pour in the dissolved yeast, stirring with a wooden spoon. Set the pan near the fire, cover with a flannel, and leave it until the centre of the flour bubbles up. Then knead lightly, and leave again to rise. When risen, cut the dough into two pieces, put into tins, and bake in a hot oven for about an hour.

Stale Cakes

A good way of using up stale cakes is to cut them into small pieces, put them in a pie-dish, and pour over a custard made with two tablespoonfuls of custard-powder and a pint of milk, sweetened to taste. When cold, this makes a nice dish for tea.

Manager Templin Signs.

Messrs. Dan. McCabe and Walter Davidson of the local ball club have returned from Hamilton highly pleased with the success of the annual meeting of the Canadian League and with the prospects for the season. The most pleasing feature was that negotiations for the release of Manager Templin from the Berlin Club were satisfactorily concluded and the Reading, Pa. player signed a Peterborough certificate, being the first player to actually enter into a contract.

YOUNG THOUGH OLD

Maxims Which Will Help You to Carry Youth Into Age

Expect a good long, useful life.

Hold your thoughts persistently.

Simply refuse to grow old by counting your years or anticipating old age.

Refrain from all kinds of stimulants and sedatives; they will shorten your life.

One of the best preventatives of old age is enthusiasm and interest in affairs of the day.

Keep in the sunlight; nothing beautiful or sweet grows or ripens in the darkness.

Avoid fear in all its varied forms of expression; it is the greatest enemy of the human race.

Nature is the great rejuvenator; her spirit is ever young. Live with her; study her; love her.

Avoid excesses of all kinds; they are injurious. The long life must be a temperate, regular life.

Contemplate beauty in all its forms, and you will drive everything that is ugly out of your life.

Keep mental cobwebs, dust and brain ashes brushed off by frequent trips to the country, or by travel.

Don't allow yourself to think on your birthday that you are a year older, and so much nearer the end.

Never look on the dark side; take sunny views of everything; a sunny thought drives away the shadows.

Be a child; live simply and naturally, and keep clear of entangling alliances and complications of all kinds.

Cultivate the spirit of contentment; all discontentment and dissatisfaction bring age-furrows prematurely to the face.

Keep your mind young by fresh, vigorous thinking, and your heart sound by cultivating a cheerful, optimistic disposition.

Don't live to eat, but eat to live. Many of our ills are due to overeating, to eating wrong things, and to irregular eating.

Don't be too ambitious; the canker of an overvaulting ambition has eaten up the happiness of many a life and shortened its years.

Throw aside your dignity, and romp and play with children; make them love you by loving them, and you will add years to your life.

Think beautiful thoughts—harmony thoughts, beauty thoughts, truth thoughts, thoughts of innocence, of youth, of love, and of kindness.

SEA SERPENT COMES ASHORE

Peculiar Find Off the Coast of Vancouver Island

The skeleton of a sea serpent recently washed ashore on Catala Island, off Vancouver Island coast, was brought to Seattle to be prepared for shipment to the Smithsonian Institute Museum. The denizen of the deep seas had been dead but a short time. If real live specimens of this species of semi-fish and semi-serpent are still inhabitants of the North Pacific, Herbert Webb and party from the Washington State University will attempt to find them.

Captain J. T. Walbran, of the United States revenue service, saw the strange creature through his glass and went ashore in a small boat. The skeleton is sixteen feet long and twelve inches in diameter. The eyes are still in their sockets and are as large as apples. The top of the head was still covered with coarse brown hair. The teeth, about an inch long, are like miniature saws, and are hinged where they attach to the jaw-bone, thus enabling them to work cross-wise after the manner of scissors. The skeleton is one of the most remarkable ever found on the Pacific coast, and is a specimen of a rare and strange sea monster. Chinamen at Seattle state that on the coast of South China smaller, but similar, fish are seen during the season when typhoons are prevalent.

Firemen's Mascot Has Gone.

Davey, the Fire Hall mascot, an Irish, wire-haired terrier that was purchased for the men of the brigade from Mr. Dumble, when only one month old, has passed into the sweet subsequently. Once he was seriously injured by the hose wagon and it was deemed adviseable to have him destroyed. The police were summoned to shoot him, but on their arrival he had disappeared pro tem. Recently he has made trouble. His teeth seemed to have an affinity for men's trousers and clothing in general. So Davey has gone the way of all flesh, whether human or canine.

FUTURE OF GEOGRAPHY

Traveller of the Future Should be a Trained Topographer

Major Leonard Darwin, the President of the Geographical Society, says that in looking to the future it is important to inquire, not how their past history would then be regarded, but rather how the society would be able to maintain its reputation and its usefulness in the new conditions of geographical knowledge. It was true that the South Pole was as yet uncaptured, that the map of Arabia was still largely composed of great blank spaces, and that the bend of the Brahmaputra was drawn by guesswork in their atlases. But it was probable that all those problems would be solved before long, and where then would be the field in which the explorer might hope to win renown in robbing the unknown of its romance? They must sooner or later face the fact that the work by which the society had become best known in the past represented an almost finished chapter in geographical history, and to that condition of things the society would have to adapt itself. In view of the changing conditions, they ought, no doubt, to direct their efforts with more persistence than heretofore in the direction of encouraging travellers to make systematic and detailed examinations of camparatively small areas, and not merely to cover long distances with the result of doing little more than to confirm the impressions of previous explorers. The traveller of the future ought to be a trained topographer, or to have thoroughly prepared himself in advance for some definite class of investigation, if he wished to win their praises."

JAPANESE COMMANDMENTS

A Salutary and Natural Code of the Orientals

There can be no doubt that the majority of these Japanese rules are nearer scientific exactitude than the rules of Moses or the ordinary practice of modern English life. Here are the Japanese commandments:

A LONG WAIT

It is Mr. Arnold Daly, the famous American actor who recently made such a hit in "Arms and the Man" at the Criterion, who tells this story. He attended a dinner some time ago at which a lady who had risen from obscurity to fame on the stage told of how, one morning when unknown, she had called at Mr. Frohman's office in New York. She approached a particularly lordly office-boy and humbly inquired if Mr. Frohman were in. "He's not in," replied the boy, putting his feet on the desk. "Then I'll wait," she said, and seated herself in a chair. After an hour's wait she became weary, and ventured to make a second attack on the office-boy. "Will he be in soon?" she inquired. "I don't know," was the reply. "Will he be in to-day?" she persisted. "Not likely. He's in Europe!" At this point Mr. Daly sat up and took notice. "Were you that girl?" he asked. "Indeed, yes. Why?" Said Mr. Daly, "I was the office-boy."

LOVE SEEKS ASSURANCE

V. J. Warren, Calgary.

Too well, dear heart, too well you answer me!
Why do I ask to have you put in words
That which no human language can express?
Speech of the gods alone can compass that,
Which lifts us to the gods and lets us taste
Of heaven's bliss

Ah, yes! I know what next you would reply.
Have I not read it in your sad, soft eyes—
Those heavenly windows of an angel's soul?
Have I not felt it in your warm caress,
Your clinging arms and sweet, red lips?
Do I not know?

Ah, yes!—even as the morning knows the sun!
The dew-kissed rosebud feels the same as I.
And shares a common secret with the world
I know, and yet, ah yet, dear heart,
My ears are deaf, until I hear you say,
"I love you"

A "FAITHFUL HENCHMAN"

Romantic to a degree has been the career of Mr. Jesse Collings, upon whom Birmingham has decided to confer the honorary freedom of that city. He was born in a Devonshire cottage, and knew what it was to struggle on the pitiful wages of an agricultural laborer before he made his mark. Nobody is so ready as he to tell how he went to Birmingham with a solitary five-pound note in his pocket and started to carve out fame and fortune as a junior clerk in a firm of hardware merchants. Then he interested himself in social reforms and politics, and made the acquaintance of Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, whose "faithful henchman," to quote the political description, he has been for many past years.

Regular Visitors Return.

Some of Peterborough's regular summer visitors have returned and are now busily engaged in housekeeping operations. The visitors referred to are heating their summer homes to the south of Victoria Park, or, to be exact, in St. John's Church grounds. Yesterday morning their vociferous family disputes, and gossiping over "yon dead horse," as they carried twigs into the pine trees, kept people in that vicinity awake from sunrise. Still, this is a slight symptom that the seemingly interminable winter may end soon.

POULTRY NOTES

Proper Buildings—Hints as to Fattening—Quality of Food

While substantially built and hygienically constructed sheds are very requisite for poultry, whether young stock or laying hens, says a writer in The Glasgow Herald, it is a mistake to go to the other extreme, as many are in the habit of doing, and provide elaborate and costly houses. If fowls are to prove profitable, the greatest economy is necessary in all branches of the work, and if a large capital is invested in appliances, it means that there is less likelihood of there being a balance upon the right side at the end of the financial year. Of course, there is such a thing as false economy, but the intelligent reader will, without difficulty, be able to distinguish between the two. I once saw a poultry-house in the United States that had cost over $10,000 to erect, although it possessed accommodation for only five hundred birds. A large portion of the wood consisted of mahogany, while some of the inside fittings were of solid brass. The owner was an extremely wealthy lady, who, apparently, was quite indifferent whether her fowls proved profitable or not, so that in this instance the waste of money (for it can be called by no other name) was a small matter. I have, however, on many occasions, seen houses that were far too costly, upon places, moreover, where it was of great importance to make the poultry pay. So long as the general principles are right, the simpler the house is the better, and it is infinitely preferable to spend the money upon really good stock birds than upon costly and elaborate appliances.

What Fattening Means

The term fattening is an unfortunate one, and is very liable to convey an entirely mistaken meaning. The thing to be guarded against most strenuously in preparing fowls for the table is the addition of fat to the carcase; rather is it the aim to add on flesh. A "fat" bird is always disagreeable as well as wasteful, whereas a "fattened" bird is pleasing, and though apparently a more expensive dish, is really more economical. The American word "finishing" and the French "ripening" are both much more suitable. The artificial feeding of poultry is no modern invention, because for upwards of 4,000 years have fowls been crammed. In the second book of Kings reference is made there to crammed fowls, while later we find that among the dishes for King Solomon's table there were included fatted chickens.

One Value of Geese

No kind of poultry benefit the land so much as do geese, and it is surprising how, in the space of a few years the herbage will be improved. For this very reason, however, geese should not be confined or kept upon very small areas, as they so quickly taint the ground, making it unsuitable for other stock. I have come across many cases in which the rearing and fattening of geese in close quarters has been tried, but I know of no case in which this has been attended with success. Geese require an abundance of room in which to grow and develop well, and thus the industry is especially suitable for farmers. There are thousands upon thousands of acres in this country, yielding no profit whatever at the present time, that could be turned to excellent account for maintaining large flocks of geese without disturbing any other farm operations.

The Cause of Slow Growth

A comparatively common cause of slow growth and impaired vitality is that the brooder or chicken-house is overcrowded. It is quite impossible for chickens which are closely housed to remain strong and healthy, since the constant breathing of impure, vitiated air is bound to affect them injuriously. Many of the brooders that are offered for sale, and that are advertised as capable of accommodating a hundred chickens, cannot comfortably hold more than fifty or sixty. In fact, I have always found it a good plan to just halve the number of chickens that a brooder is advertised to hold. A hundred may be kept therein quite comfortably for the first week or ten days, but after this time they are seriously overcrowded. Plenty of exercise is an essential factor in successful rearing, and, apart from the fact that the air becomes foul in an overcrowded brooder, or house, there is insufficient space for the chickens to run about in comfort. Particularly must no overcrowding be allowed when the dry method of feeding is adopted.

Natural v. Artificial Food

There can be no two opinions among experienced poultry men as to which is the better kind of food, natural or artificial, as not only do the fowls thrive better upon the former, but the food bill is greatly reduced. Natural food may consist of grit, worms, insects, and seeds, with which, though hardly a food, lime may be included. All of these are extremely beneficial. It must be remembered, therefore, that natural foods should always be supplied in preference to artificial, however good the latter may be. This is one of the reasons why I have so constantly advocated the employment of portable houses.

DAWN IN THE FOREST

Edith Willis Linn.

Like a grey nun across the eastern hills
The dawn creeps slowly, in her hand a star.
The forest stirs to greet her, faint and far
Pulses the music that the vastness fills
In cloistered columns stands the pine that shrills
Beneath her breath, while like some gate ajar,
That shadows and the silence [illegible]
The night swings backward as the new day wills
Above the murmur of dim forest [illegible]
Rises a paean—music's very own
Clear as the pealing of a convent [illegible]
So glad, so sweet—like love lost [illegible] outgrown
The forest-loving songsters' matin Trains
In silvery tones repeating, 'All is well!'

COURTING A VOICE

Telephone Girl Pursued by Lover Who Finally Married Her

A romantic story of the courtship and marriage of a telephone girl comes from St. Louis, where Mr. William McCalpin married Miss Viola Kortkemp, a young lady employed at the St. Louis telephone exchange. The marriage was the result of a courtship induced by the sweet voice of Miss Viola.

Mr. McCalpin, who is one of the managers of the Waters Pierce Oil Company, a subsidiary of the Standard Oil Trust, whilst telephoning from his office was fascinated by the voice that answered his call, and after several unnecessary calls, for the purpose of listening to the enchanting voice, he introduced himself and asked to be allowed to visit her and "get acquainted." Miss Kortkemp was taken aback by such "rapid" methods, and invariably "rung off" when her admirer persisted, and at length, to escape the chaff of her fellow operators, she obtained her transference to another exchange. Not to be beaten, her admirer set himself to hunt her down, and after a lapse of over two years he was successful.

Calling up a client on the telephone, he heard the long-sought voice from the exchange. He did not waste any time, for in response to the request, "Number, please," he said, "I am William McCalpin. Don't move. I am coming out to get you, and I am coming right away." The sweet, but astonished voice asked for enlightenment, and Mr. McCalpin repeated his former proposal. Persistence of this sort was bound to impress the lady, and after a moment's consideration the voice gave her name and address and permission for her admirer to call upon her father for an orthodox introduction.

Mr. McCalpin immediately went to see the father, who was the chief of the fire brigade of University City, and he consented to introduce Mr. McCalpin, with the happiest results. The "Voice" was quite up to expectations, and the oil man gave an equally good impression. He insisted upon immediate marriage, as he declared that he had been courting her for two years, and again his persistence won, and the young couple were married. Mr. McCalpin is no ta millionaire, but as he is connected with the famous "octopus" it will probably not be long before he becomes one.

CHANGING THE WORLD

Look Around You and Examine Your Environment Occasionally

"You cannot change the world; only yourself."

The above saying is apt to be a little misleading. For though the world is so vast, huge, and complex that to change the whole of it in any way would require powers far greater than most of us possess, yet, on the other hand, by changing ourselves we do much towards changing the world. "He who reforms himself has done more to reform the community than a crowd of noisy, impotent talkers." Few of us properly realise the greatness of the influence which we exert, very often unconsciously, on all with whom we are constantly in contact.

When you change yourself, you cannot help but change your influence, and your influence changes others to some extent, and thus changes their influence, too—and so on, like the ripples caused by a stone flung into a pond. So if you reform yourself, you are taking a hand in the great task of reforming the world.

"Your world" is your mission-ground. "Your world" is the place where your best work is needed. Your friends, your workmates, above all, your family, are the people who are the most affected by you. To reform yourself is hard, but it is not a hopeless task.

You can alter your whole outlook on life. If you are inclined to be sad and gloomy, you can, by persistently forcing yourself to think cheerfully, in time develop the habit of cheerfulness to such an extent that it becomes second nature to you.

Look around you, and examine your world occasionally. See where a change for the better is most needed, and set to work at once to make that change. Here is one, perhaps, who needs cheering up; go and cheer him. Here is one who seems to want advice; give it to him. Here is one who requires help; let him have any such help as lies in your power to give.

But, above all, look to yourself. Reform, like charity, should begin at home.—Budget and Family Journal.

NEWSBOY TO OPERA SINGER

Plenty of romance has been crowded into the twenty-seven years of the life of Mr. B. Nevada Landino, who ten years ago was a New York newsboy, and is now a grand opera tenor singer. Mr. Landino has said that at Cleveland he filled up his spare time by shoe-blacking, while later on he worked side by side at cigarette-making with Rosa Pastor, of Whitechapel, who afterwards married a millionaire. To be slapped on the back by Mascagni, who said "Bravo!" is another incident that the tenor recalls with pride. Landino speaks four languages—German, French and Italian, in addition to English; he has a repertoire of two hundred songs, and knows twenty operas, twelve of which he can sing without rehearsing.

"DERBYSHIRE'S GRAND OLD MAN"

Known by many as "Derbyshire's Grand Old Man," Mr. Edward Mason Wrench, of Baslow, celebrated his seventy-eighth birthday recently. Not only in medicine and surgery has Mr. Wrench made a name for himself, but he also had a distinguished career as a soldier during the stirring times of the Crimean War and Indian Mutiny. In the former he did duty in the trenches, and was present at the three assaults—one on the Quarries and the others at the Redan—and on the last occasion that the assault party went down to the trenches only half returned to the camp uninjured

KING AND HIS CHILDREN

His Majesty Finds His Chief Relaxation Among the Children

In his own home, and especially in the nursery of his children, the King has always found his chief relaxation. He dislikes functions which take him away from those whom he loves best in the world. Nothing pleases him more than to be able to steal an hour from the duties of State in order to take part in the innocent amusements of the nursery. From the birth of his first child he has always been delighted to bring home toys, chiefly of the mechanical order. He is regarded by the children, indeed, as the greatest living expert in the art of constructing mimic fortifications and in the manoeuvring of toy soldiers.

The story goes that on one occasion one of his children was asked which he liked best, his father or his mother. The boy replied, "I like them both the same"; then he added, after a moment's reflection, "I think dadda spoils me most." It is not only in their games, but in their education, that the King has taken the keenest personal interest in the upbringing of his little ones.

A story was told that once, while at Balmoral, the Prince of Wales was away for a few days on a visit to London to do some shopping. The children, even on holiday in the Highlands, were kept under firm but kind discipline by their mother. "While she was away, however," says a lady who was at Balmoral at the time, "the Prince of Wales had his sons and daughter to himself. He romped with them, and they had the time of their lives."

The same lady is the authority for a pretty story with respect to King Edward's partiality for his granddaughter, the Princess Mary. The Royal party were travelling southwards, by special train, of course. The children had a saloon carriage to themselves. The little Princess, however, found her way to the saloon of her grandfather and grandmother and there remained. When Prince Edward attempted to follow her, he was firmly checked, and had it impressed upon him that his sister was a privileged person with the King, and was allowed liberties that were not meant for boys.—From "King George and Queen Mary," by Henry Warwick.

CATS IN JAPAN

In the Beginning the Felines Were Only for the Best Homes

According to the Japanese, the domestic cat appeared in their country at a relatively recent epoch, having travelled from China with the missionaries of Buddhism. In the middle of the sixth century of the Christian era sacrifices were offered to the cat, which was known by all as "the guardian of the manuscripts."

"The guardian of the manuscripts" kept away the mice, which otherwise would have eaten the precious papyrus. In some instances placards were set in conspicuous places among manuscripts as a warning to the mice "Beware! The cat is here; she drives the mice." Portraits of cats were also placed in parts frequented by mice.

The cats were revered. For a long time they were kept in the temples. But their beauty, their general desirability and the charm of their grace, affection for man, and adaptability to human conditions, so appealed to the layman that one by one very gradually their kittens were permitted to leave the temples and to become the pets of the nobility. After entering the families of the high officials of the empire they won their way into humbler households.

PERILS OF BOTANY

A particularly exciting episode in the career of that veteran botanist, Sir Joseph Hooker, who recently celebrated his ninety-fourth birthday, occurred when, some sixty years ago, he undertook a mission to unfamiliar regions in India, penetrated the Himalayan fastnesses, and, being detected botanizing on the Tibet border, was seized, imprisoned, and beaten, and came very near losing his life. It is to Sir Joseph that we owe our knowledge of the flora of the Antarctic, and seventy years have passed since he visited the South Polar regions.

STORIES OF A BISHOP

A hundred and one stories are told concerning Dr. Glyn, the Bishop of Peterborough, who was recently presented with a magnificent cope by the clergy and laity of his diocese. A rich and benevolent millionaire was once boasting to Dr. Glyn of the amount he gave annually in charity, as though he was certain it would secure him one of the best seats in Paradise. "Well," remarked the Bishop, on hearing the amount, "that is the largest insurance against fire I have ever heard of."

A SPORTING PRINCE

Polo and hockey player, cyclist, motorist, yachtsman, and steeplechase rider, the German Crown Prince is steadily acquiring a reputation as an all-round sportsman. An enthusiastic admirer, indeed, has predicted that he will make the German nation the first sporting people in the world. The Prince has had many adventures and curious experiences, and only a few months ago, during his visit to India, while on a motoring tour from Lucknow, lost his way completely. Eventually his car broke down in the wilds, and he had to return to civilization by means of a devious cross-country journey by boat, carrier, and rail, having meanwhile missed an important official fête which had been organized in his honor.

About Actresses

Ellen Terry was one day talking about the many women who asked her to help them get on the stage, when she said: "Every woman under thirty imagines that she is an actress. And every actress believes that she is under thirty."

A MOTHER'S IDEAL

A Detailed Definite One Which She Wishes Her Child to Attain

Every mother has an ideal character in view for her growing child, and every true mother works conscientiously toward the development of that character, but most mothers are so busy with their household affairs, the children's clothes, and the thousand and one things which fall to a mother's lot, that often there is no time for special training of the little ones, and the small opportunities—which mean so much in the training of a child—are often overlooked under the stress of more pressing duties.

The training of a child is made up of small opportunities, of trifling occurrences, of unconscious influences, example, chance words and expressions. These all sink into the plastic mind of the child, often to be indelibly impressed and to affect its whole after-life. But a mother does not realise it at the time. The opportunity is so trifling, it comes and goes so quickly, she is so busy about other things, that it slips by her often unnoticed.

If the mother could be constantly on the watch for all these chances to implant the impressions she desires in her child's mind, it would be a big step toward the realization of that ideal character which she wishes her child to attain.

To do this, the mother must have the ideal constantly before her—not a beautiful, abstract, vague fancy, but a detailed, definite ideal which she wishes her child to attain. She will find a great help in keeping this picture before her if she sits down some day when she has the leisure and thoughtfully makes a list of those qualities which she wishes to cultivate in each particular child—which she thinks it specially needs, as, for instance, self-control, honesty, gentleness, consideration for others, contentment, etc.

A mother who studies her children's dispositions and knows each one to be different, will find that she must make a separate list for each child, giving special attention to those qualities which seem to be lacking. One child will need the quality of self-confidence developed, where another should have this attribute of character repressed rather than encouraged.

It will not take five minutes each day for the mother to glance over these lists to refresh her memory and to keep them constantly in mind, but she will find that it will make her much more alert for the little opportunities which will come during the day, and that the children will gradually acquire the qualities she wishes to build into their characters.

The daily reading of such a list is also of benefit to the mother herself, to keep before her mind the qualities she wishes to cultivate in her children, and also in herself, for she knows that example speaks louder than words and that a mother must herself possess qualities if she wishes to inculcate them in her children.

The making and the daily reference to these detailed lists means a small expenditure of time and trouble, even to a busy mother, but she will find that it more than repays her in the gradual, lasting improvement manifest in the characters of her children. —Annie Gilbert Mahon.

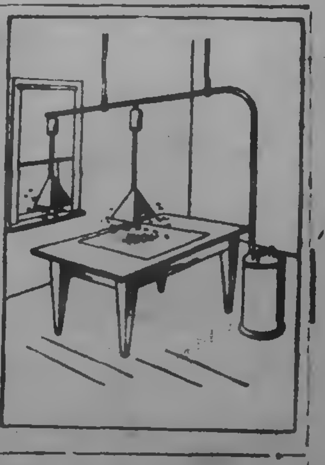
COLORED TIES

To wash gentlemen's colored ties, use water in which two or three handfuls of bran have been boiled. Rinse thoroughly in cold water, to which a little salt has been added, and iron while damp. Ties which have a stiffening of muslin should be tacked before they are washed, or the lining will slip out of place.

VACUUM FLY CATCHER

Insects are Sucked Into Traps and Afterwards Killed

The limit of uses to which a vacuum apparatus may be put seems to be unbounded. Here is a plan by which it catches flies. A pipe leading from the vacuum tank is suspended across the room horizontally with a series of funnels depending from it. One funnel can be hung over a table, for instance, and another over the window sill. As the flies enter the window those that come close to the funnel are sucked up into the pipe above. For those that escape a bait of bread and molasses is set on the table below the mouth of the second funnel. When the insects make for this feast they are whirled up into the opening above as soon as they come within the radius of suction. Valves at the top of the funnels close down when the vacuum motor is shut off and the traps can be removed and immersed in scalding water to kill the captives. People who think this is taking a lot of trouble about nothing should read some of the government and municipal literature about the danger of the fly as a carrier of disease germs.



You sometimes hear the expression "Oh, his head is absolutely empty." It struck one of our reporters yesterday that for a true sample of emptiness, nothing can, or could, exceed one of the big sleigh, or waggon loads of barrels that daily are taken to the Quaker Oats Company's factory. Such loads contain about 1,500 cubic feet of emptiness to be filled by a local product that helps to make Peterborough famous.

It's a ten-to-one shot that now the price of eggs is coming down the hen will begin laying like sixty.

Capt. Amundsen tells us that dog meat is delicious. To be thoroughly enjoyed, however, it must be tasted at the pole.

Now that the dictagraph has been found to be so effective it is up to the lawyers for the defence to invent a contradictagraph.

This interim between winter and the ball season is the time when the average man goes home early and figures how he is going to pay last winter's coal bill.

One of the Eastern papers says that straw hats will be scarce in 1913. They are scarce now, but if the weather continues we will be sending last year's to the renovators.

BRIGHT BARNARDO HOME PAPER.

The Times is in receipt of a bright little booklet entitled "Ups and Downs," issued by Mr. Alfred B. Owen, Canadian Manager for the Barnardo Homes. The booklet is handsomely illustrated throughout and contains an interesting account of the voyage to Canadian shores of children on the S.S. Sicilian. From a local view-point, the only disappointment is the absence of reference to Peterborough and the Margaret Cox Home.

Returns After Long Absence.

Mr. Albert M. Marshall, representative of the National Sewing Machine Co. of Belleville, Ill., was in the city yesterday. He was thirty years ago agent for the Singer Sewing Machine Co. in Peterborough and has not been in the city for twenty-five years. He is greatly impressed with the appearance of Peterborough and expresses regret at ever having left it, on account of its progressive and modern appearance.

Local Dragoons Hold a Meeting.

A meeting of the officers of the 3rd Prince of Wales Canadian Dragoons took place yesterday afternoon, at the Armouries, the principal business of which was the transfer of stores from Col. Syer to Major Rogers. Major McLaughlin of Bowmanville and Major Dudley of Newcastle were present.

A Dog Ordered Shot.

Peterborough will probably be, at least, one dog short. "Sport," an evidently vicious canine, belonging to Mr. W. Duncan has had the sentence of execution passed by Magistrate Dumble. The dog seems to have given a lot of trouble, and will be better in the sweet subsequently.

Nearby Township Depleted.

The late Horace Greeley's advice, "go west young man", must be in process of execution. Mariposa, in Victoria county, one of the very best townships in Ontario in so far as soil is concerned, a township with excellent roads and within easy access of both Lindsay and Toronto, has dropped from 4,190 in 1901 to 3,867 in 1911.

Former Local Man Made Good.

The Lindsay Post in speaking of a former Peterborough man, who was here recently, Mr. W. I. Eyres, of Spokane, says: "With bank drafts worth $75,000 in his grip, W. I. Eyres, of Spokane, sea captain and financier, climbed aboard the G.T.P. train the other night, bearing with him his reward for ten years of patient waiting for Saskatoon to develop."

Death of Mrs. Jas. Farley.

Mrs. Farley, relict of the late James Farley, passed away on Thursday night. The deceased was eighty years of age. She has lived in the House of Providence for some years, where she passed away. She is survived by one daughter, Mrs. Flaherty of Madoc. The funeral will take place at 9 o'clock this morning at the Little Lake cemetery.

Young Lady Had Heavy Fall.

Yesterday afternoon, three young ladies were crossing Peterborough's main thoroughfare at Simcoe street. One of them happened to step on a glassy piece of ice covered pavement. The curtain rings down for a minute. The young lady whose shoes went heavenward, was somewhat stunned by her fall, but was able to take a George street car for home.

Debate in St. Peter's School.

Messrs. Harold White and Charlie Harvey held the affirmative and Stanley O'Brien and Butler Hickey, the negative in a debate in St. Peter's school, on the subject, resolved that Germany has prospects of a brighter future than England." The delivery of all four youthful speakers was excellent. The decision was given in favor of the affirmative.

A New Local Garage.

Mr. W. F. C. Montgomery, son of our esteemed fellow citizen, Mr. [illegible] Montgomery, proprietor of the hotel of that name, will open a new and modernly equipped garage at 185 Simcoe street, in the course of a few weeks. Mr. Montgomery will handle the Flanders "20" and the E.M.F. He has already booked a number of orders, and will undoubtedly gain a large share of public patronage.

The Kawartha Railroad.

A meeting of the directors of the above company, that has secured a charter to operate a railroad, steam or electric, from Peterborough to Lakefield, Apsley and other points, was to have been held yesterday. Mr. Louis Hayes, however, received telephone messages that some of the directors could not get to Peterborough. The meeting, thus adjourned, will, when held, be reported in these columns.

Deputation Over Hospital.

The good folks of Port Hope are on the horns of a dilemma. The late Mr. W. Helen left that town $100,000 for hospital purposes, provided the town utilized the fine Helen homestead as such institution. By a former clause in his will Mr. Helen left $20,000 towards a Port Hope hospital. Now the representatives of Northumberland and Durham Counties seem at a deadlock which proviso to adopt. There is an old saying "Between two stools, etc."

Canon Davidson for Buffalo.

Rev. Canon Davidson leaves this afternoon for Buffalo, where he will give mission addresses at the noonday services to be held in connection with the different Protestant Episcopal churches. These will be conducted in the large down town church of St. Paul's. Canon Davidson will be away four weeks and as a consequence, there will be no Saturday afternoon service at St. John's.

Congratulations, Mr. Rudkins.

The many friends of Mr. Wm. Rudkins will be pleased to learn that this gentleman has been appointed Industrial Commissioner of Lindsay. Mr. Rudkins succeeds Mr. W. McComb, who has gone to Mount Clemens for his health. Mr. Rudkin's long experience in his former position in Peterborough will no doubt enable him to take possession of his new job in a manner that will prove satisfactory.

Lakefield Thief Missed Bank Roll.

On Saturday night last the residence of Mr. C. Boswell, Lakefield, was broken into. It seems that Mr. Boswell had a sum of money in the house. Some one in the village evidently knew of this fact. The thief or thieves ransacked a bureau and discovered a small amount of change. However, they fortunately overlooked a roll of bank bills that was concealed in another drawer. Whilst on their burglarious visit the thieves, in addition to stealing the money found, helped themselves to a quantity of provisions.

Local Man Has a Fall.

Last night a Brock street citizen, at 10.30 went out to empty the kitchen ashes, at the far end of his yard. On his journey, a treacherous piece of slippery ice caused his feet to go heavenward, and his head towards China. On arising, he remarked of course there were bi-lingual embellishments, not for publication) "Captain Amundsen may or may not have reached the South Pole. I'll bet he never had as hard an experience as I had just now, and will have, raking these ashes off my best suit!"

Oddfellows Congratulate a Brother.

The I.O.O.F., possibly the strongest fraternal order in Peterborough, with a lodge dating so far back, as to have the venerable number "13", have, through the medium of Mr. W. G. Robinson, Secretary, Otonabee Lodge, No. 13, and Mr. J. M. White, Secretary Peterborough Lodge, No. 111, have sent a letter of congratulation to Hon. W. H. Hoyle, P.M.G., and P.G.R. of the I.O.O.F. Bro. Hoyle has been elevated to the important position of speaker of the House of Assembly of Ontario.

Important Church Addresses.

The Rev. W. C. Riddiford will take for his subject to-morrow evening, "Protestant Quitters," a message to men of to-day to be loyal to what they profess to believe, and to ring true. Mr. Patrick Morgan has postponed his promised visit to Peterborough, for a while, but the Rev. W. T. Graham, D.D., pastor of the First Avenue Baptist Church, Toronto, has kindly consented to take Mr. Morgan's place, and will give a lecture in the Park street Baptist church on Tuesday evening, April 2nd at 8.15 on "Ignatius Loyola."

Rough Ride to Hiawatha.

Capt. S. R. Pearson on Thursday drove down to Rice Lake taking with him the parts of a boat house to be erected on the summer cottage premises belonging to Mr. R. Wilson, the local merchant. Capt. Pearson told The Times that the roads, between the city and Hiawatha, were very bad. He encountered bad pitch-holes, and in many places had to resort to by-paths through the fields adjoining the roadway. Where Mr. Wilson's cottage is located, a little west of Hiawatha, six cottages were erected last summer, five belonging to Peterborough people and one to a Toronto gentleman.

The officers of the Corinthian Chapter, of Royal Arch Masons, accompanied by a considerable number of brethren, paid a fraternal visit to the Ionic Chapter of Masons of Campbellford, it being their anniversary celebration.

Proven Oil Lands
Consisting of 240 Acres, King's County,
Coalinga, California, U.S.A.

Why You Should Buy Dominion Oil Now and What We Intend to Do With Your Money

You should buy Dominion Oil because it is a first-class investment. Because it is a field where every oil perfection is to be found. Because the properties are surrounded by producing wells, some of them the greatest the world has ever known.

Because it is estimated that under every acre of California oil lands lie over five hundred thousand barrels of oil.

Because there are the world's greatest corporations buying property all around the Dominion Oil Company's land, and these same companies have many producing gushers.

Because the Directors of this Company are men whose records are above reproach.

Because to-day is the logical time to buy these shares.

Because the Dominion Oil Company has a well that is down 2460 feet in a field that is surrounded by producing wells, and may strike oil almost any week now.

Because pipe lines run through the property, thus making their wells in line for rapid shipment of oil to market.

Because the supply is hardly keeping up with the demand.

Because on all sides of their property many companies are drilling wells that will prove up all the Company's holdings and increase their value.

Because the Company's stock may be withdrawn from the market at any time.

Because this is a Canadian Company, whose charter is the best in the land.

Because oil wells require but little expense to operate and the earnings are almost all profit.

Because this Company desires to sell only 100,000 shares now, and they are Treasury Shares.

Because this is an oil company and not a stock selling one.

Because no matter what your question may be, this company can answer to your complete satisfaction.

WHY WE WANT TO SELL SOME OF THESE SHARES.

We want to push every bit of development necessary towards the utmost production from our holdings.

Because we only want to sell 10 per cent. of this Company's shares.

Because this is not a promotion scheme, but one in which the Directors of the Company have invested large sums of money.

Because this Company has gone to work and is proving its value now, with its own money, and wants to keep on doing so.

Because we would prefer to have many hundreds buy shares rather than just a few rich men.

We want to keep on selling this stock for development purposes, and then to use the money for actual payment of such bills.

Because we want to sink as many wells as possible, and just as soon as possible.

These are reasons why we want to sell. If we strike oil soon we will not have to sell more of this stock, for the production will take care of the expenditures. When this time arrives we probably will at once withdraw all offers for sale from the market.

This Company only a short time ago offered its stock for sale in a broadcast manner. The response on the part of the public was more than we expected. We are now of the opinion that we will be entirely sold out before the expiration of a brief period.

These shares are being sold to some of the most conservative and level-headed bankers and business men in this country.

There are now being offered for public subscription 100,000 shares of the Treasury Stock at 50c per share, which will leave 400,000 shares still in the treasury. It will be the aim of the Directors to maintain and keep as large a treasury balance as possible in both money and stock available to meet at all times any and all contingencies that may arise and thus effectually safeguarding the interests of all shareholders.

This is your opportunity to make good in the great oil industry of California. If you have $100.00 to invest it will pay to investigate this proposition. If you have $5000.00 you cannot afford to overlook it. Write us at once, for Illustrated Prospectus, which will give you full particulars of this sterling investment, which will be mailed to you without obligation or any expense on your part.

SATISFIED POLICY-HOLDER

(Copy)

Toronto, March 1st, 1912.

W. H. HILL, ESQ.,
Manager,
Sun Life Assurance Co.,
Peterborough, Ont.

Dear Sir,—I wish to thank the Sun Life Assurance Company, through you, for the prompt and very satisfactory settlement of my 15 year Endowment Policy, No. 61345, which matured and was paid me to-day.

I have also a 15 year Endowment maturing to-day in another leading Company.

The contrast, in the results, in favor of your Company is so marked that I want you to know it, but I am at a loss to know how such a difference could honestly occur. When I tell you that the profits in your Company are three and one-third times the profits in the other Company referred to, and this too notwithstanding I paid the other Company $1.15 per year more per $1000 than I paid you, you will realize my inability to comprehend the cause.

This is surely a tribute to the management of the Sun Life, and I am so well pleased I have applied for further insurance with you.

Incidentally, I would like to say a word for your loan privilege. As you are aware, I borrowed some money on my policy, a little over a year ago, which enabled me to obtain a substantial interest in a town site in the Northwest, and you will be pleased to learn that it has already yielded substantial gain and gives promise to pay hundreds per cent., so that it is impossible to fully realize the value of that Policy to me.

I thought as an old Peterborough boy you would be pleased to know I am delighted with the result.

Yours truly,
(Signed) ROBERT E. DOLAN.

GERMAN BARQUE SINKS P. & O. LINER IN CHANNEL

Collides With Peninsular and Oriental Liner "Oceana," Whilst Off English Coast.

Passengers Slept--The Lascar Crew Panic-Stricken, But the Officers Behaved Bravely, Nearly All Were Rescued.

Accident Occurred While the Passengers Slept---They had to be Saved Dressed in Night Clothes.

Newhaven, Eng., Mar. 16.—Four passengers and several sailors are believed to have been drowned this morning as a result of a collision between the Peninsular and Oriental liner Oceana and the German barque Pisagua off Beachy Head in the English Channel.

For some time the lives of the liner's 41 passengers and of the 280 men of her crew were placed in jeopardy. The courage of the officers and the speedy arrival of assistance, however, prevented a terrible catastrophe.

Despite the fact that the life savers and officials at Eastbourne insist that 25 passengers lost their lives, officials of the line declare tonight that all of the passengers were landed in safety.

The line officials refused to say on what they based their belief, while the Eastbourne people told a thrilling tale of how an overcrowded lifeboat was launched from the steamer and after wallowing in the trough of the sea was capsized by an enormous wave. The occupants of this boat were mostly women.

The life savers watched helplessly from the shore as they frantically endeavored to launch their own boat, but they were unable to save any person except a woman with a life-preserver around her, who was found clinging to the keel of the overturned boat.

Twenty eight of the passengers were landed here and nine at Eastbourne.

It was thought at first that there were 400 passengers on board but the company says that most of them were to join her at Marseilles.

The Oceana was bound from London for Bombay. She was proceeding down the English Channel when off Beach Head the barque Pisagua from Mejillones for Hamburg smashed into her broadside on and practically tore the side out of the steamer.

MANY PASSENGERS LANDED.

The passengers and the steamer's officers behaved with great calmness but the crew, which was composed of Lascars, were panic-stricken and delayed the lowering of the boats.

Many of the passengers were landed here and at Eastbourne, while boats were lowered from a cross-channel steamer and picked up a large number of others. Lifeboats were also sent out from shore in reply to signals of distress.

OCEANA SANK QUICKLY.

An attempt was first made to beach the Oceana, but she sank quickly.

The collision occurred in the early hours of the morning while all the passengers were asleep in their berths.

The passengers trying to make their way to the upper decks dressed in their night attire had to wade through water up to their waists.

LIFEBOATS SWAMPED.

The first boat lowered was swamped and the passengers thrown into the water but they were all picked up. The second boat was just sinking when a lifeboat from shore reached it.

9-YEAR-OLD GIRL DEMANDS TO VOTE

Nashville, Tenn., Mar. 18.—Little Miss Anna B. Hooper, nine years old, daughter of Governor Hooper, has the distinction of delivering the first equal suffrage speech ever made in the Tennessee State house. It was all of her planning. Appearing at the capital, she solicited the aid of her father's stenographer in copying the speech, after which, collecting her friends, she led the way to the hall of the house where mounting the rostrum said: "My Fellow Citizens—I suppose you know the reason I am here. I come pleading for you men to let the women vote. Do you believe in the way Mrs. Pankhurst is trying to get votes? No, I do not. I do not believe in smashing windows, but I do think you ought to let us vote. Why shouldn't we help to make the laws of our country? The ignorant men are allowed to vote, but the educated women are denied this privilege. This is not right, and every sensible man knows it."

LAURIER AND COERSION

The Toronto News is within the mark when it says that the Government majority of 55 on the Manitoba boundary settlement was only the natural sequel to Sir Wilfrid Laurier's devious course on the school question. In 1846, the Tupper Ministry attempted to interfere with this same Province educationally and the Liberal Leader took the other side. It was a bold stroke for a French-Canadian Roman Catholic to make, and it carried him into office. At the time he seemed to be playing the part of the statesman and the constitutionalist. Unfortunately his subsequent record has proved that in 1896 he was merely an agile apportunist. In 1905 when the Provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan were first erected he absolutely reversed his policy. Backed by a large majority in Parliament and with no general election immediately imminent he set out deliberately to oppose dual school systems on both Provinces. And despite much opposition in the country he succeeded.

PROMINENT LOCAL PHYSICIAN PASSED AWAY ON SATURDAY

Dr. R. P. Boucher, an Old Resident Dies, Respected by the Community and Mourned by the City

One of the best known and most generally respected citizens, in the person of Dr. Robert Penniel Boucher has been taken from our midst. The late Dr. Boucher was a man known by most of our citizens and beloved by all who knew him. He has lived for four years more than half a century in the city. The doctor, who has been ill for some weeks, in his professional career earned not only the respect and admiration of his fellow practitioners, but also the love of all who knew him. Dr. Boucher always took a keen interest in civic affairs, although a very busy professional man.

His grandfather was born in Kent, England, in 1778, and emigrated to Canada in the early part of the last century, settling near Cobourg. The deceased's father was Judge R. M. Boucher, judge of the united counties of Peterborough and Victoria, who passed away in 1868.

The departed physician was born in Colborne in 1848 and at ten years of age came to Peterborough with his father. He received his preliminary education at the public schools here and in 1865 commenced the study of Medicine at Victoria College. After taking the regular course there, he took a course at Belleview Hospital, New York. He subsequently practiced two years in the State of Missouri before returning to Peterborough, entering into partnership with the late Dr. George Burnham, father of Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P. This partnership ended in 1880.

Dr. Boucher was a member of the Provincial Board of Health. He served the city as a member of the Board of Education and was at various times president of the Peterborough Curling Club. The doctor assisted in the formation of the Peterborough Club, of which social organization he was a past president. He was also a past president of the Medical Society. He was a member and past master of Corinthian Lodge, A. F. and A.M. In religion, the late Dr. Boucher was a member of St. John's church, where he had served as churchwarden and as a lay delegate to the Synod. In politics he was a Conservative.

Dr. Boucher was married to Miss Burnham, daughter of his former partner, who, with five children, survives him. The children are Mr. George Boucher of the Hudson Bay Company, Dr. Beachamp Boucher of Vancouver, B.C., Mr. Arthur Boucher, of Montreal, Que., Mrs. Jas H. Hudson, of Montreal, and Mrs. T. Hevington, of Winnipeg, Man.

The funeral will take place to-day at 2 o'clock. Rev. Archdeacon Warren will conduct a service at the late residence of the deceased after which the funeral cortege will proceed to St. John's church. Interment will take place in the Little Lake cemetery.

SENTIMENT IN U. S. SEEMS TO BE ALL FOR STRIKE ON APRIL 1

New York, Mar. 16.—President J. P. White, of the United Mine Workers and his lieutenants, the presidents of the several district organizations in the anthracite coal region, had a long secret conference to-day at the Hotel Victoria.

White refused to say a word for publication, but a few minutes before he went into the conference he had a long talk with Floyd Parsons, editor of Coal Age.

"And you boys," said Parsons, a few minutes afterwards, speaking to the newspaper reporters, "cannot make it too emphatic that the sentiment is all for a strike on April 1. There will be no more conferences between the officials of the United Mine Workers and the coal operators.

"From present indications work in the entire anthracite region will suspend automatically on April 1, and probably in the bituminous as well. The only exceptions will be in the States of Washington, Montana and Wyoming, where the agreement runs until May 1.

"Not another word," said President White, "the time for talking is over."

TAFT-ROOSEVELT STRUGGLE IS AS TENSE AS EVER, NEITHER GIVES IN

Washington, Mar. 16.—The Taft-Roosevelt struggle is tense as ever, and neither combatant has broken away from the other to go after Lafollette, who is again in the ring.

The senator has announced his candidacy and stands upon a platform which by the way does not include the recall of decisions. His visit to North Dakota is designed to hurt Roosevelt. One appeal made by him to North Dakota is based upon his unswerving opposition at all times and places to Canadian Reciprocity. There has been some effort in the past to make capital for Roosevelt out of anti-reciprocity sentiment in the border states. But the Wisconsin Senator who never wabbled on the issue is now to be reckoned with.

The Taft people are claiming 123 delegates to the National Convention out of 142 already chosen.

LE PAYS SAYS THAT KEEWATIN SCHOOL MATTER DECENTLY BURIED

Montreal, Mar. 16.—(Special.)—Le Pays to-day contains some amusing and instructive notes on the Keewatin school matter. In the first place Mr. Langlois' paper has a cartoon, showing a coffin reposing on a table labeled "The Keewatin School," with the three French Ministers standing near at hand.

Monk says to Pelletier: "Take care and see that the cover is well nailed down," and the postmaster-general replies: "Never fear, it won't escape, and we will bury it all right."

In another column Mr. Langlois writes:

"The Keewatin school question is dead and buried, the funeral being first-class. At the head of the funeral cortege we see Liberals and Conservatives side by side, Laurier and Borden, Monk and Lemieux, Nantel and Macdonald, Sam. Hughes and Dr. Clarke, with Rogers, Blondin and Doherty. The consequence of this situation is that the question will be forever banished from our political discussions while the French-Canadians will find time to look after their own schools."

SHIPS COLLIDE OFF BALTIMORE FOUR DROWNED IN THE BAY

Baltimore, Md., Mar. 16.—The steamer Gloucester of the Merchants and Miners' line, from Boston for Baltimore, was in a collision with the schooner Herbert D. Maxwell, from Baltimore for Wilmington, N.C. off Thomas Point, Chesapeake Bay, this morning. The Maxwell was sunk and four of her crew were drowned. The Gloucester had her main mast and part of her rail carried away.

J. C. Cott, of New York, mate of the schooner, was among those who perished. Capt. William J. Quillan, who also owned the schooner, and four sailors, were picked up by the crew of the Gloucester. The Maxwell was loaded with fertilizer.

It is said that the collision was the result of an effort on the part of the Maxwell to cross the bows of the Gloucester.

FACTORIES CLOSING DOWN OVER CONFERENCE FAILURE

London, Mar. 16.—The failure of the conferences between the striking British miners and the coal owners, which have been proceeding for several days, under the Presidency of Premier Asquith, to reach a settlement of the coal strike, has brought Great Britain to the realization of the serious position of other industries, beside the one directly affected.

In many places manufacturers have only kept their works going by means of extraordinary efforts. They will now no longer be able to do this and within a few days hundreds of thousands more men and women will be added to the two million and over already involved.

This morning the Great Western Railway Company shut down its construction works at Swindon, throwing out of employment 10,000 skilled mechanics. The London and North-western Railway has given notice that after Monday a large number of cars will cease running while other railroad lines and factories have been compelled to give their men notice to leave.

SHEFFIELD FACTORIES ARE CLOSING.

At Sheffield many of the works have only continued in operation during the past week by the most careful hoarding of coal, but even with this thriftiness over 25,000 men in that city have been discharged, and on Monday it it feared that practically every factory in the town will be closed.

WILLIAM MUSGROVE OF TORONTO KILLED BY BLOW ON THE HEAD

Toronto, Mar. 16. Struck on the head by an iron crank on the Sorauren avenue siding of the Canadian Linseed Company, about six o'clock Saturday night, William Musgrove, of 36 Millicent street was fatally injured and died in a few minutes. His body was removed to the morgue and Coroner Dr. Young will open an inquest on Monday.

Musgrove was about 60 years of age and an employee of the Connell Coal Co., and was unloading coal from a car. While working with a crank, it swung back and struck him forcibly on the head. He was knocked over, but quickly revived and commenced work again. About five minutes later he dropped to the ground lifeless. He was a married man.

LOCAL FALL EXHIBITION DISCUSSED BY DIRECTORS

The regular monthly meeting of the Peterborough Industrial Fair Directors, held in Hooper's Palm Parlours, was of an informal nature, and was featured by some discussion, pertaining to the interests of the 1912 Fall Fair. There were present Messrs. J. H. Garbutt, President; J. J. Turner, Sr., Treasurer; F. J. A. Hall, Secretary, and the following directors: Messrs. W. E. Conway, F. Wise, G. A. Gillespie, R. M. Glover, R. Neil and S. Redmond.

Mr. J. J. Turner, chairman of the Amusement committee, gave a brief resume of the work which had been accomplished by that body. A big program has been arranged for by Peterborough, Collingwood, Barrie, Lindsay and Oshawa. Belleville has dropped out of the circuit this year.

As the majority favoured a continuance of a three-day fair, the latter will prevail for this year at least.

A letter was read from Mr. Peck, M.P.P., in which he announced his intention of favoring the retention of a maximum grant of $800 for Fall Fairs. A movement was on foot in the Provincial Legislature to have this reduced to $500. A letter was also read from the Secretary of the Lindsay Fair Directors, in which the writer stated that the member for Victoria County, Dr. Vrooman would also oppose the reduction of the grant.

It was moved and seconded that Messrs. Conway and Neil act as a committee to interview Mr. Peck, personally upon the matter.

PROTESTANTS WHO LIVED FOR IRELAND'S FREEDOM

Long List Showing That Ulster is Against Rome, Not Home Rule---Parnell and Others Noted

Dublin, March 16.—There are a number of somewhat bigoted men who claim that Ulster in its fight against Home Rule is down on the general cause of Ireland. The falsity of such a statement is contradicted by a glance over some of the Protestants who have given good service to Ireland.

land. Ulster's idea and determination is not to retard Ireland's progress but to advance it. That Province simply demands that Ireland shall be, first for a United Empire, and next for Ireland's future growth and greatness.

A glance at the appended list of Protestants, who have done heroic service for Ireland shows this. Among them are the following:

Robert Emmet (1778-1803), whose uninscribed tombstone will yet be cut with his fitting epitaph—died like a felon on a scaffold after having given practically his whole life to the cause of Ireland's freedom. No Roman Catholic has given more for the cause of national emancipation than Emmet.

Lord Edward Fitzgerald, the famous Irish insurgent, was a Protestant and a patriot. His bold denunciation of the lord lieutenant and the House majority as "the worst subjects the king has" led to his dismissal from the army.

The inventor of the phrase, "home rule," Isaac Butt, was another of the Protestant leaders in the home rule movement.

Henry Grattan's insistent cry for Irish liberty caused his name to be struck from the privy council roll.

The proximity of Charles Stewart Parnell to the present gives him the distinction of being the greatest Protestant home rule exponent the country ever had.

IRISHMEN CELEBRATED THEIR PATRON SAINTS DAY

London, Mar. 16.—(Special.)—The Irishmen in the United Kingdom celebrated St. Patrick's Day with unprecedented enthusiasm because of Mr. Asquith's promise to bring in his Home Rule bill on or before April 10.

John Dillon, who does not often jest on serious themes, says: "This is the most enjoyable anniversary since the son of Calpurnius drove the snakes out of Ireland, for at last Erin is in measurable distance of her goal."

Unionists repeat the stale taunt that American capital is behind the Nationalist movement which in Gladstone's time had at least the virtue of real patriotism."

John Redmond's answer is that "It depends upon what is meant by 'behind,' for I have not the least doubt that when we get our rights we shall find American capital close nehind us waiting to invest itself in the great opportunities of New Ireland."

150 MEXICAN REBELS SLAIN IN BATTLE

Mexico City, Mar. 16.—Mexican rebels lost 150 men in a battle near Gomez Palácio on March 9, according to a special despatch from Torreon, received by the Imparcial Mon day. The federal fatalities in the fighting have not been reported.

The rebels routed by the rural guards and forced to flee from Gomez Palacio on March 9 concentrated on a ranch for a fresh attack, but a column of cavalry, infantry and artillery under command of Gen. Aubert, which had just arrived from Torreon, attacked them on the plains of San Ignacio. The rapid-firing guns of Gen. Aubert's force created great havoc in the rebel ranks and caused them to take flight in a panic, leaving a large quantity of arms and provisions on the field.

Three trains of provisions left Monterry Sunday for Torreon.

GREAT PROFITS IN OIL

California is King of All the World in Oil—Interesting and Instructive Information.

The United States geological report states the United States produced in 1909 178,000,000 barrels and California produced of this 58,000,000 barrels, or 33 1-3 per cent, of all the oil produced and ranked the next producing field 14,700,000 barrels. California's estimated production for 1910, 63,000,000 barrels, at ruling price as well $11,000,000 or $12,000,000 more than last year's yield from her gold mines. The total proved oil territory in California is 850 square miles.

There remains stored in the ground in the United States oil fields 24,500 000 000 barrels and of this amount the California fields are credited with 8,500,000,000 barrels, over one third. In the older fields like Pennsylvania, the oil sand is five feet thick, the production is declining, while in California the sand is hundreds of feet thick and the whole of the United States will eventually have to depend upon the depth of the oil sands and not the area covered.

California's state mineralogist reports oil produced to date in California, 321,000,000 barrels valued at $150,000,000 to date.

At the present time California is paving the world, producing 625,182 tons of asphalt valued at $7,670,503. During the same period California produced 759,992 tons of bituminous rock, valued at $2,604,664.

California in 1909 exported 1,046,126 barrels of oil, valued at $154,921. Estimated 1910 export by January and February business, 2,952,000 barrels valued at $1,771,200.

The California refineries refine 6,000,000 barrels annually.

The Southern Pacific railroad burns as fuel 15,000,000 barrels annually.

The Santa Fe burns as fuel 6,000,000 barrels annually.

These are values based on raw products, to say nothing of the values from her numerous refined products, kerosene, distillate and by-products. California leads the world in oil values and Kern county leads California.

See advertisement of the Dominion Oil Company in to-day's issue.

WHY CAR GOT PLACE OF HONOR.

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—Can you tell me why the E. M.F. and "Flanders 20" cars were placed in the most conspicuous place at the Motor Show at Madison Square Garden, New York?

Reply—This car had the biggest sale during 1909 to 1912, and was thus given the place of honor.—Ed. Times.

SMOKING IN THE POST OFFICE.

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—I was in the Post Office a few days ago. While I was waiting to add a few lines to a letter I went to post a man stood right beside me smoking a nasty smelly pipe. The odor of his tobacco almost sickened me. I think, in a public place like the post office, that smoking should be forbidden.

—A Subscriber.

Reply—We have made inquiries concerning the matter of smoking in Canadian post offices, and we are informed that the rules of the department are very strict in the matter, no smoking being allowed in any post office. If the Postmaster had noticed the man you refer to he would undoubtedly have warned him not to smoke.—Ed. Times.

WE Want YOU To Read About GROUARD

The First City, Gateway and Commercial Centre of the Great

PEACE RIVER COUNTRY

Situated at the west end of Lesser Slave Lake controlling the entrance to the rich and fertile Lands of the great Peace River District. This is not a subdivision of a proposed townsite but part of an established town, first settlement and distributing centre of the Peace River Country

"I can forsee a very great future for Grouard"—a statement made by a party recently returned from there.

Farm lands and farming made Winnipeg, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Brandon, so you can imagine the future for GROUARD with forty million acres of the richest farm lands in the world behind it. The Peace River Country, at no great distant date, will be the home of a million prosperous farmers. Think of the business that will be done at GROUARD—the entrance and distributing center situated as it will be with rail and steamboat transportation. Hundreds of settlers are now going into the rich districts around GROUARD, now outfitting, trading and buying goods at GROUARD.

Read all of This Page

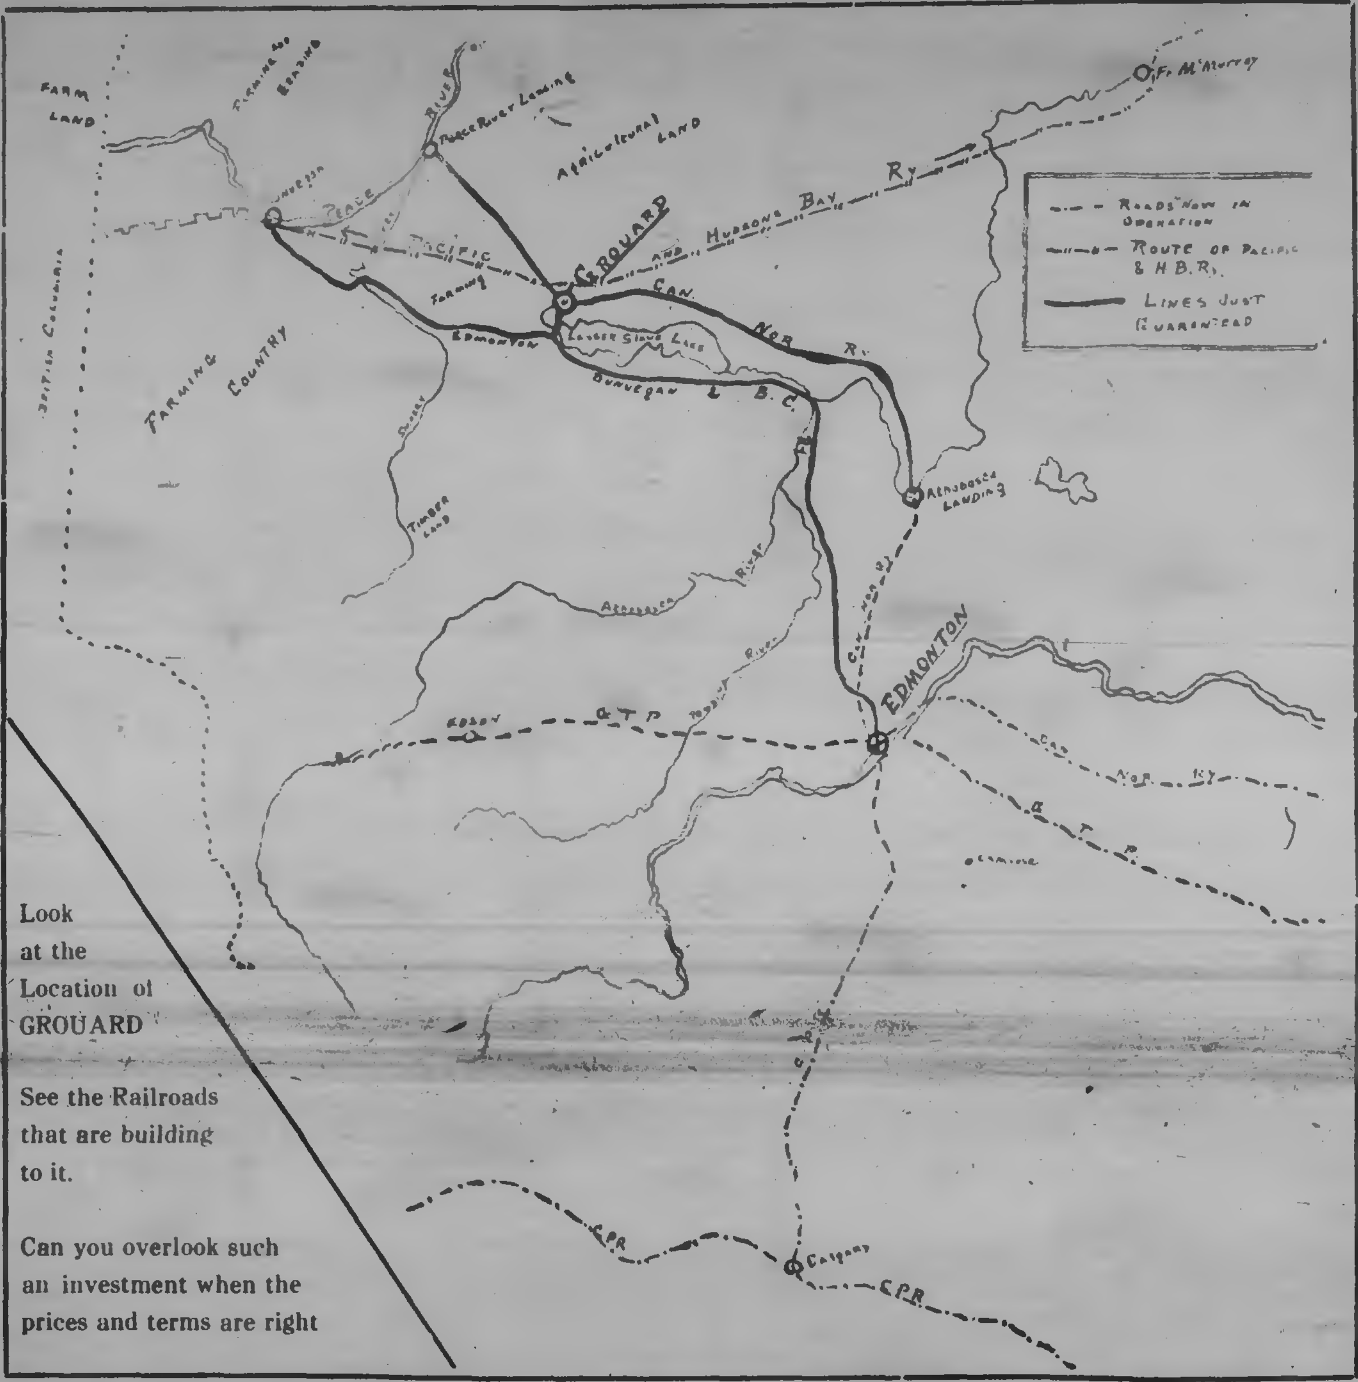
GROUARD is the place for the business man, capitalist, professional man, investor or farmer.

This is not a proposed townsite, but an established town of years standing.

Now that the Wonderful Peace River farming country has become the most prominent feature of the present time, and the settlers are pouring into that district, GROUARD has attained an importance as to location and possibilities never before attained by any town.

GROUARD IS ESTABLISHED—has a post office, stores, churches, government telegraph, telephone system, weather bureau, doctors, shops, saw mill, government land office for the far famed Peace River district, general stores of the Hudson's Bay Company, and the large firm of Revillon Bros., the Peace River Trading and Land Company, also the Bank of Commerce and Royal Bank have established branches there, with other banks to follow. You know banks do not go into a town, city or country where there is no business, or where the business will not increase. Follow the banks and you can never lose.

BUY LOTS IN GROUARD and WATCH THEM ADVANCE IN VALUE



Look at the Location of GROUARD

See the Railroads that are building to it.

Can you overlook such an investment when the prices and terms are right

GROUARD is the natural gateway to the Peace River country, containing 40,000,000 acres of good agricultural land.

GROUARD will be the trade distributing point for all the country of which it holds the key position.

GROUARD is the natural shipping point for the great cattle trade that will accrue to this Peace River country.

GROUARD is rich in the surrounding varied natural resources, and its property fulfils every requirement for safe and profitable investment.

GROUARD is the head of a waterway of approximately 3,000 miles of lake and river transportation.

GROUARD is so important that three railroads are heading towards it and building is being done as fast as man can do it.

GROUARD is so important that banks have already established there, and more are making ready to follow.

GROUARD has as its foundation the products and revenue that will accrue from millions of acres of the best agricultural land in Canada.

GROUARD will "stand up" under the most rigid investigation as to its resources and possibilities.

GROUARD is backed up by "THE GOLD MEDAL WHEAT DISTRICT, OF THE WORLD.

GROUARD will be larger in a couple of years than most of the townsites that have been placed on the market for the last ten years, because it has something substantial behind it.

GROUARD is what we say it is and more too.

GROUARD is the place you cannot afford to overlook in your investments, and it will make money for you.

YOU are now having placed before you the first opportunity to invest in THE City of the Peace River District, backed up by the greatest area of the best agricultural land in Canada.

Three railways are heading towards Grouard. What other new towns or cities can point to such transportation advantages right at the start as this? Think of it: three railroads, making this a divisional point, also water transportation. Would these roads build there if Grouard was not going to be one of the most important points in Western Canada? This fact alone is sufficient to convince you this investment is one of merit.

The Canadian Northern Railway is already at Athabasca Landing east of Grouard and property bought at that point a year ago for from $100 to $300 per lot is now selling at from $1000 to $1500 per lot.

Government Guarantee Railroads
Great Railroads make Great Cities

That is an accepted fact—it is indisputable. The whole history of America proves it. Now, the man who thinks of making an investment, if he is shrewd and far-seeing and anxious to safeguard his money in every way possible, will consider, not only the activity to be caused by the railway, but will consider the surrounding country, what it is, and what it will produce. Look at the key map above, and trace the Canadian Northern Railway from Edmonton to Athabasca Landing and ON TO GOURARD. This is one of the lines that is now being built. The road is already in operation to Athabasca Landing and construction from there west to Grouard is uder way. The Alberta Government within the last three weeks GUARANTEED THE NECESSARY BONDS FOR THE CONSTRUCTION of this road, thus making it absolute, and under such guarantee, must be in operation within a certain time.

LOOK AGAIN, and trace the line of the Edmonton-Dunvegan and British Columbia Railway. You will see Grouard on its line. The bonds for the construction of this line WERE ALSO GUARANTEED within the last three weeks, by the Alberta Government. Construction is now starting, and goes on with all possible speed. This line connects with the Grand Trunk Pacific at Edmonton.

Would the Government guarantee bonds for the construction of these railways if the country they were entering was not good? Would they go to Grouard if it was not important?

Railway Terminous on This Property

Again, trace the line of the Pacific and Hudsons Bay Railway which runs from the Pacific Coast in British Columbia, directly east to Fort Churchill on the Hudsons Bay. This road is being built by English capital. You will see this road runs through Grouard, and further the owners of this property have entered into an agreement with this railway, turning over to it some fifty acres of the property we are offering you, and the railway company have agreed to make their Grouard terminals consisting of station, freight sheds, and all other buildings, yards, etc., right on this property. This ensures the terminals for Grouard of the Pacific and Hudsons Bay railway right on our property.

Further, the main street of this commercial centre property runs down to the deep water frontage of the Lake, which is the head of an immense water transportation mileage, and we are turning over to the Town of Grouard sufficient water frontage for municipal owned docks and wharves.

Lots that sold in Athabasca Landing (look on map) a year ago at $200 to $350 are now being sold to-day from $1000 to $1500 each. Why? Because the railroad has just reached there, and they are wanted; the same thing will occur in Grouard shortly.

Your success in life, if you are a working man, depends largely on how you save and invest the few pennies, that you now throw away carelessly; if you are an employer how you invest your dividends, your surplus money.

Trace back the real big fortunes of this or any other country and you'll find they started from real estate. The wealth of the country to-day is real estate.

Land—the "backbone of to-day's business. The land or property owner is the king among men. If you are tired of working on the dead level "get-no-where" of city life, if you are held down by the man "higher-up" or if you have surplus money to invest buy property; become an owner of real estate in a growing community, in a place where the property is and will be wanted for business purposes, and above all in a city or town backed up by an agricultural district and the railroads.

We offer you the opportunity. Save 17 or 30c a day, make your first step towards independence—a protection for your family, a sound investment.

We know that every lot in Grouard will be taken up in sixty days. Our sub-division is not large. Is part of the town.

We are sure if you knew what we know about Grouard and the Peace River Country you would not hesitate a single minute.

You are dealing with the right kind of people; ask the Quebec Bank at Vancouver, or the Bank of Hamilton, Winnipeg, or Bradstreets who we are. YOU ARE DEALING WITH A CLEAN CUT PROPOSITION. Ask the Board of Trade at Grouard, or the Managers of the Bank of Commerce, or Royal Bank at Grouard what it is.

You have read this bulletin, we have told you the story, it is now entirely up to you.

Are you going to let 17 or 30c a day stand between you and success.

Be an owner of property in Canada's coming great Peace River City.

Act to-day.

DAIRY HINTS

A cow should be at her best from five to seven years of age.

Harsh treatment, dogging and abuse invariably decreases the milk supply.

Whey pasteurized [illegible] fresh is worth seven cents per one hundred pounds as a food.

There [illegible] a first-class cheese or a pound of fine butter made from inferior milk.

Milking [illegible] is a [illegible] to good [illegible] never be kept clean.

Stagnant water or filth of any kind in the pasture or vicinity of stables will taint the milk.

Too high temperature causes the butter to come in lumps of a soft nature instead of in form of granular kernels.

There is no reason why farm butter should not be as [illegible] as the best creamery butter if made under right conditions.

Pure milk can be obtained only through healthy cows, pure feed, pure water, pure air, and sanitary methods of handling.

A coating of whitewash on the stable walls is of inestimable value to the health of the cows and the purity of the milk supply.

A silo is absolutely necessary to the economic production of milk on a large scale. Thousands of successful dairymen have proved this. It is no longer an experiment.

Salt should always be available to cows. Its use increases the digestibility of the food, the amount of water consumed, and hence the flow of milk is increased also.—Canadian Farm.

How to Be Miserable

If you wish to be miserable, think about yourself, about what you want, what you like, what respect people ought to pay you; and then to you nothing will be pure. You will spoil everything you touch, you will make misery for yourself out of everything which God sends you, you will be as wretched as you choose.—Charles Kingsley.

LUNCH ROOMS FOR WOMEN

Lunch-rooms for women employes are rapidly growing in popularity in every up-to-date factory. A short time ago this was looked upon as an unnecessary luxury, but the progressive employer of to-day realizes the advantage gained by considering the comfort and health of his employes, and a bright, clean lunch-room is a stimulus to a higher standard of service and loyalty.

RAISE MORE HORSES

George B. Hulme Says There is Money in This Industry

When George B. Hulme, the noted horse judge, was in Winnipeg recently placing the ribbons on choice animals in many of the horse classes, says The Farmers' Advocate, he took advantage of an opportunity at the stock luncheon to tell farmers of the Canadian West that they should go in extensively for raising horses of all kinds, including army remounts. "In Western Canada," he said, "you have the best climate in the world, and an abundance of food and water that the horse wants."

This is just what many others who are in a position to speak with authority have said. Feed can be produced in abundance at low cost; for the most part the water is satisfactory; the climate is such that with reasonable care horse flesh is developed to perfection.

In spite of these facts, it is remarkable how few farmers really try to raise enough horses to increase their annual cash returns. Some will not be bothered with colts around the place; others consider that there is a chance that after they have paid the stallion service fee the foal will die. They have a sort of holy horror of anything that entails more risk than the growing of wheat. But there are men in the prairie provinces who are making money from breeding mares of the proper type—and they are becoming more numerous year by year. They have realized that it should not be necessary to bring thousands of dray and farm horses from the East every year. They have found out that there is profit in a horse at three or four years when he can be exchanged for cash totalling almost as many hundred dollars.

The horse raising industry is worth considering.

WINTERING FARM HORSES

How to Keep Idle Horses Cheaply in the Winter

There are three or four methods of wintering farm horses. Some turn out the idle horse and let them "rustle," some winter them in protected yards and others winter in the stable. Horses that will not be required to work from freeze-up in the fall till seeding begins in spring can be wintered as well outside as in, and more cheaply. If given a protected yard, into which a liberal supply of oat straw has been blown, they will come through the winter in as good shape or better than horses that have been closely confined and fed liberally on grain. An idle horse given plenty of good straw, some prairie hay, a few oat sheaves and water can be wintered in the yard at a minimum cost in labor and feed. Nature provides a heavy coat of hair, so the horse [illegible] stand the cold.

Horses thus wintered should have all the straw and rough fodder they will eat. Oat is the best straw. Corn stalks are an excellent feed for horses thus wintered. With oat straw and some hay no grain is required. Six weeks before spring work opens, light grain feeding should begin.

Colts may be wintered in the same way, but it is preferable to stable the weanling the first winter. Two colts in a box stall are company for each other, and if fed the usual rough fodder ration, and what oats they will clean up, do better than foals that rustle in the yard.—Farmers' Advocate.

CELERY HAS RUST

There will likely be a shortage in the celery crop this year. The recent storms have brought with them a rust known by growers as a celery disease, and it is playing havoc with the celery. Local growers claim that it was brought by the storms of the past month or so. The first sign noticeable is when the leaves turn red in spots. This gradually spreads over the leaves until they wither and decay. Then it strikes the roots of the celery and the root and stalks rot and die. Local dealers say that growers throughout the whole country are being bothered.—St. Thomas Journal.

FINE HORSES FOR CANADA

Nearly 1,000 horses have made the transatlantic voyage to the St. Lawrence this year. Mostly Hackneys and Clydesdales, the animals are to be distributed in a dozen different cities and towns throughout the Dominion. Mr. Robert Ness, of Howick, is the owner of twelve of the animals. Forty-four of the ponies are going to Mr. Sinton, of Regina, while Mr. Bogue is taking fifteen more to the West. All are bred from high grade British stock and their coming will be welcomed by horsemen throughout Canada.

ORIGIN OF "GO TO BLAZES"

When Mr. Bodkin applied for the Bishop Blaize public house, England, to be closed, he remarked to the chairman (Mr. R. Wallace, K.C.): "You may have heard of the ejaculation: 'Go to blazes!'"

"Yes" answered Mr. Wallace, "I think I have."

"Well," said Mr. Bodkin, "the origin of the expression is what the Bench seem to think it is. There was a Bishop Blaize and when anyone wanted advice it was the custom to say, 'Go to Blaizes.'" (Laughter.)

MONEY IN CLOVER SEED

Mr. Arnold, of Kent Bridge, last year threshed eighty-five bushels of alsike clover seed off fifteen acres and sold it for $6.40 per bushel, making $544.

ACTIVE CENTENARIAN

Mrs. Ann Speed, of Heighington village, Lincolnshire, who is in her 101st year, keeps house for her son, bakes her own bread, and travels by train once a week to Lincoln market to dispose of eggs and butter.

MILK POINTS

Don't keep milk where it will be warmer than 50 degrees.

Don't leave it in an open dish or pan.

Don't put it in the bottom of the refrigerator.

Keep the cow's tail still by banishing flies. A simple spray will do it.

Strain all milk thoroughly. Germs cling to the dirt particles and may thus be eliminated.

Sterilize all crocks, pails, cans and bottles by boiling.

GIVE THE FOWLS PLENTY OF GRIT

The Only Way to Protect Their Digestive Organs—The Right Kind to Use

Unless fowls are provided with grit of a suitable kind, a great amount of extra work is thrown upon the digestive organs, which in time become overworked and consequently debilitated.

The gizzard of a fowl is the main organ by which its food is ground into a digestible state, but this organ cannot itself properly perform the necessary function of grinding such food as hard grain. It requires assistance in the form of hard and sharp particles of grit. These particles, mixing with the food, and being continually kept on the move by the action of the gizzard, pulverize such food and render it into a proper state for nourishing the fowl's system. When one handles an emaciated fowl, as likely as not one handles a bird that has been deprived of the necessary aid to digestion in the form of sharp grit.

Many poultry keepers imagine very wrongly that fowls can find for themselves all the grit they require, especially if the birds are running at large on by-ways, upon runs composed of ashes, or where there are shallow streams with gravelly bottoms. But road grit is generally too small for the fowls' requirements; ashes are too soft to be classed as grinding material, while the small round pebbles picked up out of the beds of shallow streams are too smooth to perform the work of grinding properly.

While ashes are of little use as a grinding agent they are excellent for the fowls to scratch about in, containing as they do a certain amount of lime, which provides the laying hens with material wherewith to shell their eggs.

Kind of Grit Needed

It is impossible to keep fowls—and by fowls I mean all classes of domesticated poultry—in a healthy condition and in profitable lay for any length of time unless they are provided with grit of a suitable nature both as an aid to digestion and in shelling their eggs, and for this purpose good flint grit must be chosen.

Many kinds of grit, good, bad and indifferent, are advertised for sale among poultry-keepers. Many samples are too large for the ordinary-sized fowls, some are too small, and others are composed of the wrong materials.

The grit intended for ordinary-sized fowls should not be larger than small peas, and those for turkeys not larger than good sized peas, while for bantams they should equal split peas or lentils in size. Chicken grits intended for birds up to a month old should resemble in size linseeds or millet seeds.

Forms Egg Shells

In addition to the sharp flint-grit so essential for digestion of foodstuffs laying hens require grit of a limey nature, such as old mortar or crushed oyster shells, or they will be unable to properly shell their eggs. It is true that the foods fed to fowls contains lime salts but in far too small a quantity to provide for the needs of a laying hen, and unless the balance can be made up from other sources the bird is liable to produce thin-shelled or shell-less eggs.

Shell-less eggs, when accidentally broken offer a tempting meal to any fowls that see them, and such fowls are apt to acquire the egg eating habit. Lime in some form should therefore be kept within easy reach of laying fowls, so that they can partake of it as nature demands. Crushed oyster shells form the best kind of shell-making material, and as they can generally be got for the asking from oyster sellers, they should be secured where possible, and turned to good account for the fowls.

YOUNG POULTRY

Keep Reducing the Stock as Much as Possible

By all means keep reducing the young stock as much as possible. All the cockerels that show no signs of quality kill off, as they need a lot of food to keep up to the standard, and at the present time, when food is so dear, it does not pay to feed birds that are only of killing value. Separate if possible the wasters, and then force for three weeks, which will add flesh and weight and greatly increase the price. If breeding for exhibition, and only the best are needed, do not be afraid to clear out the useless pullets. It is against the wishes of many breeders to sell or kill any that may lay eggs, but unless the range is unlimited the crowding of the ground by poor stock is fatal from the first. That man is most successful who goes through his birds carefully, selects those required for show, and then clears the rest off at once. The small breeder has had a bad season, for wet weather plays havoc with small runs that are uncovered, and the foul [illegible] so produced soon breeds disease. Few and good is better than many of moderate quality.

HOW TO KEEP CUT FLOWERS

Choose flowers that are not quite fully out and cut them early in the morning, with four inch stems. Arrange them not too close together in a vase deep enough to immerse two thirds of the stems. By previously putting some pieces of charcoal in the vase the water can be changed every five or six days. Keep the vase always full of water. Keep the flowers in a cool but not draughty place. Certain flowers do much better if a small portion of the stem is cut off, especially if they have been carried a long way, and a certain number are better for slicing the stems up, so as to let them absorb the water more easily. This is especially so with flowers that are apt to go off quickly.—Gardening Illustrated.

HINTS ON FOOD

Marion Harland Gives Some Advice to Housewives

"Things to avoid in food and drink," is the subject of an interesting article in The Public Health Journal of Canada, by Marion Harland, who says in part:

Mouldy bread is a lurking place for ptomaines. I have heard housekeepers gravely assert that "mould does not hurt bread." A woman who had studied domestic science in college argued with me, to her own satisfaction, that mould, being a vegetable growth, when it appears on stale bread, is as harmless as yeast. "Of which it may be said to be a by-product," she concluded. "Under the microscope you would see a miniature forest in that slice of mouldy bread. Toast it and you have dead wood nothing worse."

She may have been right. I may err in trying to keep bread from moulding, if possible, and to throw it to pigs and chickens when the blue-edged forests appear upon it. I do the same with regard to musty loaves. I am positive in the conviction that musty flour and souring Indian meal are unsafe as food for human creatures. Left to their own destruction as foods, the flour will develop weevils and the meal mealworms in due time. The germs of both must have been in the must and sourness. I actually knew one frugal housewife who sifted the weevils out of the flour and put it back into the barrel for family use! It never occurred to her that there might be as many invisible germs in the sifted flour as there were living wrigglers before she used the sieve.

Sprouting potatoes are unwholesome. I maintain that the water in which raw potatoes are cooked should be thrown away as unfit for culinary purposes. In some countries it is reckoned poisonous. Old potatoes should be cooked in two waters. Sprouting potatoes should not be cooked at all, except for chickens and pigs. Luckily, the rank smell that goes with the pale, dingy green of the peeled vegetable repels the would-be eater.

Since prevention is, always and everywhere, better than cure, it behooves the wise manager of the household to shield her provisions, raw and cooked, from the peril of contagion. A fly will deposit enough eggs in meat in a second of time to stock it with larvae in less than forty-eight hours. Therefore, keep meats behind wire, and if they are to be kept a day or two without cooking, wash over with vinegar and a dash of red pepper.

Lay a lump of charcoal in the bottom of the chamber of the refrigerator in which milk and butter are kept.

Make free use of the whitewash brush in the root cellar, and everywhere let in the free air and sunshine once a day. Have wire screens in your windows and doors all summer.

Corruption breeds in warm, dark nests and is carried into your dwellings upon the feet and feelers of insects. The price of security from [illegible] and microbes is [illegible] intelligent vigilance.

FEEDING CATTLE WANTED

The Supply of Feeders is Far Behind the Demand

The demand for feeding cattle has come on with a rush. On Toronto cattle market one day last week there were ten buyers for every load of [illegible] feeders offered. Good feeders are scarce at any price, and farmers who are accustomed to put up a bunch of feeding cattle at this season are finding it very hard to have their wants supplied. Ontario will have a lot of rough feed this year, and will be able to make use of a larger number than usual of cattle for feeding purposes. That the supply is so small will serve to remove any doubts there may be regarding the future of the cattle market. Cheap cattle are a good ways off and the farmer who is so fortunate as to have choice, well finished cattle for sale this coming winter is likely to realize pretty well on his investment. The situation is being relieved somewhat by Western feeding cattle which have been offering in larger numbers of late. But even with this larger supply it looks as if there will not be enough of the good kind to go around.—Canadian Farmer.

LOCAL BANKS COMPARED WITH G. B.

The average Peterborough [illegible] wears a broad smile and feels "O.K." when he has a little bank roll in his pocket, particularly when his note in the bank has been extended for a few months. Still the directors of the Bank of England, the Old Lady of Threadneedle Street, are all upset because they received an anonymous letter stating that the writer had the secrets of its strong rooms and could rob the institution if he so pleased. With all due deference to conservative conditions in England's banking system and the awe in which the B. of E. is evidently held, conditions in Canadian banking affairs are possibly just a trifle ahead of those in the Mother land.

THE SUFFRAGETTE CRAZE.

Those who make a study of the subject tell us that the human race is often visited with an epidemic of mental diseases of various kinds, as well as bodily ailments. In days gone by about seven thousand victims in Scotland and about thirty thousand in England were put to death for the impossible crime of witchcraft. And in every country where the text was read "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live", the people were slaughtered, until reason and common sense stamped out the lunacy. It is not so long since the Millerita fad passed over this country, and did great mischief among the feeble-minded, and even among ourselves in a milder form. We have the osteopath, the faith healers, the Christian Scientists, the Latter Day Saints, and the Suffragettes. This last craze has taken a curious turn. These fair daughters of Eve demand a voice in the affairs of the British Empire, and then to prove their fitness to preside over the destiny of the nation they set to work to destroy valuable property, and to put valuable lives in jeopardy. The mental aberration of these people is so ac[illegible] that it will soon collapse.

During the Civil War among our cousins Maria Stanton was an advanced Suffragette. She was displeased with something the British had done, and in a fine female burst of eloquence she said "that rather than yield to the demands of the British she would stand with one foot on the White House and the other on the Rocky Mountains, and she would bid defiance to the world!" In criticizing the young lady the London Times begged of her to keep her feet on the sidewalk, as it would be more ladylike.

Editorial Notes

Judging by the report of the supplementary estimates, it would be dangerous for a Peterborough marksman to fire off a gun in Ottawa. He would likely kill or wound some kind of private secretary.

Practical Dairyman, a paper with a self explanatory title, gives pictures of cows that have given as high as ten thousand, eight hundred pounds of milk. And still milk in this city sells at 7 cents, and butter [illegible]

An electrical journal, received by The Times, in exchange, has an article headed "The Great Power of the Dam." This did not refer to language used by Peterborough citizens when they got out their snow shovels after the late snow storm.

Standard: "Mr. Bourassa is a politician of considerable ability, but, like Don Quixote, he has a bee in his bonnet and seems determined to fight wind-mills. Manitoba is quite able to look after her own educational affairs without the assistance of Mr. Bourassa or his followers."

A Toronto paper, editorially says, under the heading "Telephones in Canada": "The mileage for Ontario is placed at 38,661 which is practically all made up of independent rural lines. Where does that paper think that the "daddy of them all", the only real connective telephone company, "The Bell", come in? These little two-penny, half-penny telephone lines could not live without connection with the Bell system.

A Toronto paper says: "The strike of oil at Milton which was made a couple of weeks ago is causing great excitement." Peterborough, some months ago had a somewhat similar excitement. Still, a citizen crossing the country in any direction, does not stumble over many derricks or run the risk of falling into an oil tank. Some twenty years ago this city had a spasm of excitement over a silver mine supposed to be located in Frontenac County. The name of the mine was "My [illegible]!" The Times recalls the absolute fact that two local citizens, presumably sane, got out of their respective beds at 4 a.m. to catch a man leaving on the early train for [illegible] that they paid $2[illegible] [illegible] one share in "Myers [illegible]." They may still have the cancelled cheque, but that is all.

[illegible] O TRUE.

[illegible] courts and runs [illegible] another day. [illegible] two courts and [illegible] had himself in [illegible]

AN EVENTFUL NIGHT.

An officer of the Army had [illegible] testimonial rare [illegible] the occasion [illegible] imbibed very [illegible] not at all wisely, with the result that late at night he found himself wandering about the parade ground.

After some time he ran against a big gun, and decided to go to sleep beneath it. Now it happened that this gun was the one that was fired at sunrise, and the next morning the firing party came down and fired it. There was a tremendous report, and then, to everybody's astonishment, a voice from underneath the gun exclaimed:

"Steady! Steady! Not all soda!"

BATHERS LOOK BLUE

The Amusing Side of the Dip Delightful—A President Taft Story

Although the simple delights of bathing have often a ludicrous side, the bather himself takes a long time to see the [illegible] side. That is not surprising [illegible] a seaside [illegible] wet [illegible] when he himself is the object of that humor!

Bognor witnessed a bathing comedy a couple of seasons ago which afforded considerable amusement to the crowd. About midday a visitor who had been bathing at the pierhead reported to the piermaster that another bather who had gone into the water an hour before had disappeared. Everyone became excited. The police took charge of the missing bather's clothes, and a dozen motor and rowing-boats began dragging operations. Bognor's well-known bathing woman, Mary Wheatland, who has saved many lives, also came to help.

And after nearly an hour's dragging operations without finding a body, a man in a bathing costume came up and complained to the piermaster that his clothes had been stolen from a bathing-box. It was the "drowned" man. The simple explanation was that he had gone along shore some distance to join another bathing party. He had to wait on the pier until the police brought his clothes back, while the holiday crowd looked on and enjoyed its chuckle.

"Lost clothes" play an important part in bathing humors. Two Yarmouth holiday-makers walked to Caister one Saturday to bathe. Their clothes they put on the seashore, under the cliff. But, all at once, portions of the cliff broke off, burying the clothes, and although the bathers dug away with their hands they could not reach their clothes. At last they had to get help from a camp near by, and after an hour's digging the clothes were unearthed.

It must be confessed that in many places along the Irish coast the bathing arrangements are distinctly primitive. The writer visited one Irish seaside town last year, and found that bathing-machines were practically unknown, while for bathing-costumes—well, you were supposed to slip out of the house in your night attire and get into the water as quickly as possible. The result was that, in the early morning, front doors opened, and out came figures clad in all sorts and conditions of night robes, who skipped across the beach right into the water. Afterwards you were supposed to walk home again with your garments "clinging like cerements"!

A good bathing story is told of President Taft, who is, to say the least of it, of generous proportions.

When he was touring through Colorada some time ago, the municipal authorities of one town solemnly presented him with a gigantic bathing suit, and invited him to bathe before the multitude. The President declined.

"The last time I bathed in public," said he, "I overheard a conversation between two men who were watching me. '[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] a point of bathing in private.' And so," concluded Mr. Taft, "I will."—Answers.

SIGNIFICANCE OF RINGS,

The Ring at First Was Placed on the Bride's Thumb

According to the ancient ritual in marriage, the husband began the ring business by placing it upon the bride's thumb and putting it successively on the next two fingers, pronouncing for each one a personal of the Trinity; with a final amen when the fourth finger was reached, and there the ring remained.

The Greek Church ritual directs that the ring be placed upon the right hand. Puritan influence sought to abolish the ring as a vain and heathen emblem, but the sweet old fashion of giving and taking emblem, "for our love's sake," yet remains to us.

Betrothal or engagement rings vary in fashion nowadays, and always depend, or should, on the purse of the donor. Where there are no limitations of this sort, his taste, if it be perfect, will lead him to choose a diamond solitaire, and of the best he can afford, a small and pure blue-white stone being altogether preferable to a large stone. Some prefer a ring set with three stones, generally a sapphire set between two diamonds. Others select a ruby or an emerald, which signifies promise of happiness.

Few persons choose pearls for an engagement ring, as pearls are supposed to typify tears. They are also too perishable to become emblems of love, which, in its first glow at least, is always understood to be indestructible. Their beauty is very precarious, being dimmed or "aged," as the lapidary expresses it, by contact with impure air, while acid annihilates them completely.

PRIDE TOOK A FALL.

Once upon a time a poor beggar man, who lived in a country where the king was called a Sultan, stood in a street and begged.

By and by there came walking along the street a man who was dressed in very fine clothes.

The beggar, who knew that such a man would have money in his pocket, cried out in a loud voice for help. Now the man in very fine clothes lived in the palace of the Sultan, and he was called the Sultan's favourite. But instead of giving the beggar man some money he just picked up a stone from the ground and threw it at him. And the beggar man picked up the stone and put it into his pocket.

"Perhaps some day," said he, "I shall be able to throw it back at the haughty fellow and revenge myself."

Well, week after week passed by, and at last the beggar saw the haughty man who had thrown the stone at him riding on the back of a camel. But the man was not haughty now for the Sultan had sent him away. And as he rode on the back of the camel to prison all the other beggar men threw stones at him.

The beggar man took his stone out of his pocket. But instead of throwing it he dropped it onto the ground.

"No," said the beggar man, "I will not throw it back, though he threw it at me. It is mean and cruel to revenge oneself on a man who has become poor and unhappy."

Invest your savings in Winnipeg Real Estate. Do you know that nine-tenths of the wealth of Winnipeg is based on the increase of its real estate values? Do you realize that Winnipeg has only begun to really grow? Do you realize that any person investing in Winnipeg real estate during the past few years simply couldn't lose, so tremendous and widespread has been the increase in values, the result of the city's growth. Do you realize that as an Industrial city, Winnipeg's importance is just born —begun with the completion of her magnificent 60,000 horse power hydro-electric plant.

You Can Get Into The Winnipeg Situation

We are offering for the first time—simultaneously in Winnipeg and in Eastern Canada, lots in the new home-maker's subdivision in North-East Winnipeg.

Oakland Park

Oakland Park is located east of the Red River, beyond the present north limits of the city of Winnipeg. It is about half way between the city limits and the line which, it is stated, the Canadian Pacific Railway will build across the north of the city to relieve the terrible freight congestion now confronting them. Whether that line is built or not, North-east Winnipeg is now and will be the industrial part of the City; and Oakland Park will be the location par excellence for the homes of the better class of the future industrial army of Winnipeg.

East Kildonan, in which Oakland Park is located, is the beauty spot of Winnipeg. Just opposite Oakland Park is Fraser's Grove, a park of magnificent river bank trees that has been famous since the days of Indian councils on Red River. This whole district is to-day dotted with handsome, comfortable, inviting modern homes, and is noted for the finest gardens of western Canada.

$4.00 TO $14.00 PER FOOT

is the price at which lots in Oakland Park, Winnipeg, may now be purchased. This price cannot be duplicated in Winnipeg, for quality of offering. Oakland is within three and one-half miles of the city hall. It is in the line of fastest growth. It is only one or two years from incorporation in the city limits. These lots, that are now offered at from $100 to $350 each, depending upon location, will be worth, in my opinion, based upon ten years' experience as a successful real estate operator in Winnipeg, more than double this price in two years' time.

TRUTHFUL JOHNNIE.

Mamma—Johnnie, how many times have I told you about pulling that cat's tail?

Johnny—I don't know, Mom, but from de way de tail is worn it must be a lot.

NOT NOTICEABLE.

All was confusion on board the good ship Swallow. The officers' faces were grim; the ship was barely moving, and the captain held earnest confab with the sour-faced man in the brown overalls, who had come hurrying up from some of the unknown places below deck.

The passengers discussed the situation in little groups, and the moment the skipper left the man who held the monkey-wrench the crowd darted for the commander.

It was an old lady who got in the first breathless question.

"Oh, captain, tell us!" she cried, "what is wrong?"

"Rudder," jerked the captain. "Piece of wreckage—rudder broken."

"Oh," sighed the old dame, in a tone of relief. "I thought it was something really serious. We needn't worry about that after all. It's always under the water, so no one will notice it."

CONCERNING FRUIT

Should be Taken at Meal-time, Not Between Meals

The juices of fruits are highly valuable as means of cleansing the stomach and alimentary canal. Disease-producing germs cannot grow in them to any extent. This is particularly true of the juice of raw fruits. Cooked fruits, such as baked apples, prune puree and other soft fruit pulps, may be used without injury, if free from cane sugar and not eaten with cow's milk. Fruit should be taken at regular meal-times, not between meals. It combines especially well with cereal foods. About the only precaution which need be given in relation to fruits is that they do not form a good combination with coarse vegetables. This fact explains many cases of serious gastric disturbance. Thoroughly healthy persons do not always need to observe the rule to avoid the use of fruits and vegetables at the same meal, provided all the food is thoroughly chewed, but invalids, and especially persons with dilated stomach or slow digestion, will generally be greatly benefited by observing this precaution.—Medical Missionary.

HOW TO WASH WINDOWS

A Method Which Saves Both Time and Labor

Strange as it may seem, there is a right and wrong way to wash windows, and as this operation is usually dreaded, the following method will doubtless be appreciated, as it saves both time and labor. Choose a dull day, or at least a time when the sun is not shining on the windows, for when the sun shines on the window it causes it to be dry streaked, no matter how much it is rubbed. Take a painter's brush and dust them inside and out, washing all the woodwork inside before touching the glass. The latter must be washed slowly in warm water diluted with ammonia—do not use soap. Use a small cloth with a pointed stick to get the dust out of the corners; wipe dry with a soft piece of cotton cloth—do not use linen, as it makes the glass linty when dry. Polish with tissue paper or old newspaper. You will find that this can be done in half the time taken where soap is used, and the result will be brighter windows.—The Storekeeper.

PRICE WAS TOO HIGH

Efforts on the part of an English breeder to purchase the stallion Knight of the Thistle from his owner, R. H. McC. Potter of New Jersey, have been defeated by the price asked. The English breeder offered $700 for the horse, but Mr. Potter asks $12,000. As sire of Worth, the best 2-year-old of 1911, Knight of the Thistle has become desirable. It was upon Knight of the Thistle that Charles F. Dwyer won $50,000 in one bet when that horse won the Kempton Park Jubilee Handicap in England in 1899.

FOR CLEAN SPORT ON RACE TRACKS

Cheating Games Must be Suppressed if the Sport of Kings is to Retain Popularity

The introduction of the Pari-mutuel machines is being attemped in an effort to do away with a number of the evils associated with horse racing. They have been tried at a great number of places, and there is reason to believe that they will accomplish a good deal along this line. More than mere machines are wanted, however, as is shown by the following article from a writer in the "Canadian Sportsman," which, while it deals chiefly with harness horse racing, is equally applicable to runners. Under the caption "What Hurts the Racing Game," he writes as follows:

Horse racing, which has been termed the sport of kings, has an origin dating many years farther back in history than any other sport enjoyed by the people of this generation, and judging from its present standing it is very apt to outlive them all. There is no contest that will excite a crowd to so high a pitch of enthusiasm as a hard-fought horse race. There are interesting sports, such as baseball, football, running, etc., but they all fail to bring the large crowd to its feet as do the struggling equines as they enter the home stretch and strive to the wire.

However, the feature of this grand sport depends entirely on the manner in which the races are conducted. There are dishonest men in the race horse business as in every other business. It would be unnatural were they absent.

Owners are, as a general rule, the men who are back of most of the crooked deals put through on race tracks and the trainer and driver are the tools the owner uses to gain his desire. The trainer, however, is often in the little game himself, and, of course at the honest owner's expense—the man who is paying him so much per month to train and drive his horse, and expecting him to win.

To make the racing game popular with the public these cheating games must be suppressed, and men who cannot race without them put out of the game. What the turf wants is men who will live up to maxims such as those uttered by the Clever Grand Circuit driver, Walter Cox: "Be honest." "Leave the booze for the other fellow." "When victory can be won to-day, don't wait for a winning to-morrow." "Always drive to win regardless of the record of the horse." "Remember that nobody wins fame in the sulky unless he frequently rides in front, even the driver who comes in second is apt to be overlooked by the spectators and critics." "It's the man in front who gets the glory and the reputation and finally lands the best horses for his stable." What the turf must have for future success of harness racing are qualified officials in the judges' stand.

It is surprising how many men who know practically nothing about the horses racing or the rules of racing occupy the judges' stands on association tracks, and it is this sort of men that the wise drivers take advantage of and put through their work.

A man, to occupy the judges' stand, should know the ability of every horse which starts in a race he judges. He should be thoroughly posted on all the rules of racing. He should have even a better knowledge of the horses he judges than the wily booky who marks up the betting odds. He should have no favorites, and be fearless in giving what he believes to be the proper decision. With such men in the stand, horse racing cannot help but become the most popular of sports.

Doctors were brought, and the unconscious wrestler was taken to hospital, where he died.

AERIAL INVASION

Ten Tons of Explosives Could be Dropped in Half-an-Hour

The possibilities of a German invasion of France by aeroplanes were discussed in an article in the Paris "Excelsior." Germany is now so far ahead of France in the matter of military aviation that the German army will have very shortly no fewer than 300 aeroplanes at its disposal. It would take only two or three hours to reach the French capital from Metz and Strasburg respectively, and it is estimated that in half an hour they would have hurled ten tons of explosives upon the defenceless city.

In order to protect France against a possible aerial invasion the War Minister and the military authorities are credited with the intention of creating close to the eastern frontier a cordon of [illegible] posts called "eyries," fitted with wireless telegraphy.

WHERE ARE THE BOOKIES?

The New York State "Has Beens" Are in all Lines of Work

What has become of all the book makers in New York State, and what are they doing during the period of their exile? To begin with most of them have their ear to the ground trying to learn the situation at Albany and figure when, if ever in New York, they will be able to drag their pads, pencils and stools out of the mothballs and dash gleefully back to their old stamping grounds. This is a pleasant occupation but it does not butter a particularly large number of parsnips, and while the fate of racing is in the balance at the Capital the bookie must cast round for the wherewithal to keep him in waistcoast and such like.

During the heydey of racing in that state the lot of the average bookie was not a hard one. True, his work kept him busy during longer hours than would be supposed and often his "bank roll" became sadly emaciated, but for the most part he was well heeled and consequently lived well, contentedly and generally at peace with the world. The stunning blow dealt racing by the liability clause of the so-called anti-racing law, therefore hit many a bookie with force enough to cast him upon lean days within a very short time after being shooed off the metropolitan tracks.

Scores of bookmakers, accordingly hustled around to get a job. And being mentally quick and unusually expert mathematicians most of them encountered little difficulty in securing lucrative work. They went into all lines of work, and some to-day are quite as prosperous in their new fields of endeavor as they were when quoting odds against the thoroughbreds. To-day they are represented in dozens of fields from selling cigars to dealing in oil paintings and rare books, and not a few are so well satisfied that except for their interest in the sport itself they aren't worrying a whole lot whether New York gets racing again or not. The others, however, pine for the old days, and anxiously watch every development in the effort to restore the sport to its old standing in New York.

FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE STORY

The London correspondent of the Manchester Guardian says: A new and characteristic story of Florence Nightingale reaches me. She was a great admirer of Harriet Martineau, but Miss Martineau's inclination towards Atheism was a cause of regret and grief to her. When the news came of the authoress's death in unbelief, and friends, shocked and stern, were making remarks about her sad end and her lost soul, Florence Nightingale smiled as she said, "How glorious must have been her surprise when she woke in Paradise to find she had been mistaken."

They tell in London a story of an elderly lady who, while sight-seeing, visited Westminster Abbey. After going about for some time with an air of eager curiosity, she approached a verger. "I wonder if you can help me?" she asked, hopefully. "I am looking for the grave of King Edward II."

"Sorry, ma'am," said the verger, apologetically, "but we 'aven't got Edward II."

"But," protested the visitor, "I understood that the Abbey was the burial place of kings."

"So it is, ma'am, in a way," returned the verger, "but we only 'ave the odd numbers 'ere."

Those four desperate convicts, who tried to escape at Toronto, whilst en route to Kingston penitentiary, upon their arrival there probably received as pleasing a welcome as the "active partisan," on the other side of the political fence gets from the elected

GAVE THE REASON.

With the luxurious ease of a millionaire, James lay comfortably on three chairs and a pillow in the pantry at half-past four in the afternoon, reading a novelette.

At the end of each paragraph he took a munch of his mistress's currant cake, and at the bottom of each page, a pull at his mistress's soda water, but he did not hear the footstep on the stair.

The story became tenser, the cake smaller, the bottle empty—and the footsteps nearer.

"James!"

The butler jumped up, a guilty blush suffusing his countenance. It was the mistress of No. 4.

"James," repeated the lady, angrily, "how is it that whenever I come into the pantry I find you idling your time away, sprawled out reading a newspaper or something?"

The butler glanced reproachfully at his mistress's feet.

"Well, ma'am," he answered, speaking broadly, "ma'am, I should say it was on account of them old rubber-soled shoes!"

NOT FORGETTING THE ASS.

For many long, weary hours the jurymen had been locked in the room trying to agree upon their verdict. The judge had sent messages to them but in vain.

There was only one man who refused to agree with the remaining eleven. They argued with him, pleaded, threatened and implored, but in vain.

For the twentieth time the usher [illegible] door and asked if they [illegible].

"No!" bawled the foreman. "And [illegible] likely to be for some time with[illegible]"

"[illegible] I had better bring supper [illegible] you, [illegible]," suggested the usher. "[illegible] twelve suppers?"

Once more came an angry negative from the man inside the room.

"No!" the foreman bawled. "Bring eleven suppers and one feed of hay—and thistles."

ONLY ONE MAN WORRIED.

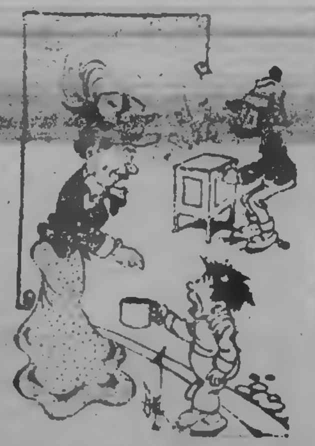
The doctor had just concluded his examination, and the gouty old gentleman felt none too pleased.

"Well," he asked, in the manner of one who demands an ultimatum, "how do you find me to-day, eh? Better or worse?"

"Oh, better; much better," said the doctor, as he rubbed his hands. "You're improving rapidly. The only thing that is wrong now is the fact that your legs still remain swollen, but that don't worry me in the least."

The irate old invalid drew in a quick sharp breath.

"No, of course it doesn't," he blurted out. "And if your legs were swollen it wouldn't worry me!"



GRATIS.

Old Lady—Young man, I hope your father won't spend this money for whiskey.

Kid—Oh, no, ma'am, we play in front of a beer saloon and git all de booze he wants for nothin'.

TOO GREAT A SACRIFICE.

For half an hour they had lingered over their good-bye. But at last Robert rose to go, and this time he meant it.

"So soon, Robby dear?" sighed Mollie. "Couldn't you stay just a little longer? Must you really go?"

"I must, darling, though I would give ten years of my life, or sacrifice everything I have to stay for one short hour with you."

"But—but why, dear?" she begged. "Why have you to go so early to-night?"

"Because, dearest," he answered, sadly but resolutely, "it's our Union meeting to-night, and if I don't go I shall be fined four cents."

MORE CHARITABLE.

He stepped from the stairs leading to the cells into the dock as though to the manner born. Did he want the goaler to show him where to stand? Not he!

He gazed up at the familiar face of the magistrate, and half smiled. But his worship's face wore a frown.

"This is the seventeenth time I've seen you in the dock," said the cadi sternly.

This was not the sort of reception he had expected. He was hurt.

"Well, yer worship," he said sadly, "I've seen you sittin' in that chair for eight years, but I've never thought of complainin'!"

The Crafty Creditor.

"Sorry, old man—bad tooth?"

"No—dentist owes me money—can't get near him—trying new scheme."

Returned The Poem.

"I submit a piece of poetry (pardon the allegation)," wrote a budding poet to the Editor this week. The allegation was pardoned, but the poem was returned.

GERMANY AT OLYMPIA

One Hundred and Sixty Athletes and Their Friends Leave on Steamer

Difficulties have arisen in connection with the sending of the 160 German champions who are to enter the lists for the Fatherland at the Olympic Games to be held in Stockholm. When the agent of the German Athletic Union went lately to the Swedish capital he could find only sixty bedrooms available for the champions, with a charge of $2.50 a day for bed and breakfast, $2.50 for other meals and the necessity, moreover, of sleeping two and three in a room. Under the circumstances the Union hit upon the happy idea of chartering a steamer and converting it into an hotel which can also be used to lodge part of the three thousand German guests who, it is estimated, will attend the sports. The 160 German champions will be clad alike in yachting blue, with [illegible] sporting the imperial [illegible]. The Germans are very confident of carrying off no small share of the prizes though they regret not having followed Norway's example, which has engaged a trainer at a half-year's salary of $5,000.

ARMED AIRSHIPS

An Inventor Devises a New Weapon for Aviators

Many well-known people in England have signed a protest organized by the International Arbitration League against the use of airships in war. Among other things the protest says:

"We appeal to all Governments to foster by every means in their power an international understanding which shall preserve the world from what will add a new hideousness to the present hideousness of warfare.

"Without universal agreement, no single Power can stay its hand; every day of ingenuity and every pound of money spent diminishes the chance for such agreement.

"The occasion is unique. The civilised world is now alive to the ghastliness and economic waste of war; the Hague Conference is an established fact. For the first time, in the face of a new development of the arts of fighting, nations possess both the conscience and the machinery necessary to check that development effectually.

"All civilisation protests its desire for peace and goodwill; protests its wish to reduce the already grievous burden of armaments. Unless its protestations be those of a hopeless hypocrite, it cannot stand and watch the conquest of the air, that most glorious of men's mechanical achievements, callously turned to the usages of destruction; it cannot idly acquiesce in a new departure that must heavily increase this burden of armaments."

As if to lend force to the protest comes the news that the French War Office is examining and will probably adopt a new bullet for use in war time by aviators. It is a kind of round steel pencil, about six inches in length, with a conical tip. The other end of it carries a little device in the form of a cross, which causes the bullet to fall perpendicularly.

These projectiles can be thrown by handfuls from an aeroplane passing over a body of troops, and the damage they would do is enormous.

ACTRESS AND LIONESS

A young actress, Mlle. Julienne Lescauche, had a terrible experience at Rouen in a cage containing two lionesses. She insisted on entering with the man who went to feed the animals. Hardly had she crossed the threshold when one of the lionesses sprang at her, felling her to the ground. The lioness began to claw the young woman's head and shoulders. With a struggle the actress got her arm free and the lion tamer drove the animal into a corner. Mlle. Lescauche was taken to hospital in a serious condition.

REVIVAL OF BOXING

The London Referee has Much to Say on the Subject

The subject of boxing is attracting attention everywhere. The London Referee says:—It is satisfactory to find the big reviews concerning themselves with boxing. Lately I commented on Mr. Osborn's admirable paper in the Fortnightly. This month there is one in the National by Mr. Harold Claughton, who dwells on the benefits which are derived from the sport, especially in the East End of London. Away down beyond Shoreditch disputes are often settled by fists instead of the sarcasms by which we usually round off our little controversies in the west, and nothing so strongly inculcates the principles of fair play as the ring. That is one of its strong points, and the lesson which it teaches in the difficult art of keeping your temper is another. As Mr. Claughton remarks: "For brutality go to the streets—not to a boxing show or a club-room—. For chastity—if a man is living intemperately he will not risk the ring; or should he, the contest will be stopped in half a minute. For foul language—an oath in the ring would be as out of order as a bird of paradise in Bermondsey." All this is true. The boxer who is to succeed must lead a wholesome life, and if he is in the right groove he cannot help imbibing principles which oblige him to "play the game" generally. There is something, perhaps, to be said for what Mr. Claughton calls "an ultimate authority, coordinating and controlling British boxing and boxers throughtout the land." Such an organization, he thinks, "would for a sponsor with whom the authorities would readily co-operate."

As regards amateur boxing in England, the writer continues, the Amateur Boxing Association does its work in a way which is eminently satisfactory to all concerned, and the healthy influence of the National Sporting Club extends far beyond the confines of Covent Garden. We have, however, no adequate control of professional boxing, and it is for this reason that there is some danger the sport may get an undeservedly bad name; for those who are not better informed may be apt to imagine that what takes place at any hall a casual promoter may be able to hire is characteristic of boxing at headquarters and at resorts whose managers strive so far as possible to follow the path along which the N. S. C. leads.

MOTOR CAR ON SKIS

A Novel Conveyance Built for Count de Lesseps

There are characteristics suggestive of the automobile, the areoplane, the motor-boat, and the cutter, too, in the mechanical sleigh that has been manufactured in France for the Count de Lesseps for use in Canada. As the count is an accomplished areoplanist as well as an automobilist, and the new sleigh was built to his order by the designer of the Chauviere laminate areoplane propeller, it is not strange that so many features from different sources should have been combined in the attempt to produce a succesful and satisfactory mechanical sleigh. The automobile hood of the body blends neatly into the boat-shaped body, which terminates in a stern with a cutter effect that carries the two-bladed areoplane screw. There is room for two persons in the front seat, and a third passenger can be accommodated in a single seat behind them. The frame of the machine is of wood, and there are no springs between it and the flat, ski-like runners. The forward runner can be turned by the steering-wheel as in an automobile. A light, four-cylinder motor of aeronautical type furnishes the power. The forward end of the propeller shaft is connected with the rear end of the driving shaft by a chain and sprockets that reduce the engine speed of 1,200 revolutions per minute to 900 revolutions for the propeller. Instead of the usual automobile change-speed gearing there is a marine type reverse gear. For use in stopping there is a hinged bar under the centre of the body which has strong iron teeth, which can be raised or lowered into contact with the ground or ice by means of rods and a lever.

BOXING IN CURRICULUM

From Lexington comes this despatch:—"The uplift in boxing continues. President Henry S. Barker of the State University of Kentucky, announces a course in boxing will be added to the college curriculum. Prizes for college champions in the featherweight, middleweight and heavyweight classes will be provided by the faculty. By the inauguration of the boxing course President Barker hopes to eliminate the practice of carrying pistols among the students, and to inspire a spirit of physical prowess in the collegiate body."

That the Borden Government does not, as is claimed by some of its opponents, take an interest in the manufacturers to the exclusion of the farming community is again proved. A Saskatchewan dispatch says that because a number of districts in the West have been so badly affected by frost last fall that the oats are unfit for seed, the government had men out scouring the country to get good seed oats to supply the districts affected. The Government has secured 10,000 bushels of American Banner oats at a

BRAINS IN DUPLICATE

Facts About the Curious Working of Your Thinking Faculties

Have you ever thought of how your brain works? Most people imagine that their brains work as a whole, but modern science says this is not so. The newest theory is that the brain is for all the world like a big department store. When ribbons are wanted it is only the ribbon department that is concerned. Similarly your brain has innumerable tiny niches, corresponding to your various accomplishments and branches of knowledge, from billiard playing to reading French. When you start to study a foreign language, or a musical instrument, you are literally carving a new niche in your brain.

The brain is like a big department store in another way—a store supplied with water-pipes running to each department. In the brain these are represented by a maze of tiny arteries carrying blood. Just as the water-pipes on one particular floor might burst and ruin the goods in that department alone, so if the walls of an artery in the brain are weakened by poisoned blood, the blood may burst through and ruin that particular niche. Many a man has risen in the morning to find that he has, say, forgotten how to read. Or if the damage is less wide, he may have forgotten how to read his own language, and still be able to read any other language he knows. This might also happen as the result of an accident. You might lose the use of a small part of your brain, and yet have the rest of your faculties intact.

Even in the niches there are fine sub-divisions. The various parts of speech, for instance, are arranged in a language niche like books on a shelf. And just as the books on a shelf may be squeezed so tight that none of them will come out, so a tumor on a language shelf may jam all the grammatical parts of speech so that the patient is dumb. It is known that on that shelf the verbs are placed first, the pronouns next, the prepositions and adverbs next, and the nouns last.

The reason is that our verbs are the things we learn first, long before nouns. A baby sees long before it knows it sees. The nouns that we learn last, and so forget soonest, are people's names. That is why old people have such bad memories for names.

Everybody, it is now known, has two brains. They sit side by side, and are exactly alike, but while the niches in one are crammed with various sorts of knowledge, those in the other are blank and empty. A right-handed man thinks with the left side of his brain, a left-handed man with the right. The only use each of us makes of our dummy brain is to control the movements of the opposite side of the body—the weaker side. It knows nothing. It learns nothing. You could have it cut away without lessening your mental power. Many a man has had this done.

Only a child can teach it. A man with his utterance niche ruined struggles in vain to use the reserve one. It is too [illegible] taught. [illegible] a child has [illegible] and has taught its other brain. It has, however, to start all over again with "Mamma" and "Dadda," even at the age of nine or ten.—Answers.

HOW TO TREAT A WIFE

A Scottish Judge's Remarks on This Subject

In a Glasgow divorce action the decision of the case, his Lordship said, depended on the standard of conduct on the part of a husband towards his wife which would entitle the wife to judicial separation. A husband was bound in law to treat his wife as a gentleman should, or to put it otherwise, reasonably, considerately, and sympathetically, with the result that if he failed to do so his wife could get judicial separation from him, then in this case it was clear that the pursuer would be entitled to the remedy she asked. From the first she was not treated with reasonable consideration. Instead of humoring her and making allowance for her and paying her special attention, the defendant seemed to have kept up his bachelor habits, with the result of mutual unhappiness, for which, although not without provoking language and unreasonable expectations and exactions on her part, he seemed to have been mainly responsible. But to succeed in her demand it was common ground that the pursuer must prove treatment on the part of the defender which had produced substantial injury to her health, mental or physical. His Lordship found no such evidence. He thought it right to add the hope that the parties would, in their own interests and for the sake of their child, now resolve to let bygones be bygones. Nothing had happened on either side, or on the part of the relatives of either party, to prevent the resumption of conjugal relations. Nothing was to be gained on either side by going further with the action.

FIRST BOXING RULES

Boxer Who Was Buried in Westminster Abbey

Few people are aware of the fact that a pugilist was buried in Westminster Abbey. In an article of much interest in "London Stories," it is stated that Jack Broughton, sometimes described as the founder of the British School of boxing, was buried in the West Cloister in 1789. Late in life Broughton became a Yeoman of the [illegible] "Beneath this tablet lie the remains of Mrs. Elizabeth Broughton, died Sept. 7, 1784, aged 59 years. Also of Mr. John Broughton, one of His Majesty's Ushers of the Yeomen of the Guard, died July 8, 1789, aged [illegible] years." The gravestone also has an inscription, but there is a blank between the name and the year. It is stated that but for the objection of the Dean, this would have been filled with the words, "Champion of England."

Broughton was born in 1704, and was the first winner of Doggett's Coat and Badge. He made his first appearance as a pugilist at George Adam's famous booth at the Adam and Eve in Tottenham Court road. Later he set up an establishment of his own, and maintained his ascendency for many years, being eventually unexpectedly beaten by Slack in April, 1750, at Birmingham. Broughton made his own rules, which lasted from 1743 until 1838, when, after the contest between Owen Swift and Brighton Bill, the "New Rules of the Ring" came in. Broughton's rules are of more than ordinary interest, and were as follows:—

That a square of a yard be chalked in the middle of the stage; and every fresh set-to after a fall, or being parted from the rails, each second is to bring his man to the side of the square, and place him opposite to the other; and till they are fairly set-to at the lines, it shall not be lawful for the one to strike the other.

That, in order to prevent any disputes, the time a man lies after a fall, if the second does not bring his man to the side of the square, within the space of half a minute, he shall be deemed a beaten man.

That no champion be deemed beaten unless he fails coming up to the line in the limited time; or that his own second declares him beaten. No second is to be allowed to ask his man's adversary any questions or advise him not to give out.

That, to prevent disputes, in every main battle, the principal's shall, on the coming on the stage, choose from among the gentlemen present two umpires, who shall absolutely decide all disputes that may arise about the battle; and if the two umpires cannot agree, the said umpires to choose a third, who is to determine it.

That no person is to hit his adversary when he is down, or sieze him by the ham, the breeches, or any part below the waist; a man on his knees to be reckoned down.

VANCOUVER HARNESS RACING

Apparently the conduct of harness-racing is satisfactory at the Vancouver Exhibition. They encourage it on the Pacific coast, while Toronto Exhibition has abandoned it entirely. All kinds of horses are provided for in the speed program at Vancouver, and the list of stakes and purses totals twenty thousand dollars. Two stakes are of $3,000 and two of $2,000 each.

Deputation Over Hospital.

The good folks of Port Hope are on the horns of a dilemma. The late Mr. W. Helm left that town $100,000 for hospital purposes, provided the town utilized the fine Helm homestead as such institution. By a former clause in his will Mr. Helm left $20,000 towards a Port Hope hospital. Now the representatives of Northumberland and Durham Counties seem at a deadlock which proviso to adopt. There is an old saying "Between two stools, etc,"

THE WOODBINE

A $10,000 Plate With 100 Entries is Predicted are Long

Entries for the King's Plate this year will probably run about the same in number as last year, but there is every reason to anticipate next season the beginning of an increase that will bring the number of nominations to a hundred before many years have passed. Now that two-year-old winners are eligible and the value of the Plate is mounting, and the position of the turf in Canada becoming unassailable, we may look for a $10,000 Plate, with a hundred entries. I have already come across several men who have no horses, but who are in the market for Province-bred yearlings, which they would race next season, and put in the Plate the following year. The value of horses foaled in Canada is bound to be vastly added to by the enlarged opportunities offered them. Coming back to the race to be run on the 18th of May—not far away, in spite of all the snow now on the ground—two owners who were not interested last year are likely to figure largely in the outcome. Up at Barrie the Dyment stable shelters four or five elegibles, from which Trainer John Nixon will probably make Heresy and Tropaeolum his choice. Either one would be good enough for most owners to have in the Plate. The other owner not altogether a new-comer to the guineas, but one whose first serious attempt is now being made, is Mr. Charles Crew of the Half-way House, on the Kingston Road. His jacket will be carried by the three-year-old filly Amberite, by Martimas-Lyddite. A full sister to Shimonese and Powderman, she is better furnished and more forward than either of these at the same age. Her work last fall was perhaps not as fast as anticipated, but it was not her limit, and she was always master of her workmate. The very useful Kilo, which won the Quebec King's Plate for Mr. Kenneth Dawes, and followed that up by a vitcory in a selling race from which he went to the Crew stable. One would expect to find Amberite in the Valley Farm stable, and the fact that she is not is one evidence of the bona fides of the annual public sales of the Valley Farm stock. The filly was bid up to $1,000 for the racing stable, which was, and is, quite distinct from breeding interest, and there Col. Hendrie stopped. That was the limit, but Charlie Crew was willing to go still higher. He bid 1,050, and became the owner of a very likely winner of a richer King's Plate than any yet run. It will not be an unpopular victory, you may be sure, if the King's uncle has this year to present the guineas to a man who had pluck enough to pay the record price for a Province-bred yearling—The Globe.

THE LACROSSE OUTLOOK

Some Healthy Rivalry Between the Eastern and Western Clubs

What lacrosse players will be seen at the Coast and in the big league in the East during the coming season is far from being definitely settled and will probably remain so until the period of the annual migration takes place. One fact remains, however, and that is that there will be some healthy rivalry between the Eastern and Coast clubs, and the league which flourishes the largest wallet will be the one to win out. Following the announcement that the Eastern clubs had decided on a salary limit came an awakener that this clause had been perpetrated more for a joke than for any other purpose and that the Eastern magnates would be as keen figures in the market as Con Jones or any of the other clubs at the Coast. All of which looks pretty soft for the player. However, the fact that there is to be a merry war is not to be disguised. With the Minto Cup in the possession of Con Jones, who spent thousands of dollars to bring it to this city, it is not to be expected that now that he has the cup in his possession he will let it slip away from him without a struggle. On the other hand, the East has been so long separated from this famous piece of jewelry that the clubs in that part of the country would go to almost any length to have it brought back again. All of which indicates that there will be a scramble for another fight for the pennant, champion team, and a fight in which the size of the bank-roll will be the deciding factor.—Saturday Sunset.

FLIGHT BETWEEN SPIRES

According to a telegram from Pau the aviator Vedrines, who has made many flights recently over Pau and the neighborhood, has just accomplished a daring feat in flying. He flew between the two spires of the church of St. Jacques which are only a distance of 42 ft. apart.

Rough Ride to Hiawatha.

Capt. S. R. Pearson on Thursday drove down to Rice Lake taking with him the parts of a boat house to be erected on the summer cottage premises belonging to Mr. R. Wilson, the local merchant. Capt. Pearson told The Times that the roads, between the city and Hiawatha, were very bad. He encountered bad pitch-holes, and in many places had to resort to by-paths through the fields adjoining the roadway. Where Mr. Wilson's cottage is located, a little west of Hiawatha, six cottages were erected last summer, five belonging to Peterborough people and one to a Toronto gentleman.

HA! HA!

"Poor Jim the postman has got the sack."

"What for?"

"To carry his letters in, of course."

A SOUND SLEEP.

A certain family were preparing to take their annual week's holiday, with the exception of one son named John, who had to work during this particular week. His parents gave him strict instructions not to get too late for work, as he was a very sound sleeper.

The family had a fine time at the seaside, and got home again about 12 o'clock noon the following Saturday and were surprised to find the blinds drawn exactly as they had left them the Saturday previous. After a deal of knocking and hammering at the door, the bedroom window was slowly opened, and John, rubbing his eyes, called out

"Hello! What's up? Did you miss the train?"

ONLY FIVE OF THEM.

"How many stops has that melodeon you bought your daughter?"

"Five—breakfast, dinner, tea, supper and bed!"

TEA FOR TOMMY.

There was a sound of revelry by afternoon in the barrack-room, and it was evident that something had grievously offended the gallant sons of Mars. Presently the door was flung open, and an officer entered.

"What is the meaning of this disgraceful noise?" he snapped.

And in reply the orderly handed him a basin.

"Would you mind tasting that, sir?" he said.

The officer did so.

"Why, you ungrateful lot of rascals!" he cried. "It strikes me you want something to growl about. I think this is very good soup, indeed, and if it's good enough for me——"

"Yes, sir; that's just it," interrupted the orderly. "They want to persuade us it's tea, sir!"

SORRY HE SPOKE.

He—Going for a walk? I hope I may accompany you?

She—Yes. The doctor says we must always walk with some object, and I suppose you will answer the purpose.

AN EXPERT WITNESS.

Time after time the counsel had tried to draw something important from the sea-faring man who stood in the box.

"You say your boat picked up the accused at nine o'clock," said the barrister wearily, but still determined to gain some ground.

"Now, it has been stated that he jumped overboard nearly an hour before that time. Tell me, Captain Bluffarty, how he appeared to you when you picked him up. If you had been asked to give an opinion of him then, what would you have said?"

There was a long pause. The captain looked thoughtful, then yawned, then stroked his beard.

"A-ah," he answered at long last. "Well, I'll tell you candid now. If somebody'd asked me then—just when we took him aboard—what I thought of him, I should have said straight out, insult or no insult, that he was one of the wettest men, if not the very wettest man, that ever I see'd. Fact, mister!"

Blizzard Was Bad in Douro.

A well known farmer of Douro, remarked on Saturday in hearing of a Times reporter, "This week's storm is the worst I ever remember at this time of the year. When I went out to the barn on Friday morning, there was a drift in front of the doors, three feet high. I never saw the beat of it. I've been in that township for over forty years and I never saw such a blizzard in the middle of March."

C.G.E. Makes Good Showing.

The annual report of the Canadian General Electric Company for the year ending December 31st, 1911 was issued on Saturday. The balance sheet shows current assets of $7,936,840, against current liabilities of $3,947,945, leaving a working capital of approximately $1,000,000. The total profits for the year are $1,405,980, the largest in the history of the company, and an increase of 51 per cent, over 1910, which year in turn showed a gain of 45 per cent. over 1909.

Local Milkmen's Trouble.

Local milkmen report that the roads leading to town are very heavy. One of the leading men in this line of business yesterday remarked to a Times reporter, "It's all very good for people to kick about the price of milk and because we are sometimes late in delivering these mornings. If they had to drive through drifts, climb pitcholes and then carry a five gallon can through yards with snow up to their waists, they would not do so much grumbling. Why this morning the snow, at one part of the road was right up to the top of my horse's legs."

Girl Injured at Local Factory.

Another of those regrettable accidents that seem to be part of the incidentals of factory life occurred at the Cordage Works, when Gertie, the 17 year old daughter, of Mr. George Brosseau, the Brock street barber, had her hand badly mutilated. The girl was working at a feeding machine. By some mischance the right hand was caught in a rapidly revolving chain. The palm of the hand was so badly cut that several stitches had to be inserted. Miss Brosseau was taken to St. Joseph's hospital, where she is doing well. No blame is attached to the Cordage Works, it was simply an accident.

Fire Brigade is Commended.

As an indication of what those protected by the local fire brigade, think of that body of men, the appended letter is a fair sample:

"We wish to take this opportunity of expressing our entire satisfaction with the Peterborough Fire Brigade. On two occasions this winter we have found it necessary to send in alarms and the promptness with which these calls were responded to is certainly commendable.

"We appreciate this efficiency and would ask you to accept the enclosed cheque as a donation to the benefit fund.

At Saturday's Police Court, James Jordan, charged with being drunk and disorderly, was allowed to go but will have his name put on the Indian List if he does it again.

The weather probabilities for this section are possibly "rain, snow or a little more snow and snow to follow." This is not from the meterological office however.

STEEL TRUST R. R. HAS MADE IMMENSE PROFIT

Washington, Mar. 16.—Net profit of 240 per cent. on the capital stock was made by the Duluth, Missabe and Northern Railway, a subsidiary of the United States Steel Corporation, by charging a rate of 80 cents a ton for hauling ore from the Missabe mines to Lake Superior.

This was the testimony given to the Stanley steel trust investigating committee by G. M. Freer, a traffic expert. He said the rate was unreasonable. The inquiry was resumed Monday along lines of investigating the transportation end of the steel corporation's affairs.

JEWISH RABBI GIVES DIVORCE

Wife of Dying Man Released From Obligation to Marry Brother-in-law According to Hebrew Rite.

Toronto, Mar. 16.—A divorce performed at a deathbed seems at first blush an unusual and almost useless performance. One was declared in the Western Hospital here a short time ago. The parties divorced were Mrs. M. Cohen and her dying husband. Rabbi Gordon, of the McCaul street and University avenue Synagogue, granted the divorce.

Among the Orthodox Hebrews it is still a question of religious obligation to carry out the scriptural injunction that where a man dies without children, his brother must marry his widow with a view to continuing the family.

It was to void this obligation that this divorce in which neither party was complainant, and where there was no cause save approaching death was urged or felt. The woman did not wish to be bound to marry the brother of her husband after his death, and so the help of the Rabbi was invoked. The husband died after the divorce, and the widow is free to marry whom she pleases.

Rabbi Gordon says that this is the only divorce which he has performed among his people in five years, and that he will perform no more unless given power to do so by the Canadian authorities.

TIRED OF LIFE TAKES POISON

Toronto, Mar. 16.—By swallowing four tablets of bichloride, Mrs. Cecelia Davis, 57 Trinity Square, attempted to end her life about seven o'clock Saturday night. Her husband, hearing her groaning, found her writhing in agony on the bed in her room. The door was locked and he had to smash into the room in order to get to his wife.

She was removed to St. Michael's Hospital, where physicians worked over her for about an hour, and it is now expected that she will recover. She explained to the hospital officials that she had taken the poison because she was "tired of living." She is 24 years of age.

CLEANING AND POLISHING

How to Keep Glass and Silver Ware In Good Condition

A chamois of extra fine quality, put up in clean, separate oiled paper packages, is now to be had. One can polish glass, silver or enamel with it, using any of the usual polishing agents, then wash and dry the chamois, with the happiest of results. It will not become hard and stiff. When dry it may be pulled in shape and will be found as soft as when purchased. This has been tested in our Experimental Station, in comparison with higher priced imported skins, much to the disadvantage of the latter.

The larger pieces of silver, especially the ornamental pieces, hard to clean, may be immersed in a bath of boiling water to which considerable washing soda or borax has been added. Let boil for an hour, then dry, and polish with chamois and whiting. Rub a paste of whiting on the smaller silver and then polish with the chamois. This paste is best made with alcohol. If ammonia is used the silver will have to be repolished sooner.

The cleaning of table pads is a problem. The small asbestos pads may be cleansed by putting them in the furnace and letting them burn clean, a plan which is not feasible with the pad that covers the table. This will have to be cleaned with benzine, sponging the spots as in the case of any fabric.—Good Housekeeping.

Proven Oil Lands
Consisting of 240 Acres, King's County,
Coalinga, California, U.S.A.

Why You Should Buy Dominion Oil Now and What We Intend to Do With Your Money

You should buy Dominion Oil because it is a first-class investment. Because it is a field where every oil perfection is to be found. Because the properties are surrounded by producing wells, some of them the greatest the world has ever known.

Because it is estimated that under every acre of California oil lands lie over five hundred thousand barrels of oil.

Because there are the world's greatest corporations buying property all around the Dominion Oil Company's land, and these same companies have many producing gushers.

Because the Directors of this Company are men whose records are above reproach.

Because to-day is the logical time to buy these shares.

Because the Dominion Oil Company has a well that is down 2450 feet in a field that is surrounded by producing wells, and may strike oil almost any week now.

Because pipe lines run through the property, thus making their wells in line for rapid shipment of oil to market.

Because the supply is hardly keeping up with the demand.

Because on all sides of their property many companies are drilling wells that will prove up all the Company's holdings and increase their value.

Because the Company's stock may be withdrawn from the market at any time.

Because this is a Canadian Company, whose charter is the best in the land.

Because oil wells require but little expense to operate and the earnings are almost all profit.

Because this Company desires to sell only 100,000 shares now, and they are Treasury Shares.

Because this is an oil company and not a stock selling one.

Because no matter what your question may be, this company can answer to your complete satisfaction.

WHY WE WANT TO SELL SOME OF THESE SHARES.

We want to push every bit of development necessary towards the utmost production from our holdings.

Because we only want to sell 10 per cent. of this Company's shares.

Because this is not a promotion scheme, but one in which the Directors of the Company have invested large sums of money.

Because this Company has gone to work and is proving its value now, with its own money, and wants to keep on doing so.

Because we would prefer to have many hundreds buy shares rather than just a few rich men.

We want to keep on selling this stock for development purposes, and then to use the money for actual payment of such bills.

Because we want to sink as many wells as possible, and just as soon as possible.

These are reasons why we want to sell. If we strike oil soon we will not have to sell more of this stock, for the production will take care of the expenditures. When this time arrives we probably will at once withdraw all offers for sale from the market.

This Company only a short time ago offered its stock for sale in a broadcast manner. The response on the part of the public was more than we expected. We are now of the opinion that we will be entirely sold out before the expiration of a brief period.

These shares are being sold to some of the most conservative and level-headed bankers and business men in this country.

There are now being offered for public subscription 100,000 shares of the Treasury Stock at 50c per share, which will leave 400,000 shares still in the treasury. It will be the aim of the Directors to maintain and keep as large a treasury balance as possible in both money and stock available to meet at all times any and all contingencies that may arise and thus effectually safeguarding the interests of all shareholders.

This is your opportunity to make good in the great oil industry of California. If you have $100.00 to invest it will pay to investigate this proposition. If you have $5000.00 you cannot afford to overlook it. Write us at once, for Illustrated Prospectus, which will give you full particulars of this sterling investment, which will be mailed to you without obligation or any expense on your part.

Toronto, March 1st, 1912.

W. H. HILL, ESQ.,
Manager,
Sun Life Assurance Co.,
Peterborough, Ont.

Dear Sir,—I wish to thank the Sun Life Assurance Company, through you, for the prompt and very satisfactory settlement of my 15 year Endowment Policy, No. 64345, which matured and was paid me to-day.

I have also a 15 year Endowment maturing to-day in another leading Company.

The contrast, in the results, in favor of your Company is so marked that I want you to know it, but I am at a loss to know how such a difference could honestly occur. When I tell you that the profits in your Company are three and one-third times the profits in the other Company referred to, and this too notwithstanding I paid the other Company $1.15 per year more per $1000 than I paid you, you will realize my inability to comprehend the cause.

This is surely a tribute to the management of the Sun Life, and I am so well pleased I have applied for further insurance with you.

Incidentally, I would like to say a word for your loan privilege. As you are aware, I borrowed some money on my policy, a little over a year ago, which enabled me to obtain a substantial interest in a town site in the Northwest, and you will be pleased to learn that it has already yielded substantial gain and gives promise to pay hundreds per cent., so that it is impossible to fully realize the value of that Policy to me.

I thought as an old Peterborough boy you would be pleased to know I am delighted with the result.

Yours truly,
(Signed) ROBERT E. DOLAN.

FIRST LORD OF THE ADMIRALTY SUGGESTS GERMANY AND ENGLAND TAKE HOLIDAY IN NAVY BUILDING

TORONTO BOARD OF TRADE TO ASK RAILWAYS TO HURRY COAL

Railroads Claim They Have Not a Sufficient Number of Engines to Haul the Freigt Trains

In Event of Coal Strike in United States Much of Coal Consigned to Canada Would be Confiscated

Mr. Marshall Predicts That a Compromise Will Almost Certainly be Effected With Anthracite Miners

Toronto, Mar. 18.—With a view to inducing the railways to use more effort to move the large quantity of coal for Canada held up in transit, Mr. Noel Marshall, of the Standard Fuel Company, conferred with Mr. G. T. Somers, President of the Board of Trade, this afternoon. He urged that in consideration of the seriousness of the situation now and the inevitable trouble that will ensue in Toronto if a strike should occur, the Board of Trade use its influence with the railways to have them transfer engines from other branches of the service or devise some other means for the purpose of bringing in at once as much of the coal as possible.

MUCH WOULD BE SEIZED.

In the event of a coal strike in the United States there is no doubt that much of the coal for Canada now being held up in transit will be seized by the railroads for operating purposes. The roads claim their right to do this under the contract to carry His Majesty's mails. Whether they have such a right or not is perhaps a question as to the fact that they have the coal on their sidings and that they have seized it before when there has been trouble. They simply take the coal and when all the trouble is over they settle with the party to whom it was shipped, for what the coal cost him ignoring the profit sacrificed and the loss of business sustained.

IMMENSE QUANTITY HELD UP.

An immense quantity of coal is now being held up across the border causing great inconvenience to dealers and to manufacturers here who not unreasonably, are inclined to think that the railways are not making any effort to move it, anticipating a strike and the subsequent commandeering of it for their own use. The railways claim that they cannot move the coal any faster owing to scarcity of locomotives. Much of it they claim got stalled in bad weather. They are bringing in comparatively small amounts over Saturday and Sunday which is undoubtedly taken up and a sort of famine exists for the rest of the week.

MR. MARSHALL PREDICTS COMPROMISE.

Mr. Marshall told President Somers of his visit last week to the big coal centres in the United States, upon which Canada is entirely dependent for its supply. He is inclined to think that a compromise will be effected with the anthracite miners, but that the soft coal men will probably walk out and there will be a suspension of product during April and May. Very little coal is now coming into Canada from the United States.

THE PLAIN TRUTH

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the eloquent advocate of provincial rights when he saddled Separate Schools on the Western Provinces, turned coercionist and Bourassa was permitted to draw those clauses in the autonomy bills which deprived the two prairie States of their constitutional right to formulate their own educational policies. Mr. Bourassa now rages because Mr. Borden has refused to let him insert a similar dual school clause in the Manitoba boundary bill. Yet not a single Liberal newspaper in Toronto or Ontario, so far as we have seen, says The News, has had the grace or decency, or the honesty to admit that Mr. Borden has stood by the constitution while Sir Wilfrid Laurier has played the part of the renegade and the trickster.

OUTLAWS WIFE DIES FIGHTING FOR HUSBAND

Hillsville, Va., March 18.—The death toll in the Carroll county court house tragedy, in which the judge, prosecutor and sheriff were slain and several persons wounded, has reached five. Mrs. Sidna Allen, wife of one of the outlaw chiefs who perpetrated the outrage, was shot to death in a pitched battle to-day while trying to defend her husband from the attack by the posse on their mountain home. The fifth death was that of Nancy Ayres, 19 years old, who was wounded during the shooting in the court house.

Sidna Allen is wounded dangerously and his brother, Floyd, the sentenced prisoner, is in a serious condition from bullet wounds.

STRIKERS BLOCK STREETS IN RUSH

Lawrence, March 17—With the streets blocked by returning workers, who have spent their first day for more than eight weeks at the long-neglected looms and spindles, and with a general disposition on both sides not to let matters of detail stand in the way of a complete resumption of work Monday morning all over the city, the end of the great Lawrence strike may be confidently announced. An unexpected concession tonight on the part of the Everett mill, which has been portrayed at nearly every strike meeting as the most unyielding and stubborn one outside the American Woolen group, gives a fitting close to the work of conciliation. The action of the Everett management is particularly important, as it will bring back to work the large majority of the Poles.

POLICE CHARGED WITH BRUTALITY

New Orleans, La., March 18.—Corporal John Mahen and Patrolman Joseph Hadley, both of whom are charged in the First City Criminal Court by George M. Coogan with assulting and beating him a week or ten days ago in the saloon of John Favaloro in Tulane avenue, will be called for trial before Judge Fisher Wednesday, March 19th.

Influence is said to have been brought to bear on behalf of the two policemen. Corporal Mahen is a nephew of Senior Captain John P. Boyle. Witnesses in the case swore before First Recorder Fogarty that the attack and assault upon Mr. Coogan was outrageous and brutal.

TORONTO TEAM HAD THEIR FIRST BALL PRACTICE AT MACON, GA.

Macon, Ga., Mar. 18.—The Toronto ball team arrived here to-day about noon, Macon time, which is an hour earlier than Toronto time. The team was thirty hours on the train coming from Washington, and most of the players were thoroughly tired out after the long trip. Bradley, Shaw, Meyers and Bachman arrived here from the west.

The weather here to-day is like midsummer in Toronto, with straw hats and shirts sleeves in evidence on every street. The Leafs just struck here at the right time, however, as previous to Saturday it rained here for forty days and forty nights. The ball grounds are in good shape notwithstanding the storms.

ST. PATRICK WAS REMEMBERED

Successful Concert by T.A.S. in the Grand Opera House Last Evening.

THE T.A.S., of Peterborough, have always been noted for their success of dramatic, athletic or social affairs, originated under their auspices. The Grand Opera House last night, specially arranged to suit the society's comfort and display, by the enterprise of Messrs. J. J. Turner & Sons, was crowded to its fullest capacity. That venerable Saint, St. Patrick, is a synonym for yearly celebration and Ireland's history by sons of Erin.

The large audience at the Opera House last night had to thank the T.A.S. for their splendidly rendered comedy, in three acts, entitled "The Four Leafed Shamrock."

The following were the dramatic personnel:

Mr. O'Gorman of Gormansboro'—John McCabe—(An Irish Landlord in Reduced Circumstances).

Lord Kilgavan, alias Joseph—Hopkins—Gerald McFadden.

Hugh Dyllwyn—Vince McCabe.

Mrs. O'Gorman—Lillian Simons.

Rose O'Gorman—Carrie White.

Miss Petbury Tattleton—Emma Derocher—(A Literary Lady).

Molly McDonnell—Annie Simons—(An Old Servant).

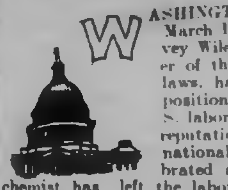
Mick Maloney—Ed. Hanrahan.

A short synopsis of the play is this. The first scene opens in an old mansion at Gormansboro. Then the players appear in a garden at the same place. In act three, the scene changes to a turret room in Gormansboro. Those in the cast brought forth sighs of regret, if not tears in certain portions of the play, while in the real action, the comedy part, roars of laughter awarded those clever local comedians.

In addition to the play, a brilliant "entre-actes" vaudeville performance was given, as follows: Philharmonic Quartette—Messrs. B. New, Lee, Cairns and Albert New; "Where the River Shannon Flows" Little Misses Milloy; Minstrell Boy, Ed. Hanrahan; "Ireland, I Love You" Gertrude Clancy; Dancing, Messrs. Juinlin and Callahan; "Rory Darling," Joe Clancy; "Burglar and Child," Miss G. Delaire and Mr. Ed. Hanrahan. Musical Directress, Miss Doherty.

DR. WILEY QUITS HIS OFFICE

Celebrated Chemist Leaves the U.S. Health Laboratories Because Blocked.



WASHINGTON, D. C., March 17.—Dr. Harvey Wiley, the father of the pure food laws, has quit his position at the U. S. laboratories. His reputation is international. This celebrated analyst and chemist has left the laboratories at Washington, D. C., where for nearly 20 years he had been chief chemist, no longer a government official, but determined to champion the cause of pure food from the ranks of the people. Friction with his superiors and irreconcilable differences of opinion as to the enforcement of the pure food and drugs act, were the reasons given by Dr. Wiley for handing his resignation to Secretary Wilson of the Department of Agriculture. Dr. Wiley will devote the remainder of his life, according to a statement issued by him, to the "promotion of the principles of civic righteousness and industrial integrity which underlie the food and drugs act.

DR. BOUCHER'S FUNERAL WAS HELD YESTERDAY

Largely Attended and Great Display of Floral Emblems.

Yesterday afternoon a long and solemn cortege followed the last mortal remains of the late Dr. R. P. Boucher to their last resting place in Little Lake Cemetery. Shortly before one o'clock long lines of hacks and other conveyances gathered in the vicinity of the deceased, their number, and the personality of the occupants testifying to the high esteem in which Dr. Boucher was held. The floral emblems, from church, profession and clubs were numerous and exceptionally beautiful. At one o'clock a service was held in the Brock street residence. Ven. Arch-Deacon Warren, formerly of Lakefield, but now of Toronto officiated. At two o'clock a solemn funeral service under the impressive rights of the English Church was held. The bearers were Doctors Halliday, Eastwood, McCullough, Messrs. Geo. W. Hatton, R. E. Wood and J. A. Aylmer. On conclusion of the church service with the deep toned big bell of the church tolling, the long procession wended its way to the cemetery where the final rites of interment were observed. More than one of those present showed signs of deep emotion as the chimes of St. John's pealed out that grand old English hymn "Days and Moments Quickly Flying, etc."

BOURASSA ON HIND LEGS ROARS AT THIS PROVINCE

Montreal, Que., Mar. 18.—"No politics, purely a patriotic discourse on the building of a United Canada—Such is the promise of Mr. Henri Bourassa for his speech in Massey Hall before the Ancient Order of Hibernians in celebration of St. Patrick's day.

The famous Nationalist leader denied the story that he intended to give up politics, was silent on the leadership of the new Catholic party, strongly advocated the teaching of religion in schools, and issued a warning on the likelihood of Ontario driving Quebec to Annexation.

SEPARATE SCHOOLS.

"Religion, it is admitted," said Mr. Bourassa, in referring to Separate Schools, "is at the root of morality and good citizenship. Education with religious instruction is not education at all. So that if Canadian schools are to accomplish the best for the country, the Catholics must have their institutions in which the children are taught what their parents believe to be the creed for them; and Protestants should have also their schools conducted on a like basis. In Quebec and Nova Scotia Separate Schools exist, and in these two Provinces Catholics and Protestants get along without the slightest discord, mutually respecting and aiding one another towards good citizenship.

JESUITS ESTATES.

"In Quebec the Protestant minority is treated with the utmost consideration by the Catholic majority and the Government.

"Take for instance, the late Premier Mercier's settlement of the Jesuits Estate.

"PROVINCIAL" ONTARIO.

"The trouble with the people of Ontario is their ignorance of the French language. In Quebec—Montreal especially—the French read the English as well as the French newspapers; but the Ontario people do not."

DECLARES GOVERNMENT CONTROL OF COAL IS REALLY SOCIALISTIC

Toronto, Mar. 18.—"The suggestion that the Government assume control is nonsensical. To place the mines under the Government is to bring them under the sway of the Socialism which seethes in the Post Office administration."

These statements were uttered by Sir William Bull, M.P., for Hammersmith, in the British Parliament, in the course of an interview with The News this morning. Sir William, who is one of the best known London solicitors, and founder of the society of Knights Bachelor, accompanied by Mr. Willoughby Bullock, the secretary, is the guest of Sir Henry Pellatt, the president, for a few days.

THE REAL CAUSE.

"The real cause of the coal strike in Britain is not appreciated,— he continued. "It is not a quarrel of masters and men, but of system. The mining to-day is done by 'piece' work, which is carried out in the following manner."

"The mine owners lets the contract for a section of the work to a collier. He is paid by the colliery for all the coal which is brought to the pit's brow. The immense amount of shale and dirt yields him no profit.

"The miner in turn employs six or seven men, usually relatives, to do the sections of the ground. These men he pays what he likes.

ASQUITH ASKS PARLIAMENT TO RUSH THROUGH COAL BILL

London, Mar. 18.—Premier Asquith announced in the House of Commons to-day that the Government would introduce a minimum wages bill for miners to-morrow. He will ask the House to read it a second time on Wednesday and complete the remaining stages on Thursday.

The Premier said the bill would provide for the payment of a minimum wage to persons employed underground and would include the arrangements incidental to that measure. In the opinion of the Government the passage of the bill by Thursday was imperative in order that the House of Lords might consider it on Friday and the Royal assent be given to the Act on Saturday.

RAILWAYS HAUL COAL IN ON SUNDAY FOR ONTARIO POINTS

Toronto, Mar. 18.—Stimulated to effort by the outcries of coal companies and manufacturers against tardiness in handling coal, and nettled by charges of purposed piracy, the railways yesterday made a special attempt to relieve the local coal situation. "We have got everything back to normal," a Grand Trunk freight official explained. "In the last 24 hours, from midnight Saturday to midnight Sunday, we have moved 35 trains of 1,050 cars of coal out of Fort Erie, and 700 cars or ten or twelve trains out of Black Rock. We have enough power there now to clear up the situation. Every available engine is being used. We have 27 engines standing at the American boundary now waiting for cars to be turned over to them by the American railroads. Half the coal delivered is for Toronto, and the balance for points throughout Ontario."

WINSTON SPENCER CHURCHILL IN STRAIGHT TALK TO THE GERMANS

London, Mar. 18.—Winston Spencer Churchill, First Lord of the Admiralty, to-day introduced the naval estimates for the coming year in the House of Commons. The appropriations called for amount to $229,427,000, a decrease of $1,535,000.

The First Lord accompanied the introduction with a straight talk to Germany promising an augumentation or a retardation of British naval construction to correspond with Germany's naval programme. He said he regretted the necessity of referring specially to Germany, but continued. "The Germans are a people of robust minds whose strong masculine good sense and high courage do not recoil from and are not offended by plain blunt statements of fact if they are expressed with courtesy and sincerity."

Mr. Churchill then went on to tell of the conditions under which naval competition would be carried on during the next few years, prefacing his remarks by the statement that the "two to one" standard was not necessary at present, although it would possibly become so.

ITALIAN BOMB THROWN KILLS ARABS OF TURKISH ARMY

Benghazi, Tripoli, Mar. 18.—The bombs dropped from an aeroplane belonging to the Italian expeditionary forces caused the death of ten Arabs in a Turkish camp some distance from this city to-day.

The aeroplane driven by an army airman and carrying an officer as passenger, left the Italian camp early in the morning and flew at a considerable altitude into the desert where a strong Turkish and Arab encampment was found in a well sheltered position.

Before the aeroplane was noticed by the enemy the Italian officer had made valuable observations. Then some of the Arabs opened fire, to which the Italian aeronauts replied by dropping several bombs with a deadly accuracy which exploded in the middle of a group of Arabs. Ten men fell dead and several Arabs were seen to be wounded as they hurriedly scattered.

The aeroplane then returned to the Italian Camp.

GUELPH CHURCHES ARE AGAINST UNION

Guelph, March 16. At St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church the pastor, Rev. H. E. Abraham, has announced the result of voting on Church union. The vote of the people of St. Andrew's was decidedly against the union, but there is apparently a lot of indifference being manifest as only about fifty per cent. of those entitled to vote did so. The ballot submitted to the Presbyterians is slightly different to that of the Methodists.

PEACE RIVER COUNTRY

Situated at the west end of Lesser Slave Lake controlling the entrance to the rich and fertile Lands of the great Peace River District. This is not a subdivision of a proposed townsite but part of an established town, first settlement and distributing centre of the Peace River Country

"I can forsee a very great future for Grouard"—a statement made by a party recently returned from there.

Farm lands and farming made Winnipeg, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Brandon, so you can imagine the future for GROUARD with forty million acres of the richest farm lands in the world behind it. The Peace River Country, at no great distant date, will be the home of a million prosperous farmers. Think of the business that will be done at GROUARD—the entrance and distributing center situated as it will be with rail and steamboat transportation. Hundreds of settlers are now going into the rich districts around GROUARD, now outfitting, trading and buying goods at GROUARD.

Read all of This Page

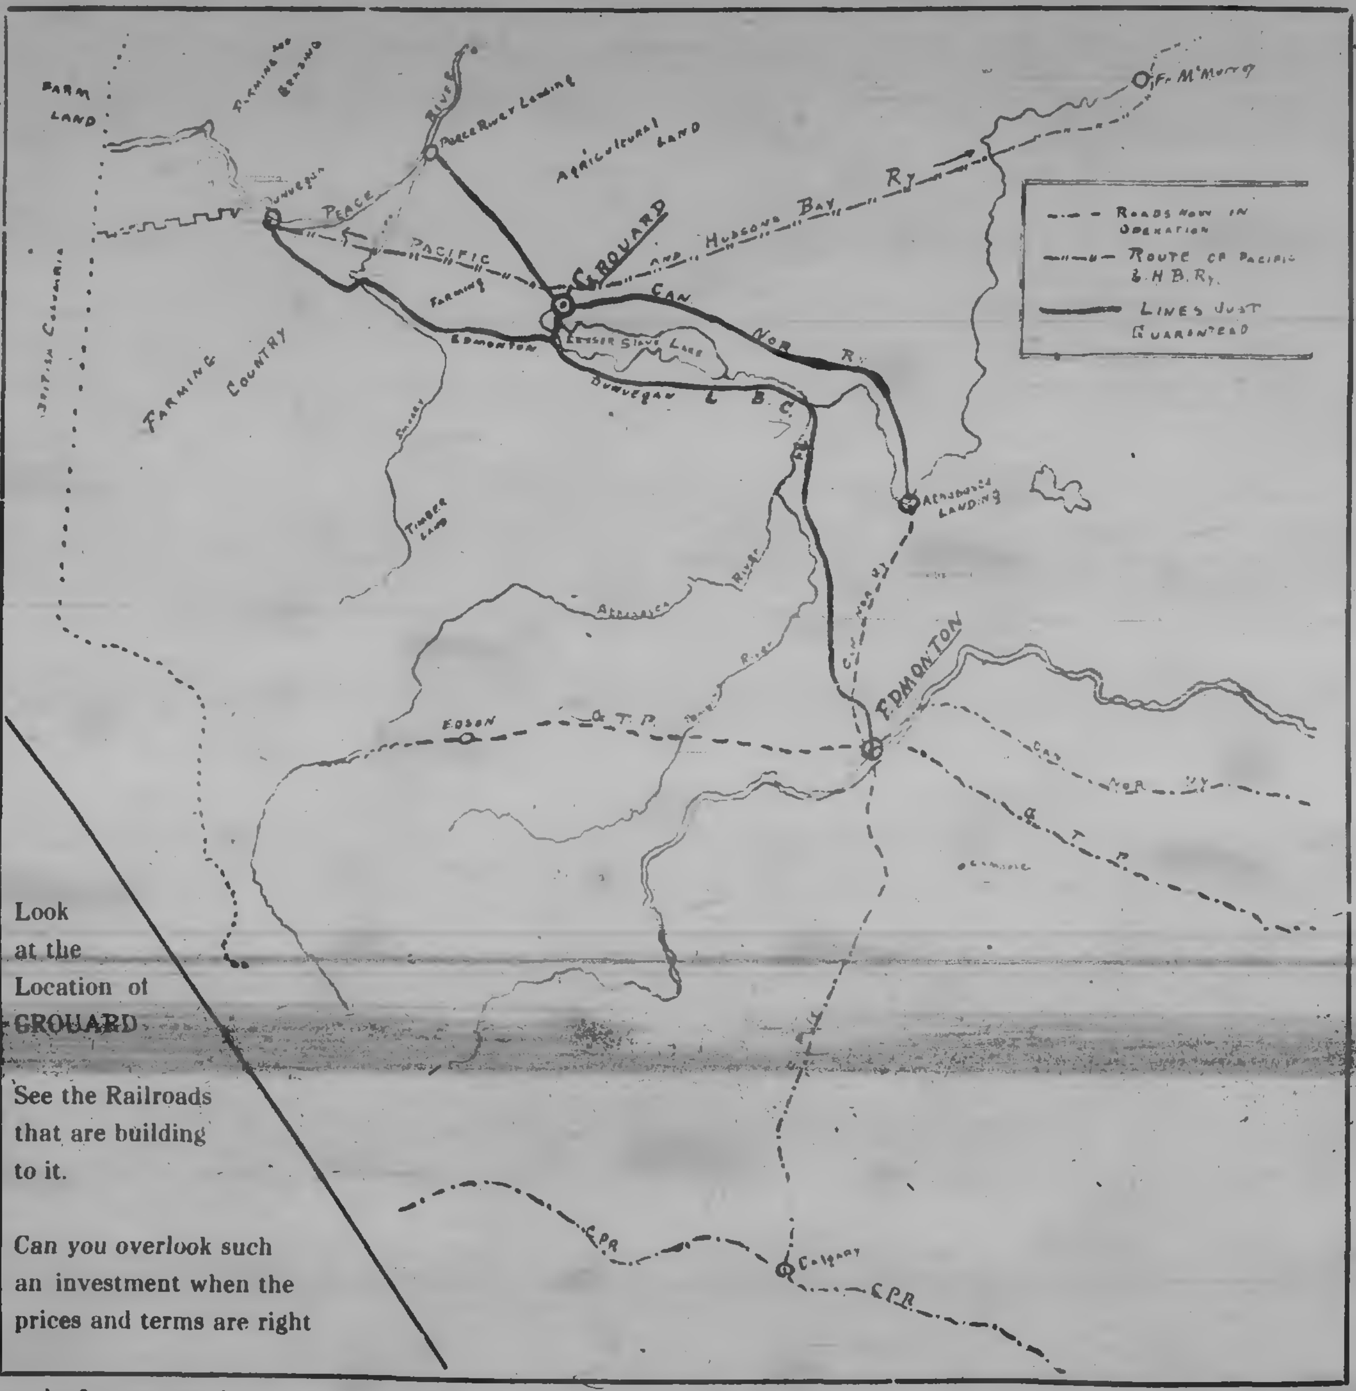
GROUARD is the place for the business man, capitalist, professional man, investor or farmer.

This is not a proposed townsite, but an established town of years standing.

Now that the Wonderful Peace River farming country has become the most prominent feature of the present time, and the settlers are pouring into that district, GROUARD has attained an importance as to location and possibilities never before attained by any town.

GROUARD IS ESTABLISHED—has a post office, stores, churches, government telegraph, telephone system, weather bureau, doctors, shops, saw mill, government land office for the far [illegible] Peace River district, general stores of the Hudson's Bay Company, and the large firm of Revillon Bros., the Peace River Trading and Land Company, also the Bank of Commerce and Royal Bank have established branches there, with other banks to follow. You know banks do not go into a town, city or country where there is no business, or where the business will not increase. Follow the banks and you can never lose.

BUY LOTS IN GROUARD and WATCH THEM ADVANCE IN VALUE



Look at the Location of GROUARD

See the Railroads that are building to it.

Can you overlook such an investment when the prices and terms are right

GROUARD is the natural gateway to the Peace River country, containing 40,000,000 acres of good agricultural land.

GROUARD will be the trade distributing point for all the country of which it holds the key position.

GROUARD is the natural shipping point for the great cattle trade that will accrue to this Peace River country.

GROUARD is rich in the surrounding varied natural resources, and its property fulfils every requirement for safe and profitable investment.

GROUARD is the head of a waterway of approximately 3,000 miles of lake and river transportation.

GROUARD is so important that three railroads are heading towards it and building is being done as fast as man can do it.

GROUARD is so important that banks have already established there, and more are making ready to follow.

GROUARD has as its foundation the products and revenue that will accrue from millions of acres of the best agricultural land in Canada.

GROUARD will "stand up" under the most rigid investigation as to its resources and possibilities.

GROUARD is backed up by "THE GOLD MEDAL WHEAT DISTRICT OF THE WORLD.

GROUARD will be larger in a couple of years than most of the townsites that have been placed on the market for the last ten years, because it has something substantial behind it.

GROUARD is what we say it is and more too.

GROUARD is the place you cannot afford to overlook in your investments, and it will make money for you.

YOU are now having placed before you the first opportunity to invest in THE City of the Peace River District, backed up by the greatest area of the best agricultural land in Canada.

Three railways are heading towards Grouard. What other new towns or cities can point to such transportation advantages right at the start as this? Think of it: three railroads, making this a divisional point, also water transportation. Would these roads build there if Grouard was not going to be one of the most important points in Western Canada? This fact alone is sufficient to convince you this investment is one of merit.

The Canadian Northern Railway is already at Athabasca Landing east of Grouard and property bought at that point a year ago for from $100 to $300 per lot is now selling at from $1000 to $1500 per lot.

Government Guarantee Railroads Great Railroads make Great Cities

That is an accepted fact—it is indisputable. The whole history of America proves it. Now, the man who thinks of making an investment, if he is shrewd and far-seeing and anxious to safeguard his money in every way possible, will consider, not only the activity to be caused by the railway, but will consider the surrounding country, what it is, and what it will produce. Look at the key map above, and trace the Canadian Northern Railway from Edmonton to Athabasca Landing and ON TO GOURARD. This is one of the lines that is now being built. The road is already in operation to Athabasca Landing and construction from there west to Grouard is uder way. The Alberta Government within the last three weeks GUARANTEED THE NECESSARY BONDS FOR THE CONSTRUCTION of this road, thus making it absolute, and under such guarantee, must be in operation within a certain time.

LOOK AGAIN, and trace the line of the Edmonton-Dunvegan and British Columbia Railway. You will see Grouard on its line. The bonds for the construction of this line WERE ALSO GUARANTEED within the last three weeks, by the Alberta Government. Construction is now starting, and goes on with all possible speed. This line connects with the Grand Trunk Pacific at Edmonton.

Would the Government guarantee bonds for the construction of these railways if the country they were entering was not good? Would they go to Grouard if it was not important?

Railway Terminous on This Property

Again, trace the line of the Pacific and Hudsons Bay Railway which runs from the Pacific Coast in British Columbia, directly east to Fort Churchill on the Hudsons Bay. This road is being built by English capital. You will see this road runs through Grouard, and further the owners of this property have entered into an agreement with this railway, turning over to it some fifty acres of the property we are offering you, and the railway company have agreed to make their Grouard terminals consisting of station, freight sheds, and all other buildings, yards, etc., right on this property. This ensures the terminals for Grouard of the Pacific and Hudsons Bay railway right on our property.

Further, the main street of this commercial centre property runs down to the deep water frontage of the Lake, which is the head of an immense water transportation mileage, and we are turning over to the Town of Grouard sufficient water frontage for municipal owned docks and wharves.

Lots that sold in Athabasca Landing (look on map) a year ago at $200 to $350 are now being sold to-day from $1000 to $1500 each. Why? Because the railroad has just reached there, and they are wanted; the same thing will occur in Grouard shortly.

Your success in life, if you are a working man, depends largely on how you save and invest the few pennies, that you now throw away carelessly; if you are an employer how you invest your dividends, your surplus money.

Trace back the real big fortunes of this or any other country and you'll find they started from real estate. The wealth of the country to-day is real estate.

Land—the "backbone of to-day's business. The land or property owner is the king among men. If you are tired of working on the dead level "get-no-where" of city life, if you are held down by the man "higher-up" or if you have surplus money to invest buy property; become an owner of real estate in a growing community, in a place where the property is and will be wanted for business purposes, and above all in a city or town backed up by an agricultural district and the railroads.

We offer you the opportunity. Save 17 or 30c a day, make your first step towards independence—a protection for your family, a sound investment.

We know that every lot in Grouard will be taken up in sixty days. Our sub-division is not large. Is part of the town.

We are sure if you knew what we know about Grouard and the Peace River Country you would not hesitate a single minute.

You are dealing with the right kind of people; ask the Quebec Bank at Vancouver, or the Bank of Hamilton, Winnipeg, or Bradstreets who we are. YOU ARE DEALING WITH A CLEAN CUT PROPOSITION. Ask the Board of Trade at Grouard, or the Managers of the Bank of Commerce, or Royal Bank at Grouard what it is.

You have read this bulletin, we have told you the story, it is now entirely up to you.

Are you going to let 17 or 30c a day stand between you and success.

Be an owner of property in Canada's coming great Peace River City.

Act to-day.

MAKING BREAD IN MANY WAYS

A Few of the Numerous Methods By Which It Is Manufactured

In visiting [illegible] I was struck with the primitive ovens built behind [illegible] of the houses in small towns, says [illegible] [illegible]. They were like large beehives, built of clay; they were evidently solid up to the sole, then had the arched roof over, with a door at one side. They are heated with [illegible] of [illegible] and [illegible].

In some places we find holes dug in the earth and lined with stones in which a fire is kept burning until sufficient heat is raised, the bread being then put in and a stone [illegible] the opening with a fire on it to keep up the cooking heat.

In these [illegible] South Sea Islanders [illegible] fruit, yams and [illegible] less they [illegible] well. In [illegible] is put into [illegible] small mouth [illegible] cakes of bread [illegible] side of the [illegible].

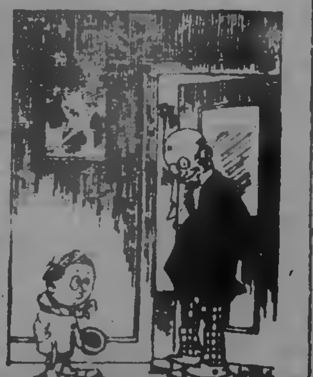
Then [illegible] girdle, so much used in old Scotch houses on which [illegible] and oatcakes are baked. [illegible] employed in Scandinavia for baking the universal [illegible] and it is also in use in many other countries in various shapes.

In Cornwall the old kettle style of oven is still used for home baking, the dough being laid on the hot hearthstone with a large round iron pot inverted over it. Fire outside of this keeps up the [illegible] heat and the [illegible] [illegible] is very good [illegible] even if it is a little [illegible] sometimes.

[illegible] of baking [illegible] used [illegible] Austrian [illegible] covers it [illegible] still a [illegible] [illegible] or ad. and the variety [illegible] for this end goes to [illegible] [illegible] of the [illegible] bakehouses with [illegible] to have been in [illegible] for hundreds of years and [illegible] of them are still [illegible].

THE BISHOP'S TEA PARTY.

A story is told of the practical resourcefulness of the late Bishop Wordsworth of Salisbury. An unexpectedly large party came to an "at home" at the Palace, and a crush was feared round the tea tables if all made a rush for them at once. His Lordship grasped the situation, and prevented one hundred squeezing into a room suitable for thirty by saying during a pause in the conversation: "Will all ladies over forty kindly go down to the tea room?" A limited number responded.



A BIG ONE.

Kid—Gee, Doc, this boil is as big as a half dollar now.

Dr. Doyle—Don't worry over a little thing like that. I had one last week that was three times as big as that.

Kid—What! As big as a dollar and fifty cents?

STILL BETTER.

They were discussing the things which help a man to obtain success in the world, when one young man said:

"There's nothing like force of character. Now, there's Jones, he's sure to make his way in the world. He's a will of his own, you know."

"But Brown has something better in his favor," argued his friend.

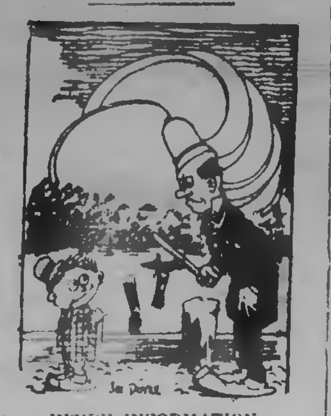
"What's that?"

"A will of his uncle's."

Youthful Dreams.

First tramp: "Strange how few of our youthful dreams ever come true, ain't it?"

Second tramp: "Oh, I don't know. I remember how I once yearned to wear long trousers. Now, I guess, I wear them longer than almost anybody in the country."



INSIDE INFORMATION.

Kid—Say, copper, there's a guy out there pullin' up the river in a row boat!

EPSOM SALTS.

Thackeray and Montalembert were at the Derby. The distinguished Frenchman noticed on the course several men dressed as sailors, but who were not the genuine article.

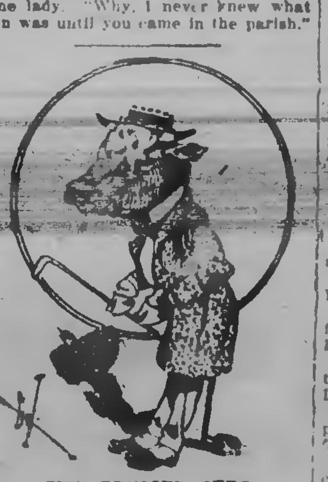
"Ah," said Montalembert, "these, I suppose, are some of what you call your British tars?"

"No," said Thackeray, promptly, "they are only Epsom salts."

A Doubtful Compliment.

The new vicar had preached his first sermon, and was receiving the congratulations of his parishioners.

"I consider it was manificent," said one lady. "Why, I never knew what sin was until you came in the parish."



CITY DRESSED BEEF.

SARCASM.

A gentlmen tells of a recent experience while motoring, illustrating the sarcasm which a woman is capable of when occasion demands.

"We were going along at an awful speed," he said. "I didn't see the dog but I heard his 'Ki-yi,' so I ordered the chaffeur to stop. Going back, we found an irate lady standing over her dead dog, one of the ugliest brutes you ever saw. She met us with a tirade of remarks, telling us in no uncertain terms what she thought of us and motorists in general, finishing up by calling us the murderers of her dog. It was then I thought I would pacify her."

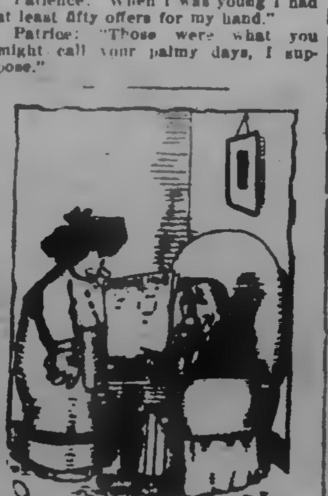
"Madam," I said, "I will replace your dog."

"Sir," she said, in a freezing tone of voice, "you flatter yourself!"

Named.

Patience: "When I was young I had at least fifty offers for my hand."

Patrice: "Those were what you might call your palmy days, I suppose."



NEVER HIS LUCK.

Mr. Suffrage—I see where a burglar shot a man whose life was saved by the bullet striking against a button of his clothes!

Mrs. Suffrage—Well, what of that?

Mr. Suffrage—What of that? Oh, nothing, except that the button must have been sewed on.

THE OLDEST FLAG

The flag of Denmark, a plain red banner bearing on it a white cross, is the oldest flag now in existence. For 300 years both Norway and Sweden were united with Denmark under this flag. In the year 1219 King Waldemar of Denmark, when leading his troops to battle against the Livonians, saw, or thought he saw, a bright light in the form of a cross in the sky. He held this appearance to be a promise of Divine aid, and pressed forward to victory. From this time he had the cross placed on the flag of his country, and called it the Dannebork—that is, strength of Denmark.

FOR ASSISTANCE OF EMIGRANTS

British Society That Will Advance Part of Necessary Funds—Matrimonial Bureau

New impetus to emigration from Britain to her overseas dominions has been provided by the Empire Emigration Society, an undertaking organized to assist those who wish to emigrate but are unable to do so for lack of funds. Lord Ridley and Lord Stanhurst are actively interested in this society and act as trustees of its funds. Not the ill nourished and poverty stricken but the able bodied with some savings to their credit are the class of emigrant to whom chances are being offered. Soon after it was established, the Empire Emigration Society had over 1,500 people on its books with $10,000 at their disposal, who were anxious to save the balance in order to win through to hoped for prosperity in Canada, Australia or New Zealand.

The intending emigrants have to open an account with the Society with a minimum deposit of four dollars. Each subsequent payment must not be less than one dollar. As soon as the depositor has paid in half the necessary amount his passage is booked and arrangements made to supply him with employment when he arrives at his destination. Every class of worker is dealt with, and steps are taken to help emigrants to follow their own callings overseas. Typical of the variety of applicants in touch with the Society are four cases the secretary selected at random. A nurse, who desires to go to British Columbia has enough money to pay her passage, but is in need of advice as to the best means of going; a stonemason, who means to emigrate as soon as he can raise sufficient funds and who has paid a first instalment of seven dollars; a widow, who is an expert dressmaker, and hopes to have saved enough by the end of June to go out to Canada; a doctor with some capital who wants to know of a colony where he may practice his profession and at the same time give his two sons a start in farming.

The Duke of Marlborough recently gave a broad hint to the surplus women of England to go to the dominions beyond the seas where men were waiting for wives. Said the Duke: "There are a million more women than men in England, and there are a million more men than there are women in the dominions." So, indirectly, the Empire Emigration Society is playing the part of marriage bureau for Canadian bachelors, and domestic helps all over the country are becoming infected with the travel fever after dreaming of more congenial careers in new lands.

Been in Every Prison.

Abraham Lincoln was exceedingly astonished one day as he was inspecting a prison at Washington, by a prisoner exclaiming:—

"How are you, Mr. President? I am glad to see you. I believe that you and I have been in every gaol in the Union."

"This and the gaol at Springfield are the only ones I was ever in in my life," replied Lincoln.

"Very likely," responded the "gaol-bird," "but I've been in all the rest."

POTATOES THAT HUSTLE

Planted on June 7th, Ready for Digging on August 27th.

The Ontario Colonization Bureau has received a letter from one of their new settlers at Cochrane, 433 miles north of Toronto, with a beautiful basket of potatoes, which were shown at the National Exhibition. The land was cleared on June 1st of this year, the seed planted on June 7th, and the crop dug on August 27th.

ADVERTISE IN THE TIMES.

A GROTESQUE OFFERTORY

Mengo Cathedral, in Uganda, which was recently destroyed by lightning, was probably the largest edifice in Central Africa, being capable of containing nearly 5,000 people. It was consecrated about six years ago, and an offertory of grotesquely varied gifts was collected on the occasion. This consisted of 13 cows, four goats, 125 eggs, 130 fowls, 75,000 cowrie shells, and a number of coins. The cows, for lack of room, were not taken inside the Cathedral, but the goats were led up to the altar and presented to the bishop, while the fowls were brought in big bamboo crates.

MELANCHOLY IN FLOWERS

Curious, indeed, the doom assigned to two of the fairest of the spring flowers, for if primroses are forsaken the violet is a nun. Perhaps this atmosphere of gentle melancholy increases the affection inspired by these favorite flowers which seem dearer far to human kind than such rivals as the brilliant marsh marigold and the dangerous aconite.—Black and White.

DAIRY HINTS

A cow should be at her best from five to seven years of age.

Harsh treatment, dogging and abuse invariably decreases the milk supply.

Whey pasteurized or fresh is worth seven cents per one hundred pounds as a food.

There is not a first-class cheese or a pound of fine butter made from inferior milk.

Milking with wet hands is a menace to good health, and milk can never be kept clean.

Stagnant water or filth of any kind in the pasture or vicinity of stables will taint the milk.

Too high temperature causes the butter to come in lumps of a soft nature instead of in form granular kernels.

There is no reason why farm butter should not be as [illegible] as the best creamery butter if made under right conditions.

Pure milk can be obtained only through healthy cows, pure feed, pure water, pure air, and sanitary methods of handling.

A coating of whitewash on the stable walls is of inestimable value to the health of the cows and the purity of the milk supply.

A silo is absolutely necessary to the economic production of milk on a large scale. Thousands of successful dairymen have proved this. It is no longer an experiment.

Salt should always be available to cows. [illegible] increases the digestibility of [illegible] food, the amount of water consumed [illegible] hence the flow of milk is increased also.—Canadian Farm.

How to Be Miserable

If you wish to be miserable, think about yourself, about what you want, what you like, what respect people ought to pay you; and then to you nothing will be pure. You will spoil everything you touch, you will make misery for yourself out of everything which God sends you; you will be as wretched as you choose.—Charles Kingsley.

LUNCH-ROOMS FOR WOMEN

Lunch-rooms for women employes are rapidly growing in popularity in every up-to-date factory. A short time ago this was looked upon as an unnecessary luxury, but the progressive employer of to-day realizes the advantage gained by considering the comfort and health of his employes, and a bright, clean lunch-room is a stimulus to a [illegible] standard of service and [illegible].

THIN, FRAIL WOMEN WITH PALE CHEEKS

NOW RAPIDLY LEARNING THE WAY TO HEALTH AND VIGOR BY THE USE OF DR. HAMILTON'S PILLS.

Thousands of half-dead, emaciated, worn-out women are dragging out their weary lives simply because they don't know what ails them. Nine times in ten it's indigestion, which directly leads to anaemia, poor circulation, and eventually invalidism.

The first step towards relief is to flush out all wastes and unhealthy matter. Loosen the bowels—stir up the liver—stimulate the kidneys. Once this is done, Dr. Hamilton's Pills will quickly manifest their health-restoring qualities.

"The best way to correct impaired digestion, to cure constipation, headache, liver trouble, and other ailments of the stomach and bowels," writes Mrs. Uriah A. Dempsey, from Woodstock, "is by the frequent use of Dr. Hamilton's Pills. I didn't know what it was to enjoy a good meal for months. My stomach was sour, I belched gas, was thin, tired, pale, and nervous. I simply housecleaned my system with Dr. Hamilton's Pills, and have been robust and vigorous ever since."

To keep the machinery of the body in active working order, no remedy is so efficient, so mild, so curative as Dr. Hamilton's Pills—good for men, women and children, 25c. per box, at all dealers, or the Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Ont.

THE MORNING TIMES

TUESDAY, MARCH 19, 1912.

PRICES ARE STILL SOARING.

The Department of Labor's wholesale prices record up to date shows a still higher level for February than for January, notwithstanding that the latter month was reported as having seen the highest prices since 1893 and [illegible] since 1873. The index number rose during February from [illegible] to 131.3, these being percentages of the average level of prices during the last decade of the last century. The upward movement was largely the result of advances in grains, animals and meats, dairy products and potatoes. Retail prices were also upward, especially in the food products derived from the lines above mentioned.

CROCKER LAND DISCOVERY.

There is a general disposition to accept Peary's account of his discovery [illegible] of the North Pole; and there is a general belief that by this time the South Pole has been discovered by one of the expeditions that set out for that purpose. This leaves only about one great Arctic or Antarctic region to be explored, and that is Crocker Land, an island far to the north of Canada, and only a few degrees south of the pole. It is true that Crocker Land has been sighted, but it has never been explored. Even its coast line is unknown, and its interior is represented on the maps as a blank space. In a few months two of the men who were with Peary will sail from Sydney, bound for Crocker Land, which they hope to map some time next Spring. Several American scientific bodies are raising funds for the purpose, and since the party will be a small one, and will require no such outfit as Peary found necessary, it is probable that sufficient funds will be raised. At any rate, preparations are now going forward, and the explorers have already gathered together much of their outfit.

George Borup and Donald B. McMillan will be the leaders of the expedition. They were with Peary, and admit that the lure of the north has seized them. They are young, able-bodied, enthusiastic men, and while realizing that they will have to undergo hardships on the journey and perhaps risk their lives a score of times they appear to look forward to the trip as though it were a holiday jaunt with a picnic basket at the other end of it. They will take a surgeon along with them and another man or two. The last stages of the journey will be made by dog train over the ice, and when Crocker Land is reached the party may divide in order to cover more ground in the few weeks that will be left for exploration. Then there will be a race back over the frozen sea to reach the camp at Cape Hubbard on the mainland. From this point the retreat will be down a great river that divides Grant Land from Axel and Heiberg Land to Bache's Peninsula. Here the ship will be awaiting them, and they will return to civilization with their spoil.

Servants are becoming so particular nowadays, writes Rosaline in Black and White, that when a certain mistress asked her departing cook if she had got a good place to go to, it was not wholly surprising that the latter should reply: "Oh, yes. Invest your savings in Winnipeg Real Estate. Do you know that nine-tenths of the wealth of Winnipeg is based on the increase of its real estate values? Do you realize that Winnipeg has only begun to really grow? Do you realize that any person investing in Winnipeg real estate during the past few years simply couldn't lose, so tremendous and widespread has been the increase in values, the result of the city's growth. Do you realize that as an Industrial city, Winnipeg's importance is just born—begun with the completion of her magnificent 60,000 horse power hydro-electric plant.

You Can Get Into The Winnipeg Situation

We are offering for the first time—simultaneously in Winnipeg and in Eastern Canada, lots in the new home-maker's subdivision in North-East Winnipeg.

Oakland Park

Oakland Park is located east of the Red River, beyond the present north limits of the city of Winnipeg. It is about half way between the city limits and the line which, it is stated, the Canadian Pacific Railway will build across the north of the city to relieve the terrible freight congestion now confronting them. Whether that line is built or not, North-east Winnipeg is now and will be the industrial part of the City; and Oakland Park will be the location par excellence for the homes of the better class of the future industrial army of Winnipeg.

East Kildonan, in which Oakland Park is located, is the beauty spot of Winnipeg. Just opposite Oakland Park is Fraser's Grove, a park of magnificent river bank trees that has been famous since the days of Indian councils on Red River. This whole district is to-day dotted with handsome, comfortable, inviting modern homes, and is noted for the finest gardens of western Canada.

$4.00 TO $14.00 PER FOOT

is the price at which lots in Oakland Park, Winnipeg, may now be purchased. This price cannot be duplicated in Winnipeg, for quality of offering. Oakland is within three and one-half miles of the city hall. It is in the line of fastest growth. It is only one or two years from incorporation in the city limits. These lots, that are now offered at from $100 to $350 each, depending upon location, will be worth, in my opinion, based upon ten years' experience as a successful real estate operator in Winnipeg, more than double this price in two years' time.

"I chew Wrigley's SPEARMINT" said the banker, "because it helps digestion."

"I chew it after smoking," said the lawyer, "because it purifies my breath—prevents heartburn."

"I chew it," said the dentist, "because it cleanses my teeth and prevents decay."

"I chew it," said the doctor, "because it sharpens appetite and makes food tasty."

"I chew it," said the teacher, "because it relaxes my nerves—helps me think."

"I chew it," said the urchin, "because I like it—and that's enough for me!"

Millions chew SPEARMINT because it is refreshing—but they benefit just the same.

KEEP THE PIGS DRY

Guard Against Dampness From the Very Beginning

Pigs are animals that, as a class are subject to rheumatism and similar troubles, and if you are going to be a successful pig-keeper you must guard against dampness from the very start especially with the bedding arrangements.

Straw—barley straw in particular—makes capital bedding; and dry bracken, dried grass from the hedges, and similar material may be used. I will assume, of course, that the floor of the sleeping apartment of your sty is of brick, sloped for drainage, and that a warm bed of some kind is provided for the animals. From time to time as it is dirtied this bedding must be changed, and it is a good plan to place it in the forecourt of the sty—if any—till it has become part of the muck, which you will remove for manurial purposes as necessary.

And if dry quarters are necessary with adult sows and pigs, how much more so is this the case with the youngsters! At birth they should have clean, sweet straw provided, not in great quantities, or they may be unwittingly lain upon by their mother, or else smothered, but sufficient for dryness and warmth. Then, during their infancy the quantity may be gradually increased till the usual allowance is arrived at. Needless to say, the straw bedding should be changed almost daily at first, and this is especially the case with a large litter in a somewhat cramped sty.

A LIMITED COLLECTION

They tell in London a story of an elderly lady who, while sight-seeing, visited Westminster Abbey. After going about for some time with an air of eager curiosity, she approached a verger. "I wonder if you can help me?" she asked, hopefully. "I am looking for the grave of King Edward II."

"Sorry, ma'am," said the verger, apologetically, "but we 'aven't got Edward II."

"But," protested the visitor, "I understood that the Abbey was the burial place of kings."

"So it is, ma'am, in a way," returned the verger, "but we only 'ave the odd numbers 'ere."

APATHETIC RATEPAYERS

An official return shows that at the recent London guardians elections only 21.8 per cent. of the ratepayers entitled to vote took the trouble to go to the poll.

A design for a new penny postage stamp, which can be divided into two halfpenny stamps, has been submitted to the Post Office authorities by a well-known Nottingham resident.

CALGARY

The City Of Opportunity

Capitol Hill

One of Calgary's close-in residential sub-divisions. City water is now in the adjoining divisions and sewer system is to be installed this spring. We expect these improvements in Capitol Hill this summer. Street car service is at present within two or three blocks of Capitol Hill. The City of Calgary has purchased Block 68, Capitol Hill, on which to build a large public school. A number of nice homes have already been built in Capitol Hill, and many more are in course of construction.

Lots in this sub-division are selling in pairs at $250 to $350 per lot. We offer you one block of forty lots, close to Block 68 at $210 per lot, on terms of Third Cash and Balance four, eight and twelve months, with interest at 8 per cent. on deferred payments. This block will readily sell for $300 per lot, or more, within the next six months. The block is high and level, and every lot is perfect. This is a gilt-edged investment. If you cannot handle it alone have some friend join you.

FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE STORY

The London correspondent of the Manchester Guardian says:—A new and characteristic story of Florence Nightingale reaches me. She was a great admirer of Harriet Martineau, but Miss Martineau's inclination towards Atheism was a cause of regret and grief to her. When the news came of the authoress's death in unbelief, and friends, shocked and stern, were making remarks about her sad end and her lost soul, Florence Nightingale smiled as she said, "How glorious must have been her surprise when she woke in Paradise to find she had been mistaken."

ADVERTISE IN THE TIMES

Just the same.

They had been quarreling, and were indulging in bitter recriminations. "You can't say I ever ran after you" sobbed the woman.

"True," the man assented. "And you can't say the trap ever runs after the mouse either, but it gathers him in just the same."

HOW TO WALK ON WATER.

Sir Joseph Ward, the Premier of New Zealand, who went to London to attend the Imperial Conference and the Coronation, tells the story of a Maori "witch doctor." The man claimed that he was able to walk upon water, and one day a group of his followers went with him to a lake in order that they might see him perform the miracle. When they reached the water's edge, the "witch doctor" turned to those about him. "Do you all believe that I can walk on the water?" he demanded, in solemn tones.

"Yes, yes," was the reverent answer, "we do believe."

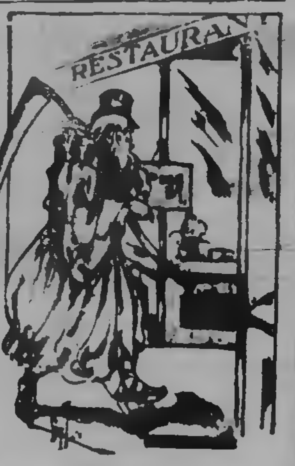
"Then," was the calm reply, "there is no need for me to do it," and walked away.

This reminds us of an interrupter at one of Dr. Torrey's meetings, asking him whether he could walk on water. "I can walk on water," said the famous evangelist, "better than my friend can walk on whisky."

PRICE WAS TOO HIGH

Efforts on the part of an English breeder to purchase the stallion Knight of the Thistle from his owner, R. H. McC. Potter of New Jersey, have been defeated by the price asked. The English breeder offered $700 for the horse, but Mr. Potter asks $12,000. As sire of Worth, the best 2-year-old of 1911, Knight of the Thistle has become desirable. It was upon Knight of the Thistle that Charles F. Dwyer won $50,000 in one bet when that horse won the Kampton Park Jubilee Handicap in England in 1899.

Leonard Bliss, said to be the largest man in the world was frozen to death at Bloomington, Illinois, where he was born on Mar. 4, 1866. His dimensions were: Height, 6 ft. 4 in.; waist, 72 in.; hips, 66 in.; weight, 640 lbs.



TIME TO EAT.

SO IT MIGHT.

An Irishman was coming home from work one pay night when he passed an excavation where some workmen were blasting. Just as the Irishman passed a blast came and one of his hands were blown off. The workmen quickly gathered about and began to sympathize with him while waiting for the ambulance.

"That sure is a shame," said one of them.

"Oh, well," answered Pat, philosophically, smiling in spite of his pain, "it might have been worse."

"How's that?" asked the man.

"It might have been the hand with my wages in."

Natural Cure for Catarrh Obviates Taking Drugs

IT HAS SUPERSEDED THE OLD-FASHIONED STOMACH-DOSING REMEDIES, AND INVARIABLY CURES QUICKLY.

It was their inability to reach the real source of catarrh and bronchitis that caused the medical profession to drop liquid cough medicines and adopt "Catarrhozone" instead. Catarrhozone provides a method of breathing right into the lungs certain rare medicinal vapors which are so healing and comforting as to entirely banish coughs, catarrh and throat trouble in a very short time.

The most wonderful thing about Catarrhozone is, that no matter where the germs of bronchitis or catarrh are hidden, Catarrhozone will reach and destroy them.

"About five years ago I took a cold in the head and Catarrh set in. It kept increasing by leaps and bounds. I kept putting off getting anything until at last I found I would have to. After trying several things I heard of your remedy, Catarrhozone, and procured a bottle and began using it. I was not long in finding out I had struck the right thing. I am recommending Catarrhozone to all who have catarrh, etc.

"(Signed) Everton L. Wasson,
"Blair P.O., Queen's Co., N.B."

Catarrhozone has made an astonishing record of cures. Its method is right; no drugs; just healing balsamic vapors, that bring instant relief to Catarrh and all throat, bronchial and chest colds. Get the large size, lasts months, is sure to cure

WHEN WOMAN WINS.

'Twas in the year 2011, and the intrepid general was rallying her wavering female troops.

"Women," she cried, "will you give way to manly fears."

A timid murmur ran through the ranks.

"Shall it be said we are clothed in male armour?" shrieked the leader.

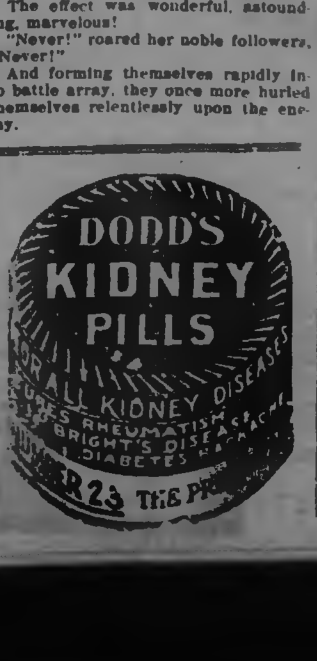
The murmur grew more confused.

"Will you," came the taunting cry from their galant general, "show the white feather at this time of the year, when feathers are out of fashion?"

The effect was wonderful, astounding, marvelous!

"Never!" roared her noble followers, "Never!"

And forming themselves rapidly into battle array, they once more hurled themselves relentlessly upon the enemy.



RAISE MORE HORSES

George B. Hulme Says There is Money in This Industry

When George B. Hulme, the noted horse judge, was in Winnipeg recently placing the ribbons on choice animals in many of the horse classes, says The Farmers' Advocate, he took advantage of an opportunity at the stock luncheon to tell farmers of the Canadian West that they should go in extensively for raising horses of all kinds, including army remounts. "In Western Canada," he said, "you have the best climate in the world, and an abundance of food and water that the horse wants."

This is just what many others who are in a position to speak with authority have said. Feed can be produced in abundance at low cost; for the most part the water is satisfactory; the climate is such that with reasonable care horse flesh is developed to perfection.

In spite of these facts, it is remarkable how few farmers really try to raise enough horses to increase their annual cash returns. Some will not be bothered with colts around the place; others consider that there is a chance that after they have paid the stallion service fee the foal will die. They have a sort of holy horror of anything that entails more risk than the growing of wheat. But there are men in the prairie provinces who are making money from breeding mares of the proper type—and they are becoming more numerous year by year. They have realized that it should not be necessary to bring thousands of dray and farm horses from the East every year. They have found out that there is profit in a horse at three or four years when he can be exchanged for cash totalling almost as many hundred dollars.

The horse raising industry is worth considering.

WINTERING FARM HORSES

How to Keep Idle Horses Cheaply in the Winter

There are three or four methods of wintering farm horses. Some turn out the idle horse and let them "rustle," some winter them in protected yards and others winter in the stable. Horses that will not be required to work from freeze-up in the fall till seeding begins in spring can be wintered as well outside as in, and more cheaply. If given a protected yard, into which a liberal supply of oat straw has been blown, they will come through the winter in as good shape or better than horses that have been closely confined and fed liberally on grain. An idle horse given plenty of good straw, some prairie hay, a few oat sheaves and water can be wintered in the yard at a minimum cost in labor and feed. Nature provides a heavy coat of hair, so the horse does not suffer any from the cold. [illegible] all the straw and rough fodder they will eat. Oat is the best straw. Corn stalks are an excellent feed for horses thus wintered. With oat straw and some hay no grain is required. Six weeks before spring work opens, light grain feeding should begin.

Colts may be wintered in the same way, but it is preferable to stable the weanling the first winter. Two colts in a box stall are company for each other, and if fed the usual rough fodder ration, and what oats they will clean up, do better than foals that rustle in the yard.—Farmers' Advocate.

CELERY HAS RUST

There will likely be a shortage in the celery crop this year. The recent storms have brought with them a rust known by growers as a celery disease, and it is playing havoc with the celery. Local growers claim that it was brought by the storms of the past month or so. The first sign noticeable is when the leaves turn red in spots. This gradually spreads over the leaves until they wither and decay. Then it strikes the roots of the celery and the root and stalks rot and die. Local dealers say that growers throughout the whole country are being bothered.—St. Thomas Journal.

FINE HORSES FOR CANADA

Nearly 1,000 horses have made the transatlantic voyage to the St. Lawrence this year. Mostly Hackneys and Clydesdales, the animals are to be distributed in a dozen different cities and towns throughout the Dominion. Mr. Robert Ness, of Howick, is the owner of twelve of the animals. Forty-four of the ponies are going to Mr. Sinton, of Regina, while Mr. Bogue is taking fifteen more to the West. All are bred from high-grade British stock and their coming will be welcomed by horsemen throughout Canada.

ORIGIN OF "GO TO BLAZES"

When Mr. Bodkin applied for the Bishop Blaize public-house, England, to be closed, he remarked to the chairman (Mr. R. Wallace, K.C.): "You may have heard of the ejaculation: 'Go to blazes!'"

"Yes" answered Mr. Wallace, "I think I have."

"Well," said Mr. Bodkin, "the origin of the expression is what the Bench seem to think it is. There was a Bishop Blaize and when anyone wanted advice it was the custom to say, 'Go to Blaizes.'" (Laughter.)

A GROTESQUE OFFERTORY

Mengo Cathedral, in Uganda, which was recently destroyed by lightning, was probably the largest edifice of Central Africa, being capable of containing nearly 5,000 people. It was consecrated about six years ago and an offertory of grotesquely [illegible] gifts was collected on the occasion. This consisted of 13 cows, [illegible] goats, 125 eggs, 130 fowls, 75 [illegible] cowrie shells, and a number of [illegible]. The cows, for lack of room, [illegible] not taken inside the Cathedral, but the goats were led up to the altar and presented to the bishop, while the fowls were brought in big bamboo crates.

VEGETABLES AND CHARACTER

According to a French doctor, the potato develops in the eater an evenness of temper and calmness of thought. The carrot acts as a stimulant to the character, and is recommended for biliousness and to peevish or jealous persons. Spinach develops ambitious dreams and energy. Peas, we can understand, are not calculated to help serious thought, and the cauliflower induces egotism.

Stack of Old Horseshoes

A unique sight is to be seen at Upper Studley, near Trowbrige, where Mr. James Jennings, the well-known steam roundabouts proprietor, has a huge stack of old horse-shoes which he has collected during the past two years. It stands 17 feet high, is 10 feet through, weighs about 150 tons, and could not be purchased for $2,000. The shoe stack attracts great attention, particularly from touring motorists, who frequently stop to examine the curious pile.

"Oh, yes," remarked Mr. Nooriche easily, "the United States is a great place! I've been all over 'em—New York, 'Frisco, Philadelphy, Rocky Mountains—oh, yes!"

The guests were very much impressed.

"Wonderful range of mountains, that!" continued Mr. Nooriche complacently.

"Indeed?" queried the guests politely.

"Ay, indeed! I went for a tour on that range once. Used to roll myself in a blanket and sleep in the open. But the most remarkable thing about it is the echo. Would you believe it, when I went to bed of an evening, I had only to yell out 'Time to get up!' at the top of my voice, and the echo would wake me next morning!"

"Oh, Nooriche! You shameless old sinner!"

A Toronto paper says: "The strike of oil at Milton which was made a couple of weeks ago is causing great excitement." Peterborough, some months ago had a somewhat similar excitement. Still, a citizen crossing the country in any direction, does not stumble over many derricks or run the risk of falling into an oil tank. Some twenty years ago this city had a spasm of excitement over a silver mine supposed to be located in Frontenac County. The name of the mine was "Myers Cave" ! ! The Times recalls the absolute fact that two local citizens, presumably sane, got out of their respective beds at 4 a.m. to catch a man leaving on the early train for Toronto. To this man they paid $250 for his one share in "Myers Cave Mine." They may still have the can-

One Hundred and Sixty Athletes and Their Friends Leave on Steamer

Difficulties have arisen in connection with the sending of the 160 German champions who are to enter the lists for the Fatherland at the Olympian Games to be held in Stockholm. When the agent of the German Athletic Union went lately to the Swedish capital, he could find only sixty bedrooms available for the champions, with a charge of $2.50 a day for bed and breakfast, $2.50 for other meals and the necessity, moreover, of sleeping two and three in a room. Under the circumstances the Union hit upon the happy idea of chartering a steamer and converting it into an hotel which can also be used to lodge part of the three thousand German guests who, it is estimated, wil attend the sports. The 160 German champions will be all clad alike in yachting blue, with a blue cap sporting the Imperial colors. The Germans are very confident of carrying off no small share of the prizes, though they regret not having followed Norway's example, which has engaged a trainer at a half-year's salary of $5,000.

ARMED AIRSHIPS

An Inventor Devises a New Weapon for Aviators

Many well-known people in England have signed a protest organised by the International Arbitration League against the use of airships in war. Among other things the protest says:

"We appeal to all Governments to foster by every means in their power an international understanding which shall preserve the world from what will add a new hideousness to the present hideousness of warfare.

"Without universal agreement, no single Power can stay its hand: every day of ingenuity and every pound of money spent diminishes the chance for such agreement.

"The occasion is unique. The civilised world is now alive to the ghastliness and economic waste of war; the Hague Conference is an established fact. For the first time, in the face of a new development of the arts of fighting, nations possess both the conscience and the machinery necessary to check that development effectually.

"All civilisation protests its desire for peace and goodwill; protests its wish to reduce the already grievous burden of armaments. Unless its protestations be those of a hopeless hypocrite, it cannot stand and watch the conquest of the air, that most glorious of men's mechanical achievements, callously turned to the usages of destruction; it cannot idly acquiesce in a new departure that must heavily increase this burden of armaments."

As if to lend force to the protest comes the news that the French War Office is examining and will probably adopt a new bullet for use in war time by aviators. It is a kind of round steel pencil, about six inches in length, with a conical tip. The other end of it carries a little device in the form of a cross, which causes the bullet to fall perpendicularly.

These projectiles can be thrown by handfuls from an aeroplane passing over a body of troops, and the damage they would do is enormous.

ACTRESS AND LIONESS

A young actress, Mlle. Julienne Leesauche, had a terrible experience at Rouen in a cage containing two lionesses. She insisted on entering with the man who went to feed the animals. Hardly had she crossed the threshold when one of the lionesses sprang at her, felling her to the ground. The lioness began to claw the young woman's head and shoulders. With a struggle the actress got her arm free and the lion tamer drove the animal into a corner. Mlle. Lescauche was taken to hospital in a serious condition.

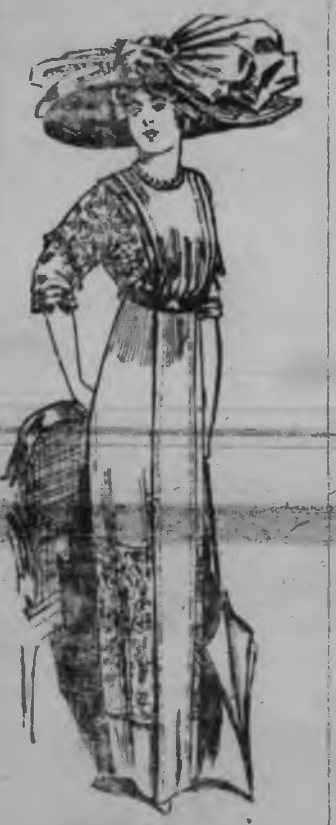
OUTPOSTS OF THE HOME

It is one of the most elemental principles of warfare that a body of soldiers who are encamped or resting shall be protected from surprise by means of outposts. Outposts are small bodies of men detached and pushed forward to keep watch. On the approach of an enemy they immediately give the alarm, and, unless otherwise ordered, do their best to hold the enemy at bay until the whole camp has had time to get under arms.

This is a principle that might well be applied to our everyday lives. In the great campaign that is waged daily in millions of homes, with [illegible] and happiness as the prize of victory, every household is like a camp, with outposts to be carefully guarded, lest there should penetrate ill-humor, jealousy, temper, selfishness, or any other of the host of enemies that surround it, watchful and eager to step in and work havoc with the [illegible] and happiness of the family. So long as all these deadly foes are kept well at a distance, they will have but little opportunity of doing harm, but once let them get to close quarters, as it were, and there is no knowing what disaster may result. The worst might happen, and the happiness of the home be wrecked.

Each of us, then, is responsible for the safety of his or her own particular portion of the home camp. So long as each one keeps the fierce foes of jealousy, strife, irritability and selfishness out of his own soul, he is doing his duty nobly and well.

Watch yourself. Keep strict sentry-go on your own temper, and as soon as you detect in yourself the slightest leaning towards grumbling, discontent, jealousy, or ill-humor, take strong measures to repel it. Don't let the enemy through, or it may be fatal to the happiness of your home. If you find you have not the strength to drive them away yourself, "alarm the camp," get your family to help you crush in yourself these disturbing tendencies. Don't be afraid to talk about your faults. "Open confession is good for the soul." Keep out the enemy at all costs!



A SMART STREET COSTUME

The model here shown is of old blue pongee and linen lace dyed to match. The combination is very rich and distinctive in style. The sleeves and edge of the jacket and lower edge of the band of lace on the skirt are bordered with a narrow band of blue silk and finished with silk grelots in a shade of blue to match.

The hat is a graceful shape of black crin, trimmed with large flat loops of soft silk in old blue, and a wreath of pink roses.

A WOMAN ON WOMEN

A woman can say "No" and stick to it for a time. She can also say "No" in such a way that it means "Yes." She can sharpen a lead pencil if you give her plenty of time, and pencils. She can walk half the night with a noisy baby in her arms without once complaining. She can appreciate a kiss from her husband seventy-five years after the marriage ceremony has taken place; suffer any abuse and neglect for years which one touch of kindness or consideration will drive from her recollection. A woman can do almost anything or everything, and do it well. She can make the alleged lords of creation bow down to her own sweet will, and they will never know it. Moreover, she can tell when a man is in love with her before he knows it himself.

A SEWING-MACHINE WRINKLE

A hand sewing-machine is often very apt to slip about on the table. To obviate this, all that is necessary is to place a couple of the old-fashioned gelatine lozenges, slightly moistened, under each corner of the base board. In a few seconds the machine will be found to adhere to the table and equal a stand-machine in firmness.

Baked Roly-Poly

One pound of flour, half a pound of dripping, four ounces of currants, a cupful of syrup, one teaspoonful of baking-powder. Rub the dripping into the flour, add the baking-powder, and mix to a stiff dough with a little cold water. Roll out, spread [illegible] over, and scatter the currants on [illegible] Roll up like a roly-poly, and bake in a moderate oven for about an hour. When half done brush over with milk. It gives the pudding a nicer appearance. This is a very economical pudding for a large family, and a nice change from a boiled one.

Judging by the report of the supplementary estimates, it would be dangerous for a Peterborough marksman to fire off a gun in Ottawa. He would likely kill or wound some kind of private secretary.

Practical Dairyman, a paper with a self explanatory title, gives pictures of cows that have given as high as ten thousand, eight hundred pounds of milk. And still milk in this city sells at 7 cents, and butter at any old price

HOME HINTS

Useful Facts for the Thrifty Canadian Housewife

To clean a "fishy" frying-pan, fill with cold water, and place on the fire to boil. When boiling, put a red-hot cinder in, and then wash in the usual way.

Clothes in the Kitchen

Clothes should never hang in the kitchen longer than is necessary for airing them, for unpleasant odors of cooking will get into them, and cannot be got rid of without washing.

A Wise Precaution

Before taking a house, no matter of what size, have the drainage thoroughly inspected by the local inspector. It will not cost you very much, but you may save a doctor's bill, as typhoid and diphtheria often result through neglect of this precaution.

Kitchen Cupboards

Get two or three orange boxes with partitions, stand them on end, side by side, and nail them together. On the top put a piece of thick oil-cloth. This makes a good shelf on which to stand pots and pans, and on the shelves beneath many things can be stored.

To Wash a Knitted Coat

Put the coat into an old pillow-case, and dip it into warm soapsuds. Squeeze, but do not rub, until all dirt disappears; then rinse in several clean, luke-warm waters to get out all the soap. Squeeze out some of the water, and lay the coat in the sun to dry.

Stair Cleaning

When sweeping stairs, every housewife knows the trouble it is to get the dust out of the corners. If triangular-shaped pieces of wood are cut and fixed into the corners, a great deal of time may be saved when cleaning, as dust cannot get in. The pieces of wood should be painted to match the stairs.

A Cake-Making Secret

The secret of making good cakes is to mix them with as little moisture as possible, and have the dough firm and stiff. Large cakes need a moderate oven; small ones do better in a brisk one; and when they have risen the heat must be slackened off, so that the interior of the cake may be thoroughly done.

An Economical Stew

Cut one pound and a half of shin of beef into small pieces, dip each piece into flour, pepper and salt, and put into a stewing jar. Fill up with chopped vegetables, the greater variety the better; do not add any water. Put on the cover, tie it over with greased paper, and set the jar in a moderate oven for about six hours.

Flat Cake

When you are making bread, save a pound of dough; work into it two ounces of lard, the same of currants, and an ounce of sugar. Knead all together, and form into a flat cake upon an old plate. Score across the top, and bake for three-quarters of an hour. Ten minutes before the cake is done brush it over with milk, and scatter brown sugar over it. This is a very inexpensive cake for tea.

Cocoa Blanc Mange

Mix together one tablespoonful of cocoa, three tablespoonfuls of cornflour, and two tablespoonfuls of castor sugar. Stir these gradually into a quart of cold milk, put into an enamelled saucepan, and boil for a quarter of an hour, stirring all the time. As soon as it begins to thicken take the saucepan off the fire, and beat the mixture thoroughly; then let it simmer only. Pour into a wet mould to set.

Hints for the Laundry

Articles that have been put away rough dried, when required again are often extremely tiresome to iron, owing to the difficulty of getting them properly damped. If, however, they are well sprinkled, rolled up tightly, wrapped in a damp cloth, and then in a newspaper, and placed for a few minutes in a cool oven with the door open, the heat will cause the steam to rise through the material, and thoroughly soften it, and the articles can then be ironed with perfect ease.

BRAINS IN DUPLICATE

Facts About the Curious Working of Your Thinking Faculties

[illegible] ever thought of how your [illegible]? Most people imagine that [illegible] brains work as a whole, but modern science says this is not so. The newest theory is that the brain is for all the world like a big department store. When ribbons are wanted it is only the ribbon department that is concerned. Similarly your brain has innumerable tiny niches, corresponding to your various accomplishments and branches of knowledge, from billiard playing to reading French. When you start to study a foreign language, or a musical instrument, you are literally carving a new niche in your brain.

The brain is like a big department store in another way—a store supplied with water pipes running to each department. In the brain these are represented by a maze of tiny arteries carrying blood. Just as the water-pipes on one particular floor might burst and ruin the goods in that department alone, so if the walls of an artery in the brain are weakened by poisoned blood, the blood may burst through and ruin that particular niche. Many a man has risen in the morning to find that he has, say, forgotten how to read. Or if the damage is less wide, he may have forgotten how to read his own language, and still be able to read any other language he knows. This might also happen as the result of an accident. You might lose the use of a small part of your brain, and yet have the rest of your faculties intact.

Even in the niches there are fine sub-divisions. The various parts of speech, for instance, are arranged in a language niche like books on a shelf. And just as the books on a shelf may be squeezed so tight that none of them will come out, so a tumor on a language shelf may jam all the grammatical parts of speech so that the patient is dumb. It is known that on that shelf the verbs are placed first, the pronouns next, the prepositions and adverbs next, and the nouns last.

The reason is that our verbs are the things we learn first, long before nouns. A baby sees long before it knows it sees. The nouns that we learn last, and so forget soonest, are people's names. That is why old people have such bad memories for names.

Everybody, it is now known, has two brains. They sit side by side, and are exactly alike, but while the niches in one are crammed with various sorts of knowledge, those in the other are blank and empty. A right-handed man thinks with the left side of his brain, a left-handed man with the right. The only use each of us makes of our dummy brain is to control the movements of the opposite side of the body—the weaker side. It knows nothing. It learns nothing. You could have it cut away without lessening your mental power. Many a man has had this done.

Only a child can teach it. A man with his utterance niche ruined struggles in vain to use the reserve one. It is too old to be taught. But many a child has been struck dumb and has taught its other brain. It has [illegible] "Mamma" and "Dadda," even at the age of nine or ten.—Answers.

HOW TO TREAT A WIFE

A Scottish Judge's Remarks on This Subject

In a Glasgow divorce action the decision of the case, his Lordship said, depended on the standard of conduct on the part of a husband towards his wife which would entitle the wife to judicial separation. A husband was bound in law to treat his wife as a gentleman should, or to put it otherwise, reasonably, considerately, and sympathetically, with the result that if he failed to do so his wife could get judicial separation from him, then in this case it was clear that the pursuer would be entitled to the remedy she asked. From the first she was not treated with reasonable consideration. Instead of humoring her and making allowance for her and paying her special attention, the defendant seemed to have kept up his bachelor habits, with the result of mutual unhappiness, for which, although not without provoking language and unreasonable expectations and exactions on her part, he seemed to have been mainly responsible. But to succeed in her demand it was common ground that the pursuer must prove treatment on the part of the defender which had produced substantial injury to her health, mental or physical. His Lordship found no such evidence. He thought it right to add the hope that the parties would, in their own interests and for the sake of their child, now resolve to let bygones be bygones. Nothing had happened on either side, or on the part of the relatives of either party, to prevent the resumption of conjugal relations. Nothing was to be gained on either side by going further with the action.

Did Well in Prison

"Penal servitude must be a healthy state of things," remarked the Recorder of Birmingham to a prisoner, "or you would not look so well on it after thirty-six years of it." The man was ordered to be imprisoned for one day.

He Was Jilted

A man of 75, who sued a woman of 63 at Swaffham, Norfolk, for the return of $25 and some furniture, said that after he had entrusted the money and things to her, with the idea of getting married, she jilted him and married another.

A local citizen in the Times office Saturday, remarked, "Thank the Lord that the blizzard is over. I never saw anything at this time of the year to equal it!"

Whilst the average Peterborough citizen, who almost daily has to get out before breakfast with his snow shovel, and is sick of the Beautiful, there is a silver lining to every storm. This silver goes into the pockets of scores of men who would otherwise be without work! Cheer up!

FIRST BOXING RULES

Boxer Who Was Buried in Westminster Abbey

Few people are aware of the fact that a pugilist was buried in Westminster Abbey. In an article of much interest in "London Stories," it is stated that Jack Broughton, sometimes described as the founder of the British School of boxing, was buried in the West Cloister in 1789. Late in life Broughton became a Yeoman of the Guard, and the inscription on the wall [illegible] died Sept. 7, 1784, aged 59 years. Also of Mr. John Broughton, one of His Majesty's Ushers of the Yeomen of the Guard, died July 8, 1789, aged 86 years." The gravestone also has an inscription, but there is a blank between the name and the year. It is stated that but for the objection of the Dean this would have been filled with the words, "Champion of England."

Broughton was born in 1704, and was the first winner of Doggett's Coat and Badge. He made his first appearance as a pugilist at George Adam's famous booth at the Adam and Eve in Tottenham Court road. Later he set up an establishment of his own, and maintained his ascendency for many years, being eventually unexpectedly beaten by Slack in April, 1750, at Birmingham. Broughton made his own rules, which lasted from 1743 until 1838, when, after the contest between Owen Swift and Brighton Bill, the "New Rules of the Ring" came in. Broughton's rules are of more than ordinary interest, and were as follows:—

That a square of a yard be chalked in the middle of the stage; and every fresh set-to after a fall, or being parted from the rails, each second is to bring his man to the side of the square, and place him opposite to the other; and till they are fairly set-to at the lines, it shall not be lawful for the one to strike the other.

That, in order to prevent any disputes, the time a man lies after a fall, if the second does not bring his man to the side of the square, within the space of half a minute, he shall be deemed a beaten man.

That no champion be deemed beaten unless he falls coming up to the line in the limited time; or that his own second declares him beaten. No second is to be allowed to ask his man's adversary any questions or advise him not to give out.

That, to prevent disputes, in every main battle, the principal's shall, on the coming on the stage, choose from among the gentlemen present two umpires, who shall absolutely decide all disputes that may arise about the battle; and if the two umpires cannot agree, the said umpires to choose a third, who is to determine it.

That no person is to hit his adversary when he is down, or sieze him by the ham, the breeches, or any part below the waist; a man on his knees to be reckoned down.

VANCOUVER HARNESS RACING

Apparently the conduct of harness racing is satisfactory at the Vancouver Exhibition. They encourage it on the Pacific coast, while Toronto Exhibition has abandoned it entirely. All kinds of horses are provided for in the speed program at Vancouver and the list of stakes and purses totals twenty thousand dollars. Two stakes are of $3,000 and two of $2,000 each.

The weather probabilities for this section are possibly "rain, snow or a little more snow and snow to follow." This is not from the meterological office however.

An esteemed evening contemporary contains a suggestion from Mr. W. Bailey, in which the writer suggests taking the city garbage to the Police Station, and then, when the station is full, taking it to Rice Lake and sinking it.

THE WOODBINE

A $10.000 Plate With 100 Entries is Predicted ere Long

Entries for the King's Plate this year will probably run about the same in number as last year, but there is every reason to anticipate next season the beginning of an increase that will bring the number of nominations to a hundred before many years have passed. Now that two-year-old winners are eligible and the value of the Plate is mounting, and the position of the turf in Canada becoming unassailable, we may look for a $10,000 Plate, with a hundred entries. I have already come across several men who have no horses, but who are in the market for Province-bred yearlings, which they would race next season, and put in the Plate the following year. The value of horses foaled in Canada is bound to be vastly added to by the enlarged opportunities offered them. Coming back to the race to be run on the 18th of May—not far away, in spite of all the snow now on the ground—two owners who were not interested last year are likely to figure largely in the outcome. Up at Barrie the Dyment stable shelters four or five elegibles, from which Trainer John Nixon will probably make Heresy and Tropaeolium his choice. Either one would be good enough for most owners to have in the Plate. The other owner not altogether a new-comer to the guineas, but one whose first serious attempt is now being made, is Mr. Charles Crew of the Half-way House, on the Kingston Road. His jacket will be carried by the three-year-old filly Amberite, by Martimas-Lyddite. A full sister to Shimonese and Powderman, she is better furnished and more forward than either of these at the same age. Her work last fall was perhaps not as fast as anticipated, but it was not her limit, and she was always master of her workmate. The very useful Kilo, which won the Quebec King's Plate for Mr. Kenneth Dawes, and followed that up by a vitcory in a selling race from which he went to the Crew stable. One would expect to find Amberite in the Valley Farm stable, and the fact that she is not is one evidence of the bona fides of the annual public sales of the Valley Farm stock. The filly was bid up to $1,000 for the racing stable, which was, and is, quite distinct from breeding interest, and there Col. Hendrie stopped. That was the limit, but Charlie Crew was willing to go still higher. He bid 1,050, and became the owner of a very likely winner of a richer King's Plate than any yet run. It will not be an unpopular victory, you may be sure, if the King's uncle has this year to present the guineas to a man who had pluck enough to pay the record price for a Province-bred yearling—The Globe.

THE LACROSSE OUTLOOK

Some Healthy Rivalry Between the Eastern and Western Clubs

What lacrosse players will be seen at the Coast and in the big league in the East during the coming season is far from being definitely settled and will probably remain so until the period of the annual migration takes place. One fact remains, however, and that is that there will be some healthy rivalry between the Eastern and Coast clubs, and the league which flourishes the largest wallet will be the one to win out. Following the announcement that the Eastern clubs had decided on a salary limit came an awakener that this clause had been perpetrated more for a joke than for any other purpose and that the Eastern magnates would be as keen figures in the market as Con Jones or any of the other clubs at the Coast. All of which looks pretty soft for the player. However, the fact that there is to be a merry war is not to be disguised. With the Minto Cup in the possession of Con Jones, who spent thousands of dollars to bring it to this city, it is not to be expected that now that he has the cup in his possession he will let it slip away from him without a struggle. On the other hand, the East has been so long separated from this famous piece of jewelry that the clubs in that part of the country would go to almost any length to have it brought back again. All of which indicates that there will be a scramble for another fight for the pennant, champion team, and a fight in which the size of the bank-roll will be the deciding factor.—Saturday Sunset.

FLIGHT BETWEEN SPIRES

According to a telegram from Pau the aviator Vedrines, who has made many flights recently over Pau and the neighborhood, has just accomplished a daring feat in flying. He flew between the two spires of the church of St. Jacques which are only a distance of 42 ft. apart.

Blizzard Was Bad in Douro.

A well known farmer of Douro, remarked on Saturday in hearing of a Times reporter, "This week's storm is the worst I ever remember at this time of the year. When I went out to the barn on Friday morning, there was a drift in front of the doors, three feet high. I never saw the beat of it. I've been in that township for over forty years and I never saw such a blizzard in the middle of March."

HA! HA!

"Poor Jim the postman has got the sack."

"What for?"

"To carry his letters in, of course!"

A SOUND SLEEP.

A certain family were preparing to take their annual week's holiday with the exception of one son named John, who had to work during this particular week. His parents gave him strict instructions not to get too late for work, as he was a very sound sleeper.

The family had a fine time at the seaside, and got home again about 12 o'clock noon the following Saturday and were surprised to find the blinds drawn exactly as they had left them the Saturday previous. After a deal of knocking and hammering at the door, the bedroom window was slowly opened, and John, rubbing his eyes, called out

"Hello! What's up? Did you miss the train?"

ONLY FIVE OF THEM.

"How many stops has that melodeon you bought your daughter?"

"Five—breakfast, dinner, tea, supper and bed!"

TEA FOR TOMMY.

There was a sound of revelry by afternoon in the barrack-room, and it was quite evident that something had grievously offended the gallant sons of Mars. Presently the door was flung open and an officer entered.

"What is the meaning of this disgraceful noise?" he snapped.

And in reply the orderly handed him a basin.

"Would you mind tasting that, sir?" he said.

The officer did so.

"Why, you ungrateful lot of rascals!" he cried. "It strikes me you want something to growl about. I think this is very good soup, indeed; and if it's good enough for me——"

"Yes, sir; that's just it," interrupted the orderly. "They want to persuade us it's tea, sir!"

SORRY HE SPOKE.

He—Going for a walk? I hope I may accompany you?

She—Yes. The doctor says we must always walk with some object, and I suppose you will answer the purpose.

AN EXPERT WITNESS.

Time after time the counsel had tried to draw something important from the sea-faring man who stood in the box.

"You say your boat picked up the accused at nine o'clock," said the barrister wearily, but still determined to gain some ground.

"Now, it has been stated that he jumped overboard nearly an hour before that time. Tell me, Captain Bluffarty, how he appeared to you when you picked him up. If you had been asked to give an opinion of him then, what would you have said?"

There was a long pause. The captain looked thoughtful, then yawned, then stroked his beard.

"A-ah," he answered at long last. "Well, I'll tell you candid now. If somebody'd asked me then—just when we took him aboard—what I thought of him, I should have said straight out, insult or no insult, that he was one of the wettest men, if not the very wettest man, that ever I see'd. Fack, mister!"

Girl Injured at Local Factory.

Another of those regrettable accidents that seem to be part of the incidentals of factory life occurred at the Cordage Works, when Gertie, the 17 year old daughter, of Mr. George Brosseau, the Brock street barber, had her hand badly mutilated. The girl was working at a feeding machine. By some mischance the right hand was caught in a rapidly revolving chain. The palm of the hand was so badly cut that several stitches had to be inserted. Miss Brosseau was taken to St. Joseph's hospital, where she is doing well. No blame is attached to the Cordage Works, it was simply an accident.
